On its repetition the picture appears in the following form: For two-and-twenty bars (127 to 148) the warning voice thunders into the ears of the sinner more strenuously, more fearfully and perseveringly than before, but the more thoughtlessly rash Don Juan seems to have become, and the more inclined to disregard it. If there were no other reason, the general choice in this passage of new harmonies admitting of the employment of the strongest natural notes of the horns, trumpets, and drums proves the reflection of the great artist in his act of creation; for he must have thought thereon during the process of composition, unless one is willing to admit that he hit upon it by chance. But at length, as the voice ceases, it seems to have made some slight impression upon Don Juan, in spite of his efforts to resist it. (Bars 149 to 154.) Immediately, however, in the four following bars (155 to 158) he remembers himself, and strives hard to banish the strange feeling from his mind. "I will not" is repeated in each bar, and each time with increased force, just as the nature of such a feeling reveals itself in such a character. It is not possible to depict musically the angry and insolent rejection of an emotion arising against one's will more clearly and perceptibly than has here been done. Though he tries to repress this feeling, love of the pleasures of life, one of his principal traits, immediately manifests itself again (bars 159 and 160); and that he returns to his usual habits is apparent, not only from the two following bars (161 and 162), but also from the fact that in the repeat these two bars introduce a theme, of which explanation shall be given hereafter.

The third appearance of the picture being identical with its first, there is no need of further elucidation of its contents. An examination of its last repetition I leave for a more convenient opportunity, contenting myself in the meantime with the following remark: If the force of my explanation up to this point be admitted, it appears that Mozart devoted one part of the overture to the musical delineation of the two principal traits of the opera; viz., admonitions, proffered and rejected, together with their different modifications, treating them at one time singly, at another in combination; at one time threateningly, at another, imploringly. He could not, however, have planned this without knowing that he had done so. If he knew it, he must also have been aware that he must draw upon his fancy for such tone-pictures as would be most suggestive to the feelings and imagination of his hearers of the circumstances he designed to illustrate. In short, having conceived these traits with fullest consciousness in his imagination, he adopted them as a theme for musical illustration. In reference to the time required for their conception, it makes no difference whether it took Mozart a year or a single instant to discover or invent them. That depends upon the rapidity or slowness of his creative genius—qualities which manifest themselves very differently in different geniuses. Do then these musical pictures, of which up to this point I have spoken, lose any of their charm and effect by its having been made clear that they have an objective intent, and also what that is?

It may perhaps have occurred to the reader to ask why I have commenced this analysis with an idea taken from the middle of the work. I have done so because before all others this idea the most clearly expresses itself; because there can be no possible doubt of its precise objective intention; because it is thereby proved that isolated phrases of an instrumental work can musically symbolise definite particulars of an event; and because we shall thereby be justified in crediting Mozart with the same consciousness of intention in other passages which he has so clearly manifested in this.

We return now to the commencement of the allegro. In his introduction to the study of Æsthetics, Jean Paul lays it down as a rule for the poetical treatment of a dramatic character, that it should at once declare itself on the threshold by immediately revealing its principal traits. Don Juan's principal trait is love for women. Women, says he, are the element in which I live. This is the source from which spring all his actions, thoughts, feelings, and sufferings. He cannot see a beautiful woman without his sensuality being excited: he trembles vehemently—tender motion rises within him—

it increases to violent desire—

he pursues the object of his passion with impatience, seeking to allure her and entangle her in his net—and in hope of soon attaining his purpose, shouts aloud with wicked joy—

But he does not always at once succeed. The game is repeated more alluringly and flatteringly (with the addition of flutes and bassoons), and at the same time with an unusual combination of major and minor chords, indicative of impatience and of a desire unsatisfied. (Bars 10 to 15.) This interpretation will probably raise an ironical laugh among many of my readers. Is this unravelling of the minutest particulars to be accepted? Is it true that Mozart had a definite aim in every bar? I refer to the motto—"The true artist does not make a single stroke without a definite aim and meaning." Mozart was surely a true artist? What then made him so? It is this—that his mind's eye penetrated more deeply into the nature of things than that of ordinary men; that he not only remarked those features which, being the most prominent, are evident to every one at first sight, but also those smaller and more hidden traits, which are only revealed after examining the character and conditions of their existence. The genuine actor sees minute points in his part, which are altogether missed by a hundred other impersonators of the same character. So it is with the greatest painters, sculptors, and poets. What Gluck did in this direction is well known. No one disputes his claim to being a thinking artist, who, even in his smallest works, was conscious of definite intentions. Why should a like faculty be denied to Mozart? What is there to justify us, on coming across a fine passage in one of Gluck's operas, in exclaiming with astonishment, "What a thinking art-spirit is here apparent!" when an equally fine passage in one of Mozart's works is met with the remark that it is singular that Mozart's childish spirit should always unconsciously have hit upon what was right? But, it will be said, is the first bar of the theme of the overture, for example, so definite a passage as to be capable of no other expression but that of Don Juan's emotion at the sight of a beautiful woman? It might with equal justice be argued that at least ten other shades of expression are as applicable to it, if so subtle an interpretation is to be admitted. That is true enough, but still not to the point. Granted that this figure might serve for other shades of expression, it, nevertheless, will not serve for every shade of expression. Whom could one hope to persuade that it is expressive of deep melancholy? On the contrary, the resemblance of its tremulous quavers to the tremor of emotion is easily discernible; and consequently, the following bars reveal more clearly their objective contents, and at the same time throw a light upon more obscure passages. They establish themselves mutually by their natural accordance with each other; for it is only in this way, namely, by bringing different single tone-figures into a definite uniform connexion with each other, that music can in general give rise to ideas in the imagination, or feeling in the heart. It is the same with the smallest musical tones as with the single words of a sentence. The word "the," pronounced by itself, conveys no definite meaning. Followed by the word "heaven," an idea is at once conceived. But to what various, precise, and yet quite contrary ideas can the addition of another word or two give rise! "The heaven is dull;" or, "the heaven is bright." Just as a clearer sense is established by combining words, which, regarded singly, are of doubtful or indefinite meaning; so the production of a telling melody results from the skill employed in combining bars which, by themselves, say little or nothing. And further, just as the intention of a speech is gradually developed, and more firmly established by several connected periods, so also a tone-picture is presented to the sensuous contemplation with greater certainty of appreciation by the combination and sequence of a number of telling melodies. Seeing then that such is really the effect produced upon us by tones, how can we deny this great artist the intention of producing it?

Another extraordinary proof that Mozart intended in a sensible form the meaning which I have attributed to this first theme, may be deduced from a certain deficiency in the theme itself. To my feelings, at least, it has far less charm, both as regards colour and melody, than is generally met with in Mozart's works. Several ideas of a similar scope present themselves in the course of the Opera. Are they not the result of strenuous endeavours to depict with the utmost truthfulness every matter treated throughout the whole of the work? That this before all things was his principal aim in this work he has himself declared. That a loss of beauty is sometimes the result of a strict adherence to such a determination is seen in certain works of every art, as well as in this theme. Divested of its inward truthfulness, the charm and beauty of its external appearance makes no great effect upon the ear. The flourish of trumpets in the eighth and ninth bars of this theme has elsewhere sometimes been explained to be indicative of a love of gluttony and feasting. Were this intended, these two bars would stand alone, vastly interfering with the unity of the picture which should here reveal the principal trait of Don Juan's character, and would further be suggestive of a feeling which at this moment cannot exist in him. For when such a sinner is fascinated by the sight of a beautiful woman, he does not think of eating and drinking.

Another trait of Don Juan's character is his inordinate love of pleasure. With demoniacal might his passionate temperament urges him into the gulf of sensual joys, in which he revels with wanton delight. (Bars 16 to 25.) In every country, city, or village that he visits, it is always the women that have the strongest attractions for him. (Bars 26 to 31.) By tenderness and flattery he seeks to win them. (Bars 32 to 36.) In the madness of his career he grows more and more lustful, more wanton and less easily contented. (Bars 37 to 46.) Now resounds for the first time in his ears the fearful warning, of which we spoke at the commencement of our remarks, and on his rash rejection of which his unbridled love of pleasure bursts forth afresh. (Bars 69 to 90.) After renewed warning this expressive theme (in G major), treated this time more tenderly and delicately, closes with a modulation into B flat, indicative, as it were, of a feeling of weariness. (Bars 111 to 126.) Now follows a repetition of the warning, thundered forth in the most convincing manner, together with its resultant passages, the purport of which has already been explained. Then comes the relapse into his accustomed life and habits, as the repetition depicts, until at last the threats of the warning voice are carried into execution, and Don Juan, caught in the midst of his mad pursuit of dissipation, is hurled down to destruction. (Bars 242 to 247.)

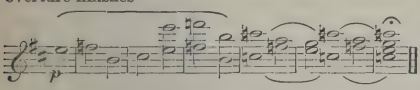
and she cannot reconcile her feelings to the loss of him. Her remaining life is one of sorrow and sad recollections of the past, accompanied by ceaseless regret for the deceiver, whom she loves to the last; and in this feeling, as Hoffmann has so feelingly explained it, probably also Donna Anna participates. Such is the life and feeling breathed out by this unsatisfying half-close with which the overture finishes—



It remains now but to speak of the Adagio. The allegro of the overture delineates the principal features of Don Juan's dissolute life in music suitable to the subject. The tone-pictures of the Adagio on the other hand are taken out of the Opera itself, and present to the imagination the last scene but one in the work, in which the statue appears. The whole therefore begins, so to speak, with the ending. If then, as is generally allowed, the overture tells the tale of Don Juan's life, it tells first the result of such a life, and then what led to this result. The more natural order would have been to have commenced with the allegro, followed by the adagio, and to have closed with a passage indicative of his final doom. Such a course, however, would have deprived us of a last saddening glimpse of Elvira's future lot, but on the other hand Don Juan's horrible end would have made a more definite and effective termination to the work. Why then did not Mozart follow this more logical order? One can only answer, because the form of his work would thereby have suffered. The introduction of the adagio at the close of the allegro, followed again by a few bars of allegro, would, perhaps, have had a disjointed effect. But it is precisely this form that Cherubini has made use of in his overture to "Lodoiska." Vogel's overture to "Demophoon" closes with an andante, and neither are unsatisfactory in form. For this digression from the natural order of the description, I can give no other reason than that of devotion to the conventional—that most formidable enemy to art-creation and art-progress, and whose seductive power even the boldest genius cannot always entirely withstand.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

The announcement that the management of this establishment had resolved to set apart Saturday the 4th ult.—the anniversary of the death of Mendelssohn—as a day specially devoted to the performance of some of his finest works, would in itself have commanded the earnest thanks of all real music-lovers; but the additional attraction of the presentation on the occasion of some specimens of his early compositions, never before heard in public, excited a degree of interest which resulted in one of the largest attendances ever known at these concerts. The representatives of the late composer having kindly placed his manuscript works in the hands of the officers of the Crystal Palace Company, two extracts from them were selected, with a promise that others would be given at future concerts. The programme informs us that there are twelve unpublished Symphonies, all of which were written between the years 1820 and 1823, the earliest dating from the eleventh year of the composer's age. Eight of these are said to be for the stringed quartett, but with an occasional independent part for the Cello, an instrument which, even as a mere boy, Mendelssohn evidently dearly loved. The rest have movements written for a quintett, the Scherzo of No. 12 being supplemented with triangles, cymbals and drums for the last 54 bars. No. 8 seems to have been considered by the composer as the only one entitled to the dignity of being fully instrumented, for the manuscript numbered 9 in the collection is merely the previous one re-scored for the orchestra, but without trombones. This is the first Symphony from which a movement was taken for performance. It consists of an "Introduction and Allegro," in D; and considering the youth of its composer, is indeed a marvellous example of clear and even forcible writing. The subject of the "Allegro" is scarcely striking, yet sufficiently pleasing to be welcomed on its re-appearance; but we have small trace of boyish thought in the treatment both of this and the second theme, which is full of character, and admirable as a contrast. True it is that a wholesome regard for the models which, as a child, he had learned to venerate is apparent throughout the movement; but the excellent manner in which the orchestra is handled affords ample proof that he had an intimate knowledge of instrumentation, and was acutely sensitive to the varied effects which could be produced. The second extract was the "Adagio," in E major, for strings, from the symphony No. 10. This commences with a melodious subject, written for four violins, the grace and elegance of which cannot fail to charm all hearers. This movement would have been received with unfeigned delight by the audience had not the beautiful theme with which it opens been succeeded by an exceedingly common-place second subject in the tonic minor—given out by the basses and taken up successively by two violas—which is obviously written to show the young composer's ability to construct a Fugue. The spirit of Sebastian Bach, however, which so largely influenced Mendelssohn in after life, had not produced its effect at this early age, and the consequence is that this ambitious episode is only interesting as proving how rapidly his powers must have developed from the date of this work. It is scarcely neccessary to say that, under Mr. Manns's able and zealous direction, these movements were given with a care and precision worthy of the highest praise. The rendering of the "Italian Symphony" was simply perfect, in its minutest details; but who could have dictated such an item in the programme of a "Memorial Concert" as the performance of the composer's "Allegro assai" and "Finale" from his last Quartett in F minor, by all the strings of the orchestra? We have repeatedly called attention to this desecration of an author's original intention; but on this occasion, of all others, we had hoped to be spared such an infliction. The G minor concerto was given by Madame Arabella Goddard with much brilliancy, and with a perfect mastery over the executive difficulties of the work, her rendering of one number from each of the eight books of the "Lieder ohne worte" being also a most interesting feature in the selection. Mr. Sims Reeves sang the air "Be thou faithful," from "St. Paul," with true religious fervour, and elicited the warmest applause by his intellectual reading of the "Frühlingslied" and "Nacht-lied," both accompanied on the pianoforte by Madame Goddard. Madame Blanche Cole contributed with much success the bright little song "The flowers are ringing," from the Operetta, "Son and Stranger" (which, strangely enough, is but rarely heard in public) and "Jerusalem," from "St. Paul." The Overture to "Athalie" was a worthy conclusion to this highly interesting concert. On the 11th ult., an important item in the programme was the performance by Dr. Stainer of Mendelssohn's sixth organ concerto, which was received with warm and most deserved applause. He also played with equal success Bach's Prelude and Fugue in C major, in both works displaying not only a thorough mastery of the instrument, but a cultivated appreciation of the styles of each composer. Amongst the orchestral works given, mention must be made of G. A. Macfarren's fine overture to "Romeo and Juliet," which, although written in 1836, has not been heard in public as often as it deserves to be. Its reception, however, on this occasion will we trust incite the musical authorities of the Crystal Palace to give it a place in many future programmes.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

THE series of operatic performances at this establishment, which commenced on the 30th October, have been highly successful; for not only has Madlle. Marimon appeared in some of her best characters for the first time in this country, but a new singer, Madlle. Jeanne Devries, has already established herself as a favourite, and is likely we think to prove a valuable acquisition during the coming season. Although not possessing a voice of much power, Madlle. Devries has a pure soprano organ of sympathetic quality, which she has trained with the utmost care; and to her qualifications as a vocalist she unites an intimate knowledge of the requirements of the stage, her acting indeed—especially as Violetta, in "La Traviata,"—creating an effect rarely attained by a débutante. Her Lucia, in Donizetti's Opera, although perhaps in parts slightly exaggerated, was a genuine success, and she has also appeared with much effect as Zerlina, in "Don Giovanni." Madlle. Marimon has more than confirmed the favourable impression she produced last season, both as Rosina, in "Il Barbiere" and Astrafiamante, in "Il Flauto Magico," the latter part affording ample opportunity for the display of her exceptionally fine soprano voice. The Operas have been constantly varied; and the crowded houses have sufficiently proved that there is a public ready to support a well conducted lyrical establishment, even at this unfashionable time of year.

THE ORATORIO CONCERTS.

THE first of the ten subscription concerts to be given during the present season took place at Exeter Hall on the 15th ult., when Handel's Oratorio, "Jephtha," was performed. The removal of these concerts to Exeter Hall has enabled Mr. Barnby to increase the number of his choir to a considerable extent; and as all who have had experience in the conductor's power of training will hardly entertain any fear that he will allow tone to degenerate into noise, there can scarcely be a doubt that the change is for the better. The choruses which most severely tested the capabilities of the choir were given with an unity of feeling which cannot be too highly commended; "No more to Ammon's God and King," "When His loud voice" and "How dark, O Lord," being especially noticeable, not only for unerring precision in time, but for a minute observance of the true expression of the words which is far above what is conventionally termed "light and shade." The sopranos and tenors—usually the weakest part of all great choirs—are strikingly fine; and when repeated performances in the large area of Exeter Hall shall have accustomed the singers to that perfect ensemble which practice alone can achieve, the permanent establishment of so excellent a choir in the metropolis must be a matter of the sincerest congratulation to all who desire to hear a rendering of the standard sacred works which shall be a worthy tribute to the memory of the great composers who have bequeathed them to us. The soprano solos were carefully sung by Madame Cora de Wilhorst, her most effective song being "Tune the soft melodious lute," which was most deservedly applauded. Miss Julia Elton took the utmost pains with the pathetic air, "Scenes of horror," and also gave much dramatic expression to the trying solo, "Let other creatures die," eliciting the warmest marks of approbation. It has been lately the custom to talk of the "best days" of Mr. Sims Reeves. When these days were we cannot say; for with the full recollection of his singing from the commencement of his career, we can conscientiously affirm that his interpretation of the part of Jephtha on this occasion—whether for quality of voice or the intellectual reading of the music—was unquestionably the finest we have ever heard. Not only in the well known "Deeper and deeper still," and "Waft her, angels," but in the air "Open thy marble jaws," and especially in the Recitative, "O Zebul, Hamor," the sublimity of his pathos was beyond the possibility of description; and even the applause which it evoked could but faintly convey the impression it made upon the audience. The bass music was assigned to Mr. Winn, who sang with much judgment throughout, creating a marked effect in the air "Pour forth no more unheeded pray'rs." A word of unqualified praise must be given to the young débutante, Miss Strangways, who delivered the fine Recitative, "Glad tidings of great joy," with such true artistic feeling as to elicit a round of applause; and Miss Sydney has also a right to be commended, as a new comer, for her singing of the Recitative "Arise, Jephtha." The band was everything that could be desired; and Mr. Arthur Sullivan's excellent additional accompaniments gave much vitality to the work. Mr. F. A. W. Docker accompanied the recitatives on the organ (a judicious innovation) with much judgment, and Mr. Barnby conducted with his usual skill and precision. The next concert will take place on the 6th inst., when Mendelssohn's Elijah will be performed, the part of the Prophet being sung by Herr Stockhausen for the first time in London.

THE Monthly Popular Concerts at the Angell-Town Institution, Brixton, are proceeding with even increased success during the present season. The first concert included Beethoven's "Sonata Pastorale" and three sketches by Scarlatti, and the second Woelfl's Fugue and Sonata in C minor, all of which displayed Mr. Ridley Prentice's powers as an accomplished and intellectual pianist to the utmost advantage. Besides the solos already mentioned, the pieces which produced the greatest effect were a Trio by Haydn, for pianoforte, violin and violoncello, and Schumann's Sonata in A minor for pianoforte and violin, the Allegretto of which was encored. The executants were Messrs. Holmes and Weist Hill (violin), Mr. Webb (viola), and Signor Pezze (violoncello), and the vocalists, Mdme. Poole, Mdme. Dowland and Mr. Hillier.

THE Sixth Annual Concert in aid of the funds of the Orphanage of the Out-door Officers of H. M. Customs, was given on the 16th ult., at the City Terminus Hotel, Cannon Street. The large room was inconveniently crowded by a fashionable and appreciative audience; and the entertainment (which was under the direction of Messrs. W. Phillips and A. L. Cope) was thoroughly successful. The artists engaged were Miss Blanche Cole, Madame Poole, Mr. Frank Elmore, Mr. Seymour Smith, and Mr. Thurley Beale, with whom were associated Miss Cavanagh, Mr. F. C. Cope, Mr. Churchill, and the gentlemen of the Westminster Glee Union. Miss Blanche Cole elicited deserved applause in "Levey's "Esmeralda," and Allen's "Far down a valley"; and Madame Poole's rich contralto voice was heard to the greatest advantage in "The Lady of the Lea" and "The unwise choice." Mr. Elmore sang "The Irish Emigrant" and "The Normandy Maid" extremely well; the remainder of the party being also highly effective in the pieces allotted to them. A prominent feature of the evening was the very excellent playing of the band of the A division of Police. The accompanists were Mrs. Seymour Smith, Mr. Meen, and Mr. W. Miller, jun.

AN evening concert, under the direction of Mr. John Stedman, was given at the Birkbeck Institution on the 8th ult., before a large audience. The principal vocalists were Madame Poole, Miss Annie Sinclair, Miss Hann, Messrs. Stedman, Thurley Beale and R. Limpus. Miss Sinclair elicited the warmest approbation by her very excellent rendering of Gounod's "Berceuse" and Lover's "May-dew"; and Madame Poole displayed a good voice and style in the air from "Betly"—"In questo semplice"—and a ballad called "The unwise choice," by Kate Ward. Mr. Stedman gave with much care and refined feeling, a sacred song by Herr Coenen, "Come unto me" (accompanied by the composer) and Whittaker's ballad, "Oh! say not woman's heart is bought," both of which were deservedly received with marked favour by the audience. In Mendelssohn's "I'm a roamer," from the "Son and Stranger," Mr. Thurley Beale achieved a genuine success; and Herr Coenen, being encored in a pianoforte Fantasia, substituted one of his marvellous left hand pieces, which drew forth the loudest applause. Mr. Limpus accompanied.

Mr. W. H. Monk has organised a series of four subscription concerts for the performance of chamber-music, at Stoke Newington. The programmes are formed on the model of the "Monday Popular Concerts"; and it is intended that the high character of the compositions selected and the acknowledged reputation of the artists engaged, shall guarantee to the subscribers an entertainment of so classical a nature as to render a journey to the metropolis unnecessary. The first concert took place at the Assembly Rooms, Defoe Road, Church Street, on Monday the 20th ult. The concerted pieces were Spohr's Quartet in G minor, for two violins, viola and violoncello, and Mendelssohn's Quartet in F minor, for pianoforte and strings, both of which were admirably interpreted, Mr. Henry Holmes performing the first violin, Mr. J. B. Zerbini, second violin, Mr. R. Blagrove, viola, and Mr. W. Pettit, violoncello, the pianist being Miss Kate Roberts. A Polonaise by Chopin, for pianoforte and violoncello, was excellently played by Miss Kate Roberts and Mr. W. Pettit; and Mendelssohn's "Two Musical Sketches," (which are too rarely heard in public) were most effectively given by Miss Kate Roberts. Miss Katharine Poyntz sang Lotti's air, "Pur dicesti," with good expression, and elicited marked applause in two "Lyrics from the Water-babies," by Cleveland Wigan. Mr. Winn gave Handel's "Revenge! Timotheus cries," with appropriate spirit, and joined Miss Katharine Poyntz in Spohr's duet (from his little known Opera "Faust") "Dearest, let thy footsteps follow." The concert was conducted with much ability by Mr. W. H. Monk, whose exertions in promoting the spread of good music in the neighbourhood appeared to be fully appreciated by the audience.

The St. George's Glee Union gave its monthly open meeting at the Pimlico Rooms on the 3rd ult. with great success. The choir sang the "Macbeth" music (commonly attributed to Locke); the solos receiving full justice from the Misses Brown and Clarke, Messrs. Ellis, F. Horder and V. T. Horder. The other choral pieces were "Hush thee, my babie," "To the hills and vales," "Sigh no more, ladies" and "Now is the month of Maying," the performance in each case being highly satisfactory. Miss Blanche Reeves won enthusiastic applause by her artistic rendering of "Tell me my heart," and a new song of her own composition, "The three evenings," gaining an encore for both. Miss Horder was also very successful in "Robert toi que j'aime" and "The lover and the bird," the latter being enthusiastically redemanded. Miss Brown (a very promising member of the choir) sang "My mother bids me" so well as to receive the most encouraging applause and an unanimous encore. Mr. Ellis by his spirited singing of "A hunting we will go," also elicited a hearty recall. Two concertina solos were excellently played by Mr. Spice accompanied by Mr. Paine. Miss Merriman's pianoforte solos "Rondo Capriccioso" and "Alice," were much applauded. The conductor Mr. W. H. Bridges must be congratulated on the general excellence of the performance.

The North London Choral Association gave a concert in the Town Hall, Shoreditch, on Tuesday evening, the 14th ult., before a crowded audience. The programme included the principal portion of Haydn's "Creation" and a miscellaneous selection. Under the able direction of Mr. Bassett, the Oratorio was excellently performed. The solo vocalists were Miss Rycroft, Mr. Horatio Perry, and Mr. R. De Lacy (of St. Paul's Cathedral). The choir and band numbered nearly 400 performers. The choruses were excellently sung throughout, "The heavens are telling," "Achieved is the glorious work," and "Sing the Lord ye voices all," being especially worthy of praise. Miss Rycroft and Mr. Horatio Perry, gave their solo music with care and judgment. Mr. R. De Lacy's singing of "Rolling in foaming billows," and "Now heav'n in fullest glory shone," was highly successful, the latter being redemanded. In every respect the concert was thoroughly satisfactory.

Those very excellently organised concerts, under the title of "Musical Evenings," have been highly attractive during the past month. St. George's Hall is well suited for the interpretation of the delicate chamber-music selected, and the audience at each performance has been a thoroughly appreciative one. At the second concert, on the 8th ult., Schubert's String Quartet in A minor, and Mendelssohn's, in D major, were given. Sir W. Sterndale Bennett's charming Trio in A (Op. 26), for pianoforte and strings, being also included in the programme. The executants were Mr. Walter Macfarren (piano), Messrs. H. Holmes (first violin), F. Folkes (second violin), A. Burnett (viola), and Signor Pezze (violoncello). Mr. Macfarren deserves the thanks of all Beethoven lovers for rescuing almost from oblivion, his Fantasia (Op. 77), the excessive beauties of which he so ably displayed as to take by surprise the many listeners to whom the work was unknown. At the end of his performance, he received a well deserved tribute of applause.

The private performance upon Messrs. John Broadwood's Pedallier Grand Pianoforte, given by M. Delaborde at the Hanover Square Rooms, on the 16th ult., fully tested its capabilities, and amply demonstrated to the many artists present that it may prove of the highest value for the interpretation of works originally written for the "Cembalo con Pedale," especially when so able an executant as M. Delaborde can be engaged for the occasion. The programme contained compositions of various styles, all of which were made highly effective; and some vocal music, by Madlle. Cecile Fernandez and Mr. Bentham, agreeably relieved the instrumental selection.

We understand that a committee has been formed for the purpose of presenting a testimonial to the eminent violinist, Mr. Henry Blagrove, whose severe illness has for some time incapacitated him from continuing his professional duties. We have little doubt that the majority of his brother artists will heartily co-operate in furthering so laudable an object.

The second of a series of Promenade Concerts, under the patronage of the Marquis of Donegal, took place at the Horns Assembly Rooms, Kennington, on Saturday, the 18th ult. The vocal selections were well received by an appreciative audience. Miss M. Crawford was encored in Hatton's "Kirtle Red," and Mr. J. B. Bolton was compelled to repeat the song, "Martin, the man-at-arms," which was given in excellent style. Mr. Walter Fitton accompanied in an able manner; and the band of the London Irish Rifles contributed selections of operatic and popular music.

A concert of sacred music was given at Regent's Park Chapel on the 22nd ult. The first part was miscellaneous, and included Organ introduction, Mr. E. J. Hopkins; chorus, "How lovely are the messengers" (Mendelssohn); "Weep not, my mother" (Sir M. Costa), sung by Mdlle. E. Steinhagen; trio, "Ti Prego; (Curschmann), Misses Poole and Spiller, and Mr. Mellor; solo, "Ave Maria" (Gounod), Miss Spiller; solo, "Nazareth," Mr. Christian; air, "O rest in the Lord," Miss Poole; solo, "Pro Peccatis" (Rossini); chorus, "To Thee, Great Lord" (Rossini); solo, "Love not the world" (Sullivan), Miss Severn; and Organ solo, Mr. E. J. Hopkins. The second part comprised selections from Handel's Messiah, the solos being sustained by Miss Poole, Miss Spiller, Miss Severn, Signor Rocca, Mr. Mellor, and Mr. Christian. Mr. F. A. W. Docker was conductor. The chorus was very efficient. The entire proceeds were appropriated to the Organ Fund.

The performance of the Messiah by the Brixton Choral Society on the 20th ult., at the Angell-Town Institution, was thoroughly successful. The principal vocalists were Miss Janet Haydon, Miss Adelaide Newton, Mr. G. Perren, and Mr. Lawler, all of whom gave much effect to the solo music, and the choruses were, on the whole, given with commendable firmness and precision. Mr. Lemare conducted, and Mr. Harrison presided at the organ. There was a very large audience.

Reviews.

Novello, Ewer and Co.

Christmas Carols, New and Old. The words edited by the Rev. Henry Ramsden Bramley, M.A., Fellow of Saint Mary Magdalen College, Oxford. The Music edited by John Stainer, M.A., Mus. Doc., Organist to the same College. With Illustrations, engraved by the Brothers Dalziel.

The approach of Christmas brings with it the usual songs of the season, and pianoforte pieces especially adapted for the festive occasion, all of which receive a certain amount of welcome, if not by right of merit, at least by right of their arrival at a time when genial feelings are in the ascendant, and criticism slumbers. But Christmas Carols have no necessity to avail themselves of this privilege. They are the pure and natural offspring of the religious feeling with which all true Christians regard the natal day of the divine founder of their religion; and the antiquity of many of these compositions invests them with an interest which will effectually prevent their dying out. The number of these songs published about this time of the year has latterly much increased, and the sale of them amply proves that the demand for such healthy vocal pieces is steadily progressing, and, we hope, gradually displacing those vapid "sacred" effusions which have no real religion, either in the words or music, to recommend them. But although, as we have said, Christmas Carols, even in a collected form, have been often presented to the public, a volume so exquisitely beautiful as the one before us is a novelty. The design on the cover, and the Frontispiece, are not only perfect both in conception and execution, as abstract specimens of art, but so truly sympathetic with the religious character of the work as to form a most fitting introduction to its contents. Each Carol, with the exception of "The Waits' Song," has an appropriate illustration, all of which are excellent, and many extremely beautiful as pictures, apart from the song to which they are wedded. Amongst so many it is difficult to select even a few for especial commendation, but we must particularly mention "God rest you, merry gentlemen" (T. Dalziel), "Come, tune your heart" (F. A. Fraser), "Good King Wenceslas" (F. A. Fraser), "On the birthday of the Lord" (John Leighton), "What Child is this?" (W. J. Wiegand), "The Holly and the Ivy" (J. B. Zwecker), "Christmas Day" (T. Dalziel), and "The story of the Shepherd" (E. G. Dalziel), all of which have the highest artistic merit. Many of the tunes of the Carols are traditional, some are selected from the best and most popular melodies already published, and others are original compositions by eminent musicians, amongst whom appear the names of Dr. Dykes, Sir G. Elvey, Sir F. A. G. Ouseley, Dr. Stainer, Dr. Steggall, Joseph Barnby, Arthur Sullivan, and Henry Smart. The new tunes are admirably adapted to the words, the true spirit of the Carol having been in every instance most happily caught. That this work will have an extensive sale there can be no doubt; for, as may be inferred from our notice, apart from its musical value, it will form a most elegant book for the drawing-room table.

Te Deum laudamus; Magnificat, and Nunc dimittis. Composed by the Rev. T. R. Matthews.

One more setting of the great Ambrosian hymn is here added to the many; and, like the vast majority of these, it falls short altogether in attaining to even a moderate success. When will ardent lovers of music see that in endeavouring to wed their thoughts to such a mighty inspiration as the Te Deum they are doing an injury to the very art they are professing to love. The number of settings which have at all approached to the sublimity of the words may be easily counted on the fingers of one hand; and hardly more numerous are those which, without succeeding in giving adequate expression to the words, at least do not degrade or distort them. Unhappily, however, those which do fall short are "thick as leaves in Vallambrosa," and are gathering in numbers every day. Therefore, in the interests of musical art, we are obliged to repeat again and again that it by no means follows that the ability to write a good hymn tune or chant will carry a composer successfully through the Te Deum. It may be interesting to Mr. Matthews to know in what particular he has failed, and we may therefore say that the quality in which the work is most deficient is breadth. In music, in particular, an aggregation of small pieces will not make a large one. The setting of the Evening Canticles is open to the same objection, with the addition that the music is less modern in feeling, and therefore less real.

The Lord hath chosen Zion. Anthem. Composed by J. Frederick Bridge.

This anthem suffers either from a want of words or an overplus of music. Out of an almost endless repetition of two short phrases is the first movement constructed, and no two phrases could be less suggestive of musical treatment than those commencing the anthem. The second movement, a treble solo, is equally straitened in its means, and had not the fugal character of the last chorus somewhat warranted a constant use of the same words, we should have considered it the worst off of the three. The composition extends to eleven pages and is laid out thus:—

Chorus.

The Lord hath chosen Zion, He hath desired it for His habitation.

Solo.—Treble.

This shall be my rest for ever. Here will I dwell, for I have desired it.

Chorus and Fugue.

I will also clothe her Priests with salvation, and her Saints shall shout aloud for joy.

Apart from this, we have nothing but commendation to bestow on the work. The first chorus is chiefly remarkable for the smooth flow of the inner parts; the treble solo for its charming air and musicianly accompaniment; and the last chorus for a singularly happy fugal subject, admirably treated.

Rigoletto. A Tragic Opera, in three acts. Composed by Giuseppe Verdi. Edited and translated into English by Natalia Macfarren.

In spite of the painful nature of the plot of this Opera, the dramatic interest is so well sustained, and the many highly wrought situations afford such ample scope for the display both of the histrionic and vocal qualifications of the artists that there can be little fear of its losing that hold upon the public which it has for so many years maintained. Unquestionably, too, it contains some of Verdi's best music, several of the concerted pieces, especially, being written with the most intimate knowledge of dramatic effect. No little credit is due to the translator for the excellent manner in which the many impassioned scenes are rendered into English; for in all cases, not only is the original meaning well preserved, but the words are so carefully fitted to the notes that any artist accustomed even to the Italian version could very readily sing from this translated copy. The paper, printing and general arrangement of this Opera are in every respect fully equal to the high standard originally contemplated and so successfully adhered to in these editions.

May-day. A Cantata for Soprano Solo, Chorus and Orchestra. Written by John Oxenford. Composed by G. A. Macfarren.

Choral societies will be glad to hear that this melodious and thoroughly English Cantata is now published in Novello's well known Octavo Edition, and at a price which will place it within the reach of all. The work is divided into four numbers—"The choosing of the Queen;" "The Hunt's up;" "The Queen's Greeting;" and "The Revels"—all of which are full of character, and written with that intimate knowledge of the resources of voices and orchestra which must always make them acceptable both to executants and listeners. The first chorus, "Who shall be Queen of the May?" with its incidental solos, although simple throughout, as such music should be, is full of variety; and this is followed by an excellently written Part-song, which has so light an accompaniment that, detached from the work, it may effectively be given with the voices alone. The very charming Song with a Burden, "Beautiful May," has an unmistakably national ring which has already earned for it a wide popularity; and the final chorus, commencing in A minor, with a key-note pedal (representing the tabor), is overflowing with rustic mirth, the change into the tonic major adding much freshness and vivacity to the concluding portion of the Revels. We can scarcely doubt that "May-day," as it becomes more extensively known, will do much towards proving that we have living composers who have the will and power to write in the art-language of their country.

March for the Organ.

My soul is dark. Song. Words by Byron.

Composed by Alfred Alexander.

Both these works are deserving of much praise, for they show not only that their composer has musical feeling, but that he writes sufficiently out of the conventional track to arrest the attention of a cultivated audience. The song is thoroughly German in character, and evinces an intimate acquaintance and sympathy with the best models of that school. The symphony, in C minor, introduces the voice part with much effect; the accompaniment throughout is in excellent keeping with the varied shades of feeling in the poetry, and although the transition into the tonic major at the conclusion is somewhat abrupt, it seems to have been well considered by the composer, who is no doubt fully prepared to justify the musical necessity for the change. The March, in D minor, may be commended as possessing not only melodious leading subjects, but much originality in their treatment. The second theme, in the relative major, is exceedingly attractive. Mr. Alexander has sufficiently won his way in these two compositions to ensure a cordial welcome on his next appearance.

Valse Gracieuse, pour Piano, par Siegfried Jacoby.

We are glad to see that the composer of this waltz has the courage to call it by its right name, instead of "Budding Tulips," or "Mournful Moonbeams," or any other title equally fanciful and equally inappropriate. The next reform, we hope, will be the printing of the title-page in the language of the country in which the music is published. For this, however—judging from the confusion of tongues used by English composers in most of the pieces which come before us—we shall have to wait some time. The author of this graceful little dance deserves much praise for the musicianlike manner in which he has treated his theme, and the care with which his harmonies are written throughout. The subject, in the sub-dominant has much quaintness, the dropping on the appoggiatura upon the second beat of each bar having an excellent effect; and, moreover, is a little out of the beaten track, if not strikingly original.

Ave Maria, for Mezzo Soprano or Baritone; with Pianoforte or Organ accompaniment.

O Salutaris, for Solo and Chorus, with Organ or Pianoforte.

Composed by Wilhelm Schulthes.

The "Ave Maria," commencing with a few introductory bars, for organ or pianoforte, "quasi recitative," has a calm and devotional subject, harmonised with the skill of a practised musician. The phrase, beginning with the words "Sancta Maria," is extremely beautiful; and the changes in the character of the accompaniment prevent any feeling of that weariness so often experienced in the settings of sacred words. We hardly like the shake on the first syllable of the final "Amen;" but we should no doubt be in a minority if the opinion of a mixed audience were taken. There is some effective writing in the second piece, "O Salutaris." The leading theme, given out by the soprano, is followed by a short tutti, a solo for the soprano, afterwards joined in imitation by the tenor, is again succeeded by a tutti—this time of greater length—and the principal subject for the solo quartett, with a flowing arpeggio accompaniment, leads to the concluding tutti, the dying off of the "Amen" being a point of much interest. This composition especially shows that Herr Schulthes has true feeling for religious music.

Two Loving Hearts may sever. Words from the novel "The Heir of Redcliff."

Take back ev'ry token. Words by Captain Urquhart.

Composed by Wilhelm Schulthes.

There is much originality in both these songs, neither of which appeals to the admirers of the sentimental "Claribel" school. The words from the "Heir of Redcliff" have been most thoughtfully set, the whole spirit of the composition being thoroughly German. The declamatory phrases are well contrasted with those of a more melodious character, and the accompaniment is sufficiently varied to increase the interest, without disturbing the flow, of the vocal part. The second song, after a few bars of recitative, has a more marked melody, with a triplet accompaniment. The change into the tonic major, after the pause on the dominant seventh, has an excellent effect, and the lengthening out of the final phrase, "Go, be happy! fare thee well," is in true sympathy with the poetry. These compositions are healthy specimens of a style which should be encouraged, if only as a protest against the colourless ballads which are still too prevalent in musical domestic circles.

Four Characteristic Pieces, for the Pianoforte, by E. H. Thorne. No. 1. Regrets. 2. Prayer. 3. An Eastern Tale. 4. Spring Song.

These pieces are exceedingly favourable specimens of Mr Thorne's power of writing those elegant descriptive little sketches which are now so popular in our drawing-rooms. No. 1 has a graceful melody, not without a tinge of melancholy, as may be inferred from the title, accompanied with arpeggios divided between the two hands. The theme is distinctly marked out in large notes throughout, so that, although the passages will require careful practice, it will be the performer's fault if the composer's intention is not perfectly realized. No. 2 may be made extremely effective by a pianist who can take extended chords with ease. The subject has much religious feeling; and although containing little variety in the treatment, the interest is amply sustained for so short a piece. The "Eastern Tale" is in our opinion by far the best of the set; and we trust that the printer's error in the time ($\frac{3}{4}$ being marked instead of $\frac{2}{4}$) will not puzzle those who desire to acquaint themselves with its merits. The highly characteristic theme, in F minor, is excellently contrasted with the legato melody in the relative major, with the triplet arpeggio accompaniment, and the Oriental air which pervades the entire composition is sufficiently evident, we think, to tell its own tale to listeners. The light and playful movement with which the composer has illustrated the feeling indicated by the title of No. 4 is entitled to much commendation, especially as "Spring Songs," like "Lullabys," are so much overdone in the present day, both with and without words. The "Adagio Religioso," in the relative minor, is extremely effective; and we can conscientiously recommend the piece, not only for performance but for practice.

Ashdown and Parry.

Popular Classics, for the Pianoforte. Selected, edited, and fingered by Walter Macfarren.

When Mr. Macfarren resolved to call these excellent specimens of a pure and true style of composition "Popular Classics," we presume that "the wish was father to the thought;" and as he might reasonably conclude that the sympathy of all real artists would be heartily with him in his task, there can be little doubt of his ultimately justifying the title he has selected, even if the "pretty" music of the day should be found at first a formidable rival. The fact is that what a conscientious teacher has to struggle against in his endeavour to spread a love for the classical works is not a want of appreciation, but a want of knowledge, of them; and the issue of such compositions as those selected by Mr. Macfarren, is therefore a matter of the highest importance, as rendering accessible, at a moderate price, many little gems which had long remained unnoticed, not only by pianists but by publishers. The series has already extended to twelve numbers; and although we have not space to enlarge separately upon their merits, we can assure our readers that, even if they order one at random, there can be little danger of regretting their purchase. The collection includes three of Clementi's Sonatinas, two of Beethoven's, three Sonatas of Haydn, a Bourrée in A minor, and "Echo," from the Partita in B minor, of Bach (the latter a perfect treasure in its way), Dussek's fine Sonata in D, (which, both for practice and performance, will be found invaluable), and Mozart's Posthumous Rondo in B flat, a work less known than any other of this composer's Rondos, but assuredly one of the most perfect and attractive of all. We need scarcely say that these pieces are most carefully edited; and to those who are not familiar with this school of writing the fingering will be of the utmost value. We have every hope that the sale of the "Popular Classics," will be sufficiently large to amply warrant a continuance of the series.

Celebrated Musical Works Analyzed and Described. By Albert G. Emerick.

Mr. Emerick's name should scarcely have been put upon the title-page of this little book, as the collection contains two criticisms by other writers, one of which, upon Mendelssohn's "Reformation Symphony," is extracted from the pages of this journal. There is much careful analysis in several of the papers upon the standard orchestral works of the great masters; and Mr. Emerick may fairly claim the merit of having grown enthusiastic without becoming rhapsodical, preferring rather to criticise a composition from a strictly musical point of view, than to search for deeply hidden meanings which clearly lie beyond the legitimate province of the art. He is evidently somewhat a disciple of the "music of the future," and in speaking of Liszt's Symphonic poem, "Les Préludes," asserts that "the various movements maintain an unbroken continuity," and that the motivos "make evident a unity of design which is seen and felt from the first to the last measure of the composition." Wagner, he says, "is a man of fine culture, an excellent belles-lettres scholar, a poet, a critic. He has delved deep, and may not be accused of a superficial examination of his subject. But for all this, perhaps in virtue of it, he seems to have written and talked above the heads of the populus in his later works." Unquestionably: but the populus may be brought to listen to works when they will not listen to words, and art-lovers in this country are waiting anxiously for the time when this Prophet shall be brought to judgment.

Cassell, Petter and Galpin.

Henry Leslie's Musical Annual for 1872.

This Annual makes no pretence to outward show, relying, we presume, upon the value of its contents and its moderate cost, although, curiously enough, no price is marked upon it. It contains an expressive song by Virginia Gabriel, a Romance by Henry Smart, treated with that musicianlike feeling so observable in all that composer's vocal works, an effective song by J. Blumenthal, a ballad, appropriately dedicated to Madame Patey, by Henry Leslie, which is sufficiently good to make its way apart from the "Annual" (a form of publication which too often crushes the life out of works which have a right to live), and a fairy-like Mazurka, by Charles Godfrey, whose name is a guarantee for excellence in this style of writing.

F. Pitman.

Holy Song. Favourite Hymns set to Music.

This work supplies another instance, to add to the many, of the curiously one-sided way some people are apt to look at matters of an artistic nature. The author, whilst deploring the fact that favourite hymns have been set to music so many times that it becomes a matter of difficulty to decide which should be finally adopted, makes confusion worse confounded by adding his (or her) own to the number. There might have been some justification in taking a course like this were the intrinsic merits of these compositions so great as to warrant a hope that they would in the end distance all other competitors. But when they exhibit, as these do, an utter ignorance of the A B C of musical art, it is difficult to conceive what excuse the author can possibly have for entering the lists at all.

Cramer, Wood and Co.

Trois Esquisses pour le Piano. No. 1. Romance sans Paroles. 2. Impromptu. 3. Melodie Religieuse. Par Giacomo Ferraris.

These pieces are unequal in merit, but they are all skilfully written, and evidence the possession of good musical feeling in their composer. The fault is that too much is attempted, and the consequence is a restlessness which detracts very much from the attraction of the themes. No. 1 has a peculiar and not very appropriate introduction, in B minor, leading to a melodious subject in the tonic major, accompanied with arpeggios in the left hand, which are continued throughout the piece. The modulations are, however, too frequent to allow of that repose suggested by the character of the composition, and carefully as the harmonies are treated, the ear becomes wearied. The Impromptu we like better. There is some little novelty in the disposition of the arpeggios with which the theme is accompanied; and although in the second page we have some chromatic progressions which we would willingly dispense with, the harmonies are knitted together with good knowledge of effect. Take away the arpeggio accompaniment in the "Melodie Religieuse," and we have a very common-place subject, which we can scarcely think could have presented itself to the composer's mind without the ornaments with which it is surrounded. That this is beginning at the wrong end may be proved by a careful study of the undying works which have set the pattern for this class of composition—Mendelssohn's "Lieder ohne worte"—all of which are based upon themes in the highest degree melodious and attractive. We scarcely think that the plan of carrying on two minims in the bar almost uninterruptedly for four pages could have produced anything but a feeling

Brothers, we are treading
Where the Saints have trod.
We are not divided,
All one body we,
One in hope, in doctrine,
One in charity.
Onward, &c.

Who like Thyself my guide and stay can be?
Through cloud and sunshine, Lord, abide with me.

And how extol Thy matchless fame,
The glorious beauty of Thy name?
Jesu, my Lord, I Thee adore:

How great the joy that Thou hast brought,
So far exceeding hope or thought.
Jesu, my Lord, I Thee adore:
O make me love Thee more and more.

Jesu, of Thee shall be my song,

The Village Festival. A Descriptive Piece, for the Pianoforte. By Brinley Richards.

An effective little sketch, the characteristics of which are sufficiently indicated by the title. A bright and tuneful dance commences the piece, and this is succeeded by similarly light and graceful movements, representing the Village Band, the Festival Waltz, and the Maypole Dance. All these subjects are simple in the extreme; but an artistic feeling pervades the whole, and lifts the composition above the level of the ordinary descriptive music written for young players. We can scarcely doubt that the "Village Festival" will enliven many drawing-rooms during the Christmas vacation.

Boat Song, for Piano, by William Charles Levey.

We know not why this piece is sent for review, considering that for years it has been familiar to us as a composition well adapted for teaching, and one moreover to be found in the portfolios of numerous little students home for the holidays. As our opinion is solicited, however, we can conscientiously affirm that, although slight in structure, it is an exceedingly elegant trifle, written with the skill of a practised musician, and well calculated to please even a critical domestic audience. The principal theme has much character; and the second subject, in the relative minor, with an effective accompaniment of semi-quavers in the inner part, is melodious and appropriate. We commend the "Boat Song" to the attention of all who are yet unacquainted with it.

When the Convent Bells are ringing. Song.
Rain in Summer. Song. Words by Longfellow.
Mine only. Song. Words by Edward Legge.
The Sea Diver. Song. Words by Longfellow.
Composed by Walter Maynard.

This batch of songs by a writer well known as a successful composer of vocal music, will be welcome to singers who desire something more than a maudlin melody with an arpeggio accompaniment. They are all treated in a thoroughly musicianlike manner; and, although we like the least ambitious the best, we doubt whether our opinion will be shared by the majority of listeners. The theme of No. 1 is scarcely religious, but it is effective, and will be certain to please. The contrast of the "parlante" phrases with the pretty melody which forms the leading idea of the song will, we think, make the composition a favourite with vocalists, even if cynical critics should grumble in a corner. "Rain in Summer" has a flowing melody, with a semiquaver accompaniment, which, if not very striking, is at least appropriate to the words. To our mind the third on the list, "Mine only," is by far the best song of those under review. The theme expresses the poetry with remarkable fidelity, and has the merit moreover of being extremely vocal. We are especially pleased with the treatment of the words "Only mine," the E flat in the voice part, after the chord of C major, giving a pathos to the phrase which cannot fail to enlist the sympathy of an audience. The tonic minor, too, is most aptly used for the line "They told me my love had been false to me"; and the ascent to the ninth on the dominant, in the last bar but one, is in excellent keeping with the feeling of the song, which is unquestionably one of the most thoughtful little vocal pieces we have yet seen by this composer. The temptation to become scientific in the "Sea Diver" is too great for Mr. Maynard to resist, and he becomes scientific accordingly. We have violent arpeggios, which are so extended in some parts that fingering has been considered necessary. Then we have constant changes of key, which give to the song that patched effect so often to be found in the compositions of those who paint words rather than ideas. Abstractedly there is much to admire in many of the varied passages with which this descriptive piece abounds; but it is a relief when we come to the peaceful melody, with the undulating arpeggio accompaniment, which concludes the song.

Original Correspondence.

ORGANISTS' SALARIES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—Will you give me space to reply to the railing accusation made by "Clericus" against Organists in general and Country Organists in particular? Firstly, as to the Organists' salaries. "Clericus" in effect says: Organists are paid for the time they are engaged in church work in an equal ratio to the payment they receive for their time when engaged in teaching. Is that so? From a calculation I have made I find that my duty required of me at least 272 attendances during the year, of an average duration of an hour and a half each attendance, exclusive of time spent in copying, &c., for the choir. The stipend was £30. The services choral—two anthems every Sunday. Now £30 for these attendances will give 2s. 2¼d. and a smaller fraction each attendance. Surely that cannot be in an equal ratio to what an average teacher gets for the same time! for while I was making one attendance at church I could have taken three pupils at my own residence, which at the low fee of 1s. 6d. per lesson would have yielded 4s. 6d. So far then the assertion of "Clericus" is not supported by figures; but the basis on which he would found his scale of remuneration is bad, if not inconsistent. Let us see how his theory works. I only get 7s. 6d. for giving a lesson on one of Beethoven's Sonatas; therefore I am amply paid if I play that same sonata to the public for 7s. 6d.! Secondly, as to position—What is it? Frequently the unenviable position of a shuttlecock thrown from the clergy to the churchwarden, and from the churchwarden to the clergy. As an Organist of some years' experience I have no recollection that my position ever brought me half-a-dozen pupils; on the contrary, my experience is that the most prosperous teacher is he who has no church work to do. Thirdly, as to the voluntaries country Organists play. Admitting "Clericus" to be right, is not his assertion but a reiteration of the complaint? The Organist is paid so badly that a musician finds it more profitable to study pianoforte playing than organ playing. In fact, he gets more for one evening's attendance at a concert or a quadrille party than he does for a month's church work; but I do not admit that country Organists possess so few qualifications as "Clericus" asserts. Here is a specimen of what was required at a country competition:—Candidate to play soft voluntary, his own selection; a MS. chant as to the Venite: a MS. hymn tune; a chant and hymn tune, MS., from figured bass; to harmonise while playing a given melody; to play from score an anthem supplied; and a concluding voluntary—the candidate to write a short exercise in five parts. To the successful candidate was offered the stipend of £35. His duties would require about as many attendances as named above. Certainly there was some hint of an increase if candidate suited, but nothing said as to repaying the extra expense to which he would necessarily be put in moving to the neighbourhood, and removing if he did not suit. The above example (except perhaps the short exercise) is not above the average of competitions, and if they mean anything, the Organist selected must have a sufficient knowledge of harmony to enable him to escape the false progressions for which "Clericus" gives him credit, and therefore I can scarcely believe that "Clericus" has met the average Organist. Fourthly, "Clericus" complains that Organists do not assist the clergy to improve the singing. Where does the fault lie, if the assertion be true? and if true, how does it agree with the statement made by certain of the clergy that the High Church movement springs in any church from the pressure of the organist and choir to introduce a more musical service? I think I may safely assert that, if in any church the organist is irreverent, it will be found that the priest who has been in charge of that church has been irreverent and careless also. Finally: from the tone of the letter of "Clericus," I suppose the writer to be a clergyman who has been impressed with the idea that Organists are a wilful, conceited, irreligious set of men. I fear this idea is very general among the country clergy, and the Organist is treated accordingly; but if he were treated by the clergy with about as much civility as they treat the baker or butcher, or even the gardener (it would be asking too much that he might be treated as a professional gentleman), I do not think he would be found quite such a "horrid man" as he is frequently called. As a parting word allow me to ask, are the clergy perfect themselves? Could they not render their part of divine service better, and a little more in accordance with common sense? Suppose amongst other trifles they were to learn to read.

Yours obediently,
A Sometime Country Organist.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—Permit me to offer a few remarks in answer to a letter signed "Clericus," in the November issue of the Musical Times. I am willing to admit that if an Organist is paid at the same rate he would charge for music lessons, he cannot reasonably complain; but, from my own experience, I am confident that six times out of ten this is not the case: for it must be remembered that an Organist's duties are not confined to playing at two or three services on Sunday. In very many churches there are occasional week-day services, on Saints' days, &c., which the Organist must attend, and consequently give up any teaching he may happen to have: then there is the training of the choir, which, if properly attended to, frequently occupies more time than the actual performance of his duties in church. "Clericus" says "The office of Organist generally means corresponding position and support." This is the argument usually made use of by those of the clergy who wish to obtain a good performer for a small salary. I have heard of cases in which an Organist's place, worth say £40 a year, has become vacant; the situation has been advertised at £30 or £35, but with the comforting assurance that "there is a good opening for teaching:" the advertiser fondly hopes by this means to obtain the same talent for £30 as for £40, but I need scarcely say is often miserably disappointed. Your correspondent indulges in a somewhat humourous description of the performances of one of the "underpaid," and I do not deny that there is much force in his remarks; but I must confess I fail to see the justice of complaint when the salary bears such a very small proportion to the services required. The clergy have it in their power to put an end to these exhibitions of incompetency by offering such reasonable recompense as would induce properly qualified persons to come forward. If this is not done, it is not surprising that first class men prefer to occupy their time in teaching, and other professional employments. "Clericus" thinks the grievance is very exceptional, and then says "What is the general style of playing you get from the average Organist of the provinces, taking him at a salary of from £20 to £40 per annum?" Does he expect a competent man to undertake church duty for such a sum? The sexton frequently receives as much. Perhaps he will kindly inform us what he thinks would be a fair salary for a good Church Organist who has to attend three services on Sunday, (one or more probably choral), occasional week-day services, together with the training of the choir, which seldom takes less than two evenings per week. In conclusion, let me remind my brother professionals that in the College of Organists we have an Institution, the object of which is to improve the status and position of the Organist in this country; I am confident that did this Institution receive the universal support from the profession which it deserves, we should hear less of Organists' salaries of £20 or £30 per annum; and I would urge all Organists who have not already done so to become members, or endeavour to pass the examination for Fellowship in this Association.

I am, Sir, yours truly,
A Fellow of the College of Organists.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—Permit me to offer a few remarks on the relation of Andante to Andantino. Muzio Clementi in his instructions for the pianoforte gives a table of degrees of movement (as he says, according to Corelli), from Adagio to Prestissimo in which Andantino stands before Andante. Now surely Clementi, an Italian, a good musician and a man of business, wrote nothing but what he had well considered. In Petronj's Italian dictionary Andantino is given "rather slower than Audante." Dr. Gregory in his Cyclopœdia, says, "Andantino, in music, gentle, tender and somewhat slower than Andante." I think I have written enough to show that Mr. Sutherland has good authority for "falling into the usual error," although as many composers have fallen into the opposite one, he should have called attention to this in a foot-note.

I am, Sir,
An Amateur of Thirty Years' Standing.

[We have omitted that portion of the above letter which refers to the metronomic signs used by Mr. Henry Smart in his Cantata, "King René's Daughter," because we do not dispute that "Andante" is often coupled with other Italian words which qualify it: but what does it mean when it stands alone, and without a metronomic mark?—Ed. Musical Times.]

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

* Notices of concerts, and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded as early as possible after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot be inserted. Our correspondents must specifically denote the date of each concert, for without such date no notice can be taken of the performance.

We beg to remind our correspondents that all notices of country concerts, whether written or extracted from newspapers, must be accompanied by the name and address of the person who sends them.

Our correspondents will greatly oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors, therefore, will do well to retain copies.

Notice is sent to all Subscribers whose payment (in advance) is exhausted. The paper will be discontinued where the Subscription is not renewed. We again remind those who are disappointed in obtaining back numbers that, although the music pages are always stereotyped, only a sufficient quantity of the rest of the paper is printed to supply the current sale.

From the immense number of letters received on the subject of "Organists' salaries," we have only been enabled to give insertion to two. This selection has not been made without due consideration; and although the inexorable demands upon our space will always compel us to keep our correspondence columns within reasonable limits, we may hint as a guide to those who favour us with communications upon points of controversy, that those which are temperately worded will always stand the greatest chance of attention.

Brief Summary of Country News.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

Ballarat, Victoria.—The eleventh subscription concert of the Harmonic Society was held on Friday, the 1st September, in the Alfred Hall, when Lucrezia Borgia and The Merrie Men of Sherwood Forest (Birch) comprised the programme. Miss Emanuel, Mrs. H. Cazaly, Messrs. Donaldson, Rees, Gray, Lamble, Nash, Cazaly, Thorburn, and Buntingsang the solos; and the chorus and band of 120 were highly effective.

Belfast.—At the opening ceremony of the Working Men's Institute and Temperance Hall on Wednesday, the 15th ult., the Inauguration Ode, composed expressly for the occasion by Mr. B. Hobson Carroll, was performed with much success. The tenor solo was excellently sung by Mr. Barton M'Guckan, and the work was received with loud and prolonged marks of approbation, which were continued until the demand for a repetition of the composition was complied with. Mr. Carroll was called forward and warmly greeted.

Birkenhead.—On Tuesday, the 31st October, the Birkenhead Musical Society gave a complimentary concert to the conductor, Mr. E. Jones, in the Workmen's Hall. The room was completely filled. The principal vocalists were Madame Billinie Porter (soprano), Mr. McArdle, in the absence of Mr. George Barton, through indisposition (tenor), and Mr. Cuzner, of Chester Cathedral (bass). Madame Billinie Porter met with a most enthusiastic reception, and was encored repeatedly. Mr. McArdle gave with good effect a new song, entitled "The Music of the Past," composed by Mr. H. Bretton expressly for this concert; and Mr. Cuzner was encored in "If doughty deeds." The choruses were sung admirably, under the conductorship of Mr. E. Jones; and a septett party, directed by Mr. H. Bretton, performed very tastefully a number of selections from various operas. Miss Scarlett presided at the pianoforte for the choruses, and Mr. W. W. Jones at the harmonium, and Mr. Billinie Porter assisted in accompanying the solos. The performance, as a whole, may be pronounced a complete success.

Birmingham.—A gratifying testimonial was given on Monday, the 6th ult., to Mr. William Masefield, junior, who has for the past two years officiated as organist at the Warwick Street Baptist Chapel. Tea having been partaken of, the President (Mr. S. W. Martin) occupied the chair, when a vote of thanks was past for the gratuitous services Mr. Masefield had rendered, and a large framed address, with a pair of handsome ornamental inkstands, were presented as a token of esteem and affection on his retirement. Mr. Masefield, in returning thanks, stated that having completed his engagement at the Warwick Street Chapel, he had accepted an unanimous invitation to occupy the position as organist at the English Presbyterian Church, New John Street West.

Blackpool.—On the 6th ult. an entertainment, consisting of music and readings, was given at the Assembly Rooms. Miss Clelland (from Manchester) sang several songs with much effect, and Misses Webbe and Grindrod, Messrs Gardner, Kirtland, and Stanton also contributed some vocal pieces, which were most warmly received. Mr. Grindrod was the accompanist. The attendance was very large, and the concert highly successful.

Brighton.—Mr. John Hiles, organist of All Saints' Church, Buckingham Place, gave an Organ Recital on Monday afternoon, the 30th October. The Church was well filled, and would doubtless, but for the unpleasant state of the weather, have been crowded, as it has been on former occasions, for Mr. Hiles's reputation as an organist stands very high. The Recital commenced with a Toccata and Fugue, by John Sebastian Bach, which was beautifully executed. The second piece was Mendelssohn's Notturne. The arrangement of this (doubtless from the pen of Mr. Hiles himself) and the Larghetto in A, from Beethoven's 2nd Symphony, which was given afterwards, effectively brought out the parts of the various orchestral instruments, showing the player's power of management. This was followed by a vocal piece from Fraulein Mehlhorn, a lady whose excellent voice and expressive style are well known in Brighton. Her first solo, "I know that my Redeemer liveth," was well given, and the air from St. Paul ("Jerusalem"), produced even more effect. Cherubini's "Ave Maria" and Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer" were also sung with equal success. Mr. Hiles's other performances, including a Concerto, by Handel (No. 2), Barcarolle in F (4th Concerto), by Sir Sterndale Bennett (in which the flute part was very beautiful), the well-known Andante, by Batiste, and a March in G, by Dr. Henry Hiles (who, we believe, is the performer's brother), displayed the same excellencies in the organist that we have before mentioned, and the varied changes and combinations of the organ, to great advantage.

Bury St. Edmunds.—An excellent concert was given on the 10th ult. by the St. Mary's Choir, Glee, and Madrigal Society, under the conductorship of Mr. T. B. Richardson. There was a large and fashionable audience, and all the choral music was warmly applauded. Amongst the most successful pieces may be mentioned Hatton's "Jack Frost," and W. G. Cusins' "Venetian Boat Song," the latter being loudly encored. Mr. T. B. Richardson most ably conducted, and presided at the pianoforte.

Chatham.—On the 7th ult. a concert was given at the Institute, the vocalists being Miss Annie Sinclair, Madame Poole, Mr. Stedman, and Mr. R. Limpus. Miss Sinclair gained a deserved encore for her singing of G. A. Macfarren's "Beating of my own heart;" Mr. Stedman received a similar compliment for his excellent delivery of "Far down a valley;" and Madame Poole was highly effective in the "Lady of the Lea." Mr. R. Limpus accompanied the vocal music, and also sang a buffo song which was re-demanded. The concert was in every respect highly successful.

Chislehurst.—An excellent concert was given by Mr. John Davis, at the Village Hall, on the 21st ult. The principal vocalists were Miss Annie Edmonds, Miss Marion Severn, Mr. Kerr Gedge, and Mr. Lander. Several of the vocal pieces were enthusiastically encored, a compliment which was also awarded to Mr. T. Harper for his marvellous performance of "The Soldier tired," on the trumpet, accompanied by Mr. John Davis on the pianoforte. There was a large audience, and the performance was thoroughly successful.

Colnbrook, Bucks.—The Harvest Thanksgiving was held in St. Thomas's Church on the 25th October. The Church was beautifully decorated with corn, fruit, and flowers. The Processional Hymn was "Come ye thankful people, come." The service was choral throughout. The prayers were intoned by the Rev. William Greive, the lessons being read by the Rev. Mr. D'Arcy. The Anthem was taken from the 65th Psalm, "Thou visitest the earth" (Dr. Greene), the solo being sung by Mr. R. Ratcliff. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Mr. Ives, of Clewer. A tea was provided at the end of the service, after which a selection of songs, glees, part-songs, and madrigals was given by the Church choir, assisted by Mr. Joseph Walsh, Messrs. Perryman, Matthews, Seymour Hammond, Large, W. Bambridge, Pain, Innes, and the following ladies:—the Misses M. Ratcliff, Sherwin, Gorrod, and Duley. Mr. R. Ratcliff was the conductor.

Coventry.—Mr. Trickett's concert, in St. Mary's Hall, on Thursday, the 23rd ult., was a decided and deserved success. In the first part Miss Jessie Royd obtained a hearty encore for her rendering of Donizetti's song, "O luce di quest' anima." The duet and chorus, "To arms," went exceedingly well, the duet part being ably rendered by Mr. Cole and Mr. Sutton. Mr. Cole in his song "Nina," and Mr. Sutton in "If doughty deeds," were thoroughly effective. Mr. Mason's song, "The trumpet on the Rhone," must not be passed over without commendation," and the cornet obbligato, by Mr. Johnson, which accompanied it, told with good effect. Mr. Belcher's violin performances were favourably received. Mr. Trickett acted as conductor, and in the grand fantasia from Don Juan (Thalberg), exhibited his complete mastery of the pianoforte. Mr. Harrison accompanied with much ability.

Devizes.—Mr. C. Clarke gave a highly successful concert, on the 6th ult., before a large audience. The principal vocalists were Madlle Liebhart, Miss Jenny Pratt, Mr. E. Lloyd, and Mr. Lander. Madlle. Liebhart was warmly received in her songs, and Mr. Lloyd displayed an excellent tenor voice and irreproachable style in all his solos. Signor Guglielmo officiated as accompanist at the pianoforte, and Herr J. Baht Sauvlet elicited much applause by his performance on the flute. The concert was an excellent one, and reflected the utmost credit upon Mr. Clarke.

Derby.—The performance of Mendelssohn's Elijah by the Derby Choral Union, on the 10th ult., at the Drill Hall, was a genuine success. Madame Helena Walker was highly effective in the soprano music, especially in the scene between Elijah and the widow, and the song, "Hear ye, Israel," and Madame Whitaker's "O rest in the Lord" elicited much applause. Mr Lewis Thomas's singing in the part of the Prophet is too well known to need more than a passing word of praise. The tenor music was carefully given by Mr. Dumville, of Manchester Cathedral. The trio, "Lift thine eyes," in which Mesdames Walker and Whitaker were joined by Miss Thompson, was so well sung as to gain an enthusiastic encore. The members of the Choral Union deserve the warmest congratulations upon the success of their exertions during the evening, the whole of the difficult choruses having been given in excellent style. The work was conducted by Mr. Woodward, Mr. Henry Farmer led the orchestra, and Mr. Trimnell presided at the organ.

Driffield.—The amateur concert in connection with the opening of the session of the Mechanics' Institute and Literary Society, took place in the Assembly Room on Thursday evening, the 26th October, before a large audience. The Overture to Tancredi, and Mendelssohn's Wedding March, with Mr. H. Blakeston at the harmonium, and Miss Bell and Miss Stanford at the pianoforte, a duet for the pianoforte on Preciosa, by Miss Stanford and Mr. H. Blakeston, and the Introduction to William Tell, as a duet for pianoforte and harmonium, by Miss Clara Bell and Mr. H. Blakeston, were excellently played, and elicited much applause. Several vocal pieces were most successfully given by Misses Bell, Stanford, Stainton, Wigmore, and Dunning, Messrs. J. Clarke, Carlill, and C. Blakeston; a duet, "The Music of the Birds," by Misses Wigmore and Dunning, and the quartet, "How gently the moonlight," by Misses Bell and Wigmore, Messrs. Clarke and C. Blakeston, being amongst the most effective items in the programme. Mr. H. Blakeston, who conducted the concert, was warmly thanked for the excellent manner in which the entertainment had been organised and carried out; and a graceful compliment was also paid to the ladies and gentlemen who had kindly volunteered their services on the occasion.

Great Berkhampstead.—On Monday evening, the 30th October, Mr. J. Macrone, organist of the Parish Church, gave his third annual concert in the Town Hall. The principal vocalists were Mrs. Lamb, Mrs. Barnes, Miss Cook, Messrs. Ellens and Crew, all of whom were highly successful. Mr. Macrone performed with much effect two pianoforte duets with Mrs. Watson, and Mr. Ellis Roberts elicited much applause by his excellent harp playing. The attendance was very good.

Great Yarmouth.—The members of the Great Yarmouth Musical Society gave their first concert of the season at the Drill Hall, on Monday evening, the 13th ult., before a large audience. The first part was devoted to Cowen's Cantata, The Rose Maiden. The principal vocalists were Miss Susanna Cole, Madame Poole, Mr. Reed Larwell, and Mr. Theodore Distin. The work was thoroughly successful with the audience. In the second part, the most effective pieces were Balfe's "Good night, beloved," by Mr. Larwell; the Lady of the Lea," by Madame Poole; "Tell me, my heart," by Miss Susanna Cole; and "Miei Rampolli," by Mr. Distin. The performance reflected the highest credit on Mr. Stonex, the conductor; on Mr. Dyer, the leader of the band; and on the committee of the Musical Society.

Halifax.—On Tuesday, the 14th ult., a concert was given by the Philharmonic Society in the Mechanics' Hall. The band was considerably augmented for the occasion, and the orchestral pieces, including Mozart's Overture to Idomeneo, and Wagner's to Tannhäuser, were excellently played. The performance of Mendelssohn's Pianoforte Concerto in G minor, by Mr. Walter Bache, was a marked feature in the concert; and Mr. Ties was also highly effective in a violin solo. Mrs. Joe Eckersley (already well known as Miss Amy Empsall) elicited much applause in all her vocal pieces, especially in the scena, "Softly sighs" (from Der Freischütz) which was given with much dramatic feeling. Mr. Whitaker conducted with his usual ability.

Hull.—The twenty-ninth public performance of the Hull Harmonic Society took place at the Music Hall, Jarratt Street, on the 3rd ult. Handel's Oratorio, Samson, was the work selected for performance, the principal vocalists being Miss Ruth Harlow, Miss Clelland, Mr. Alfred Kenningham, Mr. Whitehead, and Mr. R. T. Vivian. Miss Harlow and Miss Clelland were highly successful, and Mr. Kenningham elicited much applause in the solo, "Total Eclipse." The choruses were excellently given throughout; and Mr. Stephenson, the able conductor, has a right to congratulate himself upon the result of his teaching. The audience was one of the largest ever assembled at the Society's concerts.

Isle of Man.—At the meeting of the advanced division of the Douglas Singing Class on Thursday, the 19th November, it being considered desirable to change the above name, it was resolved, upon the proposition, and at the express wish of the members present, that it should henceforth be called "Miss Wood's Choir." This choice of a name, intended by the members as a mark of confidence in their able and painstaking conductress, will no doubt be felt by her as a compliment, the more gratifying from its being unexpected and unsought. The members of this association are busy preparing Mr. Barnby's Cantata, Rebekah, for their first concert this winter.

Leamington.—An Operetta was produced on the 15th ult., at the Music Hall, described in the programme as a piece of absurdity "in three whims," the dialogue being by Captain E. Spencer, and the music by Signor Aspa. The local press speaks in the highest terms of the songs and duets in the piece, all of which were thoroughly successful with the audience, several being redemanded. The principal parts were sustained by Miss Julia Lawson, Miss Robertha Erskine, Miss Beverley, Mr. Desmond O'Callaghan, and Mr. C. A. Mott.

Liverpool.—The seventy-fourth anniversary dinner of the Liverpool Apollo Glee Club took place on the 2nd ult., Mr. Skeaf, the President for the season ,occupying the chair, and William Laidlaw Esq., the vice. A number of glees by Callcott, Bishop, Webbe, Farmer, Evans, &c., were well rendered by the performing members, Messrs. Haswell, Evans, J. B. Clarke, Brough, R. Evans, J. Jones, T. J. Hughes, Carroll, and Armstrong, Mr. Skeaf presiding at the piano. The club was reported to be in a prosperous condition, and in possession of a library of between three and four thousand glees.——The ninth concert for the present year of the Philharmonic Society took place on the 7th ult., the principal vocal artists being Madlle. Jeanne Devries and Signor Mendioroz. Solo violin, Mr. Henry Holmes. The leading orchestral features of the programme were Mozart's Sinfonia in D major (No.5), and the Overtures to Melusine (Mendelssohn), and Tannhäuser (Wagner). The march in the latter opera was also given with much precision and effect. Mr. Henry Holmes performed Spohr's "Dramatic Concerto", with peculiar delicacy and feeling, and was warmly applauded. He also played, with equal effect, Schumann's Abendlied, and a Tempo di Bourrée (Bach), which was encored. The singing of Madlle. Devries and Signor Mendioroz was greatly admired. The duet from Verdi's Traviata "Dite alla giovane," and the baritone song, "Di Provenza il mar," being especially successful. The choral members sang, with much spirit, two part-songs; and the chorus from Alexander's Feast, "The many rend the skies."——The thirty-sixth open rehearsal (the first this season) of the "Societa Armonica" was given on Saturday, the 11th ult., in the hall of the Liverpool Institute, which was crowded in every part. The programme was an excellent one, and was well executed throughout. The soprano solos were entrusted to Mrs. Billinie Porter (a daughter of the able conductor, Mr. Armstrong), who for some time has been engaged in the metropolis. She has a voice of much purity, and in the songs "Softly sighs" (Weber) and "The ray of hope" was highly successful, and received at their conclusion the warmest applause. The other solo vocalist was Mr. Forrester, who sang with much taste the solo in Rietz's "Laudate Dominum." The band was all that could be desired, and the performance of the overture to Masaniello, Romberg's Symphony in D, the second ballet music from Schubert's Rosamunde, and the Turkish March from the Ruins of Athens (Beethoven) was particularly effective. The choruses were all judiciously sung, and the concert was in every respect thoroughly satisfactory.—The tenth subscription concert of the Philharmonic Society, on the 21st ult., was devoted to an excellent performance of Mendelssohn's First Walpurgis Night and a miscellaneous selection. The principal artists were Madame Rudersdorff, Madlle. Drasdil, Mr. Arthur Byron, and Herr Carl Stepan. The Overtures were Weber's Preciosa and Auber's Fra Diavolo. The Sinfonia, Mendelssohn's "Italian Symphony." Madame Rudersdorff declaimed, with great energy and expression Randegger's fine scena, "Medea." Madlle. Drasdil, Mr. Byron, and Herr Carl Stepan were highly effective in their various solo performances; and the concert was, in every respect, thoroughly successful.

Manchester.—A concert, in aid of the children of the late Mr. Charles F. Anthony, was given in the Free Trade Hall on Monday, the 23rd October. An excellent programme was provided, the principal vocalists being Miss Katharine Poyntz, Madame Osborne Williams, and Mr. W. Winn. Mr. Horton C. Allison's pianoforte solos were much admired, as were also those by Mr. Edward de Jong (flute) and Herr Van Biene (violoncello). The attendance was very large, and a considerable sum realised.—— The first concert of the Athenæum Musical Society was given on Friday evening, the 17th ult., the programme consisting, as usual, of songs, ballads, and part-songs. Under the excellent guidance of Dr. Hiles, the choir of the Society has become remarkably effective, and its success amply proves that much may be done in the cultivation of music when amateurs meet for regular practice under an accomplished conductor. Of the part-songs given, we may specially commend Macfarren's "Under the greenwood tree" (encored), Calkin's "Night-winds that so gently flow," and H. Leslie's "Gentle daughter of the year." In addition to some very agreeable singing by amateur members of the Society, Miss Heywood, one of the most accomplished of our native vocalists, contributed several solos. Her excellent contralto voice was heard to great advantage in Mehul's song from the opera Joseph, and the old English ballad, "My lodging is on the cold ground." She was recalled after each song, and accepted an encore for the former.

Margate.—One of the best concerts given in this town for some time past, was held at the Assembly Rooms, on Wednesday evening, the 15th ult., under the auspices of the Margate Church Institute. The programme, which was well selected, consisted of two parts—sacred and secular—the selections being from the compositions of Mendelssohn, Haydn, Benedict, Handel, Hatton, Bishop, Balfe, Stevens, Boscovitch, Lee, Barnett, &c. The vocalists were Miss Dixon (soprano), Mr. Plant (alto), Mr. Moulding (tenor), and Mr. Rhodes (bass); Mr. Lott performing the duties of pianist. The whole of the pieces were remarkably well rendered, especially the quartetts, choruses, trios, glees, and part-songs. There was a large and select audience.

Marlborough.—On the 16th ult. Mr. W. S. Bambridge gave a concert, which drew together a large and fashionable audience. The principal vocalists were Madlle. Liebhart, Miss Lucy Franklein, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Lander. Mr. Bambridge's pianoforte solos—an "Allegretto Sostenuto" (Henselt), "Allegro Molto" (Moscheles), and a Rondo by Weber—were warmly received, the last gaining a double encore, in response to which he played a "Meditation" of his own composition. The vocal pieces, especially G. B. Allen's "Little Bird," by Madlle. Liebhart; "In questa tomba," by Miss Franklein; Balfe's "Good night," by Mr. Lloyd, and Handel's "Tutta Rea," by Mr. Lander, elicited much applause; and the flute performance of Herr J. Baht Sauvlet was also an important feature in the programme. Signor Guglielmo was also an able accompanist.

Pontypool.—Mr. Charles Lawrence, of Pontymoile, Pontypool, was one of the successful candidates at the late Oxford preliminary examination for the degree of Musical Bachelor.

Sandown, Isle of Wight.—Mr. Fred. G. Baker having resigned the Organistship of Sandown Parish Church, which post he has filled for nearly eight years, has been presented, by the members of the choir, with Best's arrangements, from the Scores of the great Masters, for the Organ—4 vols.—and Handel's Organ Concertos. Mr. Baker is appointed to St. Saviour's on the Cliff, Shanklin, Isle of Wight.

Sheffield.—On the 6th ult., the Queen Street Harmonic Choir gave a performance in the Music Hall, Surrey Street, before a large audience. The choir, although the youngest in the town, has, under the able direction of Mr. H. Coward, attained considerable proficiency. Romberg's Cantata, The Lay of the Bell, which formed the first part of the programme, was exceedingly well performed, the principal parts being most effectively given by Miss Twigg, Mr. A. Kenningham, and Mr. J. H. Sutcliffe. The band was led by Mr. C. Stokes, Mr. Moxey presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. Coward was the conductor.——Mr. Crowther Alwyn's concert at the Music Hall, on the 23rd ult., was attended by a large audience. Mr. Alwyn was assisted by Mr. Henry Holmes (violin), and Signor Pezze (violoncello), Miss Sophie Ferrari being the vocalist. Mendelssohn's Trio in D minor, and Beethoven's in C minor, for pianoforte, violin and violoncello, were most artistically given by the above-named instrumentalists, and Mr. Alwyn; and Schubert's duet for pianoforte and violin, played by the concert-giver and Mr. Henry Holmes, was also an important feature in the programme. The pianoforte performances of Mr. Alwyn included a selection from Schumann's Kinderscenen and a piece of his own composition, all of which were received with warm and deserved applause. The solos of Mr. Henry Holmes and Signor Pezze, and the singing of Miss Ferrari, contributed much to the success of a very excellent concert.

Staleybridge.—The fifty-seventh annual grand evening concert of the Staleybridge Old Band took place on the 26th October, in the great hall, which was crowded by an enthusiastic and highly appreciative audience. The concert was under the patronage of the mayor, councillors, and principal nobility and gentry of the county. The following vocalists were engaged:—

Miss Manfrey, from the Conservatoire Royal, Brussels; Miss Harlow, Mr. Dyson, and Mr. C. J. Bishenden (bass) from London; pianist, Mr. Andrews; bandmaster, Mr. J. Reece, and solo violoncello, Mr. Avison. Among the most successful performances of the evening were Miss Harlow's rendering of "O fair dove," and Mr. Bishenden's singing of Dr. Boyce's fine old air, "Hearts of Oak," which he gave with much spirit and fervour, and elicited an enthusiastic encore. Miss Manfrey also met with a warm reception, and Mr. Dyson gave "The Message" in good style. Several other vocal pieces were included in the programme, which was essentially of a popular character. The Staleybridge Old Band gave various selections in a very effective manner, reflecting great credit upon the bandmaster, Mr. Reece. The large hall was beautifully decorated with flags, flowers, &c., and presented a very handsome appearance.

Stanwell, Middlesex.—A new school for girls was opened on the 1st ult. The site for the building has been given by Sir John Gibbons, Bart. The architects were Messrs. Walker and Elsman, of Hampton, and the builder, Mr. H. Mole, of Colnbrook. The room was beautifully decorated by Miss Gibbons, Mrs. C. Gibbons, and Miss Charlotte Gibbons, of Windsor. During the tea a selection of music was performed on the pianoforte by Mr. Joseph Walsh and Mr. Martin Brown. Speeches were made on the importance of the general spread of education by the Rev. R. Parry Burnett, Rev. C. Furze, Mr. Henry Waugh, Rev. Mr. Pilkington, Mr. James Ward, and Captain Charles Gibbon. A selection of music was afterwards performed, including a vocal duet by Mrs. Gibbons and Miss Kent, and several glees by Hatton, Bishop, and Macfarren, the singers being Miss M. Ratcliff, Masters Innes, Weedon, and Messrs. Large and Richard Ratcliff. The organist of the parish, Mr. Ratcliff, conducted.

St. Peter's, Rawdon, near Leeds.—An addition has been made to the organ in this church of eight stops in the swell, and the open diapason 16 feet on the pedal organ. The organ is divided into two parts on each side of the chancel. The great organ, choir, and pedal are in the south, and the swell in the north chamber. A front with decorated pipes has been placed on the north side. This additional work has been completed by Messrs. Halmshaw and Sons, of Birmingham, at a cost of £160. The Rev. G. H. Palmer, B.A., Præcentor of St. Margaret's, Liverpool, played the organ at the services, and his accompaniments to the Hymns, and to the Psalms and Canticles (taken from the "Mechlin Psalter," edited by Messrs. Doran and Nottingham, which is in use at this church) were executed in a masterly style. The solo in the anthem at Evensong was sung by Mr. C. Prince, of the Parish Church, Bradford. The psalms and hymns were well rendered by the large congregations present at these services. The choir led the singing very fairly, but it wants an addition of bass voices to balance the undue preponderance of trebles and tenors. The tone and quality of the new stops in the organ are of the highest excellence, being soft and mellow, and suitable to the size of the church. The collection amounted to £8 18s. 10½d.

Wanstead.—The Wanstead Musical Union commenced its fourth season on Monday evening, the 30th October, when the members met to practice Mozart's Twelfth Mass.

Warrington.—The first of Mr. Oakden's subscription concerts for the present season took place on Tuesday evening, the 24th October, in the Public Hall. The principal vocalists were Madame Colombo, Madame Trebelli Bettini, Signori Tessèman, Borella, Caravoglia, and Foli, with Signor Tito Mattei as solo pianist. An excellent programme was provided, and the performance was, in every respect, highly successful.

Whitehaven.—Mr. Hamilton White gave his first concert of the season, on Tuesday evening, the 31st October, in the Oddfellows' Hall. The artists engaged were Mesdames Rudersdorff (Soprano) and Drasdil (Contralto), Mr. Arthur Byron (Tenor), Mr. Whitney (Bass), and Mr. Oscar Beringer (Pianist). Owing to severe indisposition, Madame Rudersdorff was unable to appear. Madlle. Drasdil's "In questa tomba," Mr. Byron's "Draw the sword, Scotland," and Mr. Whitney's "Possenti Numi," were amongst the vocal pieces most admired; and Mr. Beringer's brilliant playing attracted considerable attention. The hall was crowded in every part.

Wigan.—On Thursday, the 16th ult., an evening concert was given in the Public Hall by the choir of the Parish Church of All Saints. The chief feature in the programme was Sullivan's Cantata, On Shore and Sea, the execution of which was, in every respect, thoroughly satisfactory. Mr. Walter Parratt played selections from two of Beethoven's Pianoforte Sonatas, in which he displayed much musical ability and taste.

Windsor.—Mr. Orlando Christian gave a concert, in Dr. Hayne's Music Room, Eton College, on the 1st ult., which was well patronised by the Head Master, Assistant Masters, and Students. Madame Thaddeus Wells was very successful in "Lo, here the gentle lark" (Bishop), flute obbligato, Mr. H. Nicholson. Mr. Christian sang "The Yeoman's Wedding" (encored) and "The Scout" (Campana). Randegger's trio, "The Mariners," was well given by Madame Wells and Messrs. Christian and Mellor; and some operatic selections, performed by Messrs. Nicholson, Lazarus, S. Hughes, and Kemp, were much applauded. Mr. S. Kemp, R.A.M., conducted.

CRAMPTON'S SINGING-CLASS MANUAL.
A complete and interesting guide to Singing at Sight.
It is found that the ability to "read music" is more rapidly acquired when the learner's attention is concentrated upon the production of the right sound, irrespective of any name that may be given to such sound. Having to recollect the name of an interval has been regarded as such a hindrance to rapid reading at sight, that many great masters give their exercises to be sung to a single syllable as ah, la, &c. Such exercises are, however, too monotonous to excite a lively attention in class-singing. By the use of easy poetry—a line of which is read at a glance—the attention is sustained, while it is also fixed upon the sound of the interval and its duration, as indicated by the notes. The success of this plan justifies the issue of the present attempt to develop the principle in methodical exercises.

"THE LORD IS MY SHEPHERD." Sacred Song for Baritone or Contralto. Words from the 23rd Psalm. Compass from B♭ to F♯. Music by Miles Bennett.

"We can unhesitatingly recommend this song to any baritone or contralto vocalist who can sing words with expression. Mr. Bennett has given a sacred character to his music in excellent sympathy with the words he has selected; and we cannot too much commend the musician-like manner in which the whole of the accompaniments are written."—Musical Times, Oct. 1st, 1871.

"A very familiar passage is here set with no small feeling of the deep sentiment of the words, and with a degree of musical effect which warrants us in speaking of the song very favourably."—Musical World, May 27th, 1871.

"A well written composition in the key of E♭ major. The sacred and trusting nature of the words is well expressed in the music of both voice and accompaniment."—Cheltenham Looker-On. April 8th, 1871.

"I can but do a kindness to your musical readers by mentioning a singularly beautiful composition, "The Lord is my Shepherd," by Miles Bennett. This composition should be the Christmas favorite of sacred songs."—Banffshire Reporter.

AN ENTIRELY NEW WORK FOR MUSICAL EDUCATION.

WALTER MAYNARD'S

MUSIC COPY-BOOKS

CONTAIN A PROGRESSIVE COURSE OF INSTRUCTION IN MUSIC, UPON A SYSTEM DESIGNED BY HIM.

The exercises are set at the top of each page, and blank staves are left for the pupil to copy the examples given. It is intended that the pupils should fill up the first page by copying the exercise given, and write from memory on the second blank page. Every succeeding exercise includes all that has been taught in the preceding examples. The rudiments of music are explained as simply as possible. Diagrams of the pianoforte keyboard are provided, by means of which the notes can be more easily learnt than by any other method. The fundamental rules of harmony and thorough bass are practically illustrated, and a plan laid down by which singing at sight can be learnt without assistance. The Music Copy-Books will, it is believed, be equally useful to master and pupil, by relieving the former from the necessity of constantly repeating the same rules, and ensuring the gradual progress of the latter.

Parts I. and II. contain RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC.
Part III. contains INSTRUCTIONS FOR THE PIANOFORTE.
Parts IV. and V. contain THE RUDIMENTS OF HARMONY.
Part VI. contains INSTRUCTIONS IN VOCALISATION, PART-SINGING, AND SINGING AT SIGHT.

Price Sixpence each; postage free for 7 stamps.

CHAPPELL'S PENNY OPERATIC PART-SONGS.

For Soprano, Alto, Tenor, and Bass.

The present collection of Part-Songs is entirely new, being selected and adapted from the most striking and popular Choruses in the Favourite Foreign Operas. The Arrangement is purely Vocal, such Choruses only being chosen as can be sung without the aid of an Instrumental Accompaniment. The Words have been expressly written for the work, and the harmonies arranged in four parts, as likely to be most useful in small classes.

1.	Hymn of the Fisherman's Children	Adapted to a Melody from Herold's "ZAMPA."
2.	Fays and Elves (In mia fe)	From Flotow's "MARTA."
3.	Spring's Bright Glances (In Elvezia non v'ha)	From Bellini's "LA SONNAMBULA."
4.	From Yonder Vale and Hill (D'immenso giubilo)	From Donizetti's "LUCIA DI LAMMERMOOR."
5.	Here we Rest (Qui la selva)	From Bellini's "LA SONNAMBULA."
6.	Onward to Battle (Squilli echeggi)	From Verdi's "TROVATORE."
7.	Rataplan (Rataplan)	From Donizetti's "LA FIGLIA DEL REGGIMENTO."
8.	The Gipsy's Star (Vedi! le fosche)	From Verdi's "IL TROVATORE,"
9.	War Song of the Druids (Dell' aura tua profetica)	From Bellini's "NORMA."
10.	In Mercy, hear us! (Cielo clemente)	From Donizetti's "LA FIGLIA DEL REGGIMENTO."
11.	Come to the Fair! (Accorete, giovinette)	From Flotow's "MARTA."
12.	Friendship (Per te d'immenso giubilo)	From Donizetti's "LUCIA DI LAMMERMOOR."

4. HE GAVE THEM HAILSTONES.	8. LET US BREAK THEIR BONDS ASUNDER.	12. THE HORSE AND HIS RIDER.

The present publication has been undertaken with a view to supply a musical want long felt by amateurs and lovers of the organ, i.e., an edition of HANDEL'S CELEBRATED CHORUSES arranged for the organ with pedal obbligato, that shall be effective, combining all the salient parts of the score, and yet at the same time be within the reach of those performers who have not made the instrument their entire study. We have, it is true, many arrangements; some for "Organ or Pianoforte," others by our most eminent organists. The first belong to a past age; the second, in all cases, are only fit for professional performers, and require an amount of skill for their proper execution rarely attained by amateurs. In the present edition, the notation has been carefully studied so as to simplify the reading, whilst the pedals, in all cases of difficulty, have the assistance of the left hand of the performer. Many other points have been considered so as to render the arrangement fitted to the object it has in view—to supply an edition of HANDEL'S CHORUSES for the Organ expressly for the amateur.

THE MUSICAL TIMES,

And Singing Class Circular.

ON THE RHYTHMICAL FORM OF AN ANGLICAN CHANT.

By Dr. Stainer.

It is not hoped that the following remarks will contain any striking novelty, or broach a theory which has not been hitherto suggested elsewhere. But the important position which Chants, double and single, occupy in the services of our Church ought to render a short consideration of their formal structure useful, if not interesting. A single chant, as we all know, consists of two parts, the first of which contains three bars; the second four; the two parts being separated by a double bar, thus:

| 1 | 2 | 3 ‖ 1 | 2 | 3 | 4 ‖

An addition of the number of bars in each division produces the anomalous total of seven. Anomalous, because, as must be generally observed, phrases of seven bars in length, are of but rare occurrence. They are met with no doubt, but only in such positions as point out the fact that they are subordinate to some more elaborate rhythm dependent upon a proper system of grouping such phrases into an extended rhythmical whole. In these cases an effect is produced quite different to that produced by the frequent repetition of a Chant. To follow out this line of thought further, though it leads to most important results, would be to carry the reader far above the comparatively trifling subject in hand, to unexplored regions of musical analysis.

The following is a specimen of a seven-bar phrase in triple measure from Schubert's Pianoforte Sonata, op. 120:—

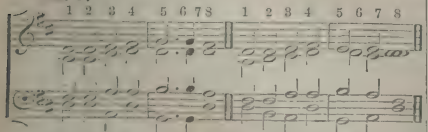
&c. As before.

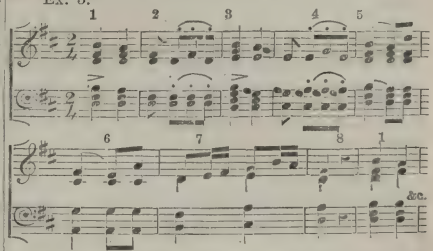
The first bar of the repeated phrase is given in order to show that an eighth bar is not left to be understood in a manner similar to that in which the eighth pulse is understood in a tune called Sevens, thus:

Ex. 2.



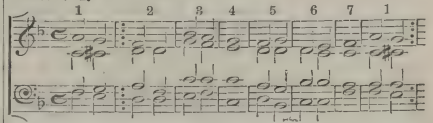
from which it is plain that as far as the structure of the tune is concerned, it might as well be classified among "eights," inasmuch as the time of one half-foot is added to each line of the words at the last note of each line of the music. Whereas, in the phrase quoted from Schubert no imaginary pulse or pulses complete the seven-bar phrase, which can be repeated without a pause, and which when disintegrated consists of twenty-one pulses. It would seem that this completeness is due to some extent to the triple measure, because, if an attempt be made to transfer the theme to duple measure, it falls most naturally into an eight-bar phrase, thus:

Ex. 3.



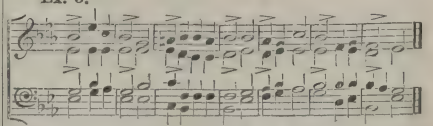
Nor is it easy to construct a seven-bar phrase which will bear repetition as a Chant does; let us attempt it.

Ex. 4.



If this (Ex. 4) be played over several times, care being taken that not more than two beats be allowed to the seventh bar, it will be noticed that our notions of rhythm are entirely broken up, and that an effect is produced quite unlike that of an often repeated Chant. Something is evidently supplied, by the mind of hearers, to the seven bars of a chant, so as to complete its apparently incomplete form. If further proof of this be required, let us write out Robinson's Chant in half time, and play it through tolerably quickly with a strong emphasis on every down-beat, thus:

Ex. 5.



The effect of this (Ex. 5) is of the same unsatisfactory kind as that produced in Ex. 4. It may be safely assumed then that something is supplied by the mind to a Chant. What is this something? We may discover it in two ways by actual experiment, namely, either by tracing how an ordinary eight-bar phrase can be turned into a Chant; or, how a Chant can, without violence being done to its melodic form and its usefulness, be converted into a single or double eight-bar phrase. A correct result in the former case will of course point out the course to be pursued in the latter, and if it be admitted that the Chant has undergone no change of nature by its transformation, the theory of form which we are seeking will have been found. Let us take the following well-known phrase from Mendelssohn's "Elijah":

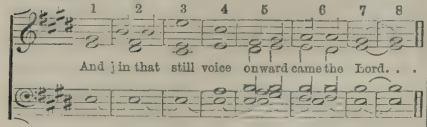
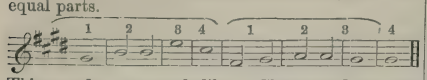
Ex. 6.

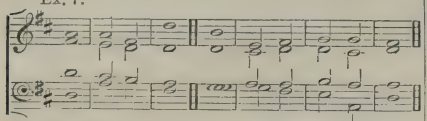


The melody of this divides itself naturally into two equal parts.



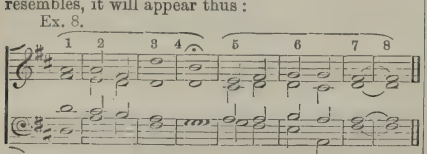
This sounds very much like a Chant, and is in its details so similar to one that a comparison between the two will be easy. Let us compare it with a well known chant by Battishill, to which it bears an accidental melodic resemblance.

Ex. 7.



If it be wished to write out this Chant in a form like that of the passage (Ex. 6), which it so closely resembles, it will appear thus:

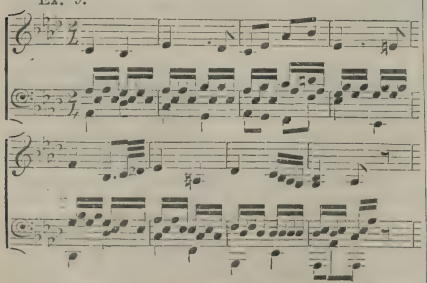
Ex. 8.



Without any substantial alteration our seven-bar Chant thus becomes an eight-bar phrase, the only changes made, being the addition of a final bar, and the removal of the double bar in the middle.

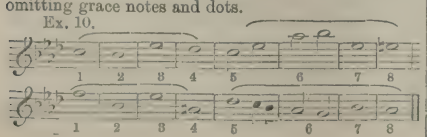
Let us take a double phrase of eight bars, or of four bars of four pulses, which is the same thing, from Beethoven, and convert it into a Chant.

Ex. 9.



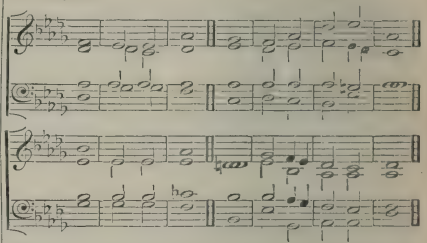
The melody of this may be first thus transferred, omitting grace notes and dots.

Ex. 10.



No injury is done to the salient outlines of his rhythm, although chant-form requires an altered position of the last four semiquavers. According to the theory attempted to be set up, the reciting notes will be Nos. 1 and 4 of each half (compare Ex. 6 and 8). This melody, necessarily transposed for adaptation to voices, but transposed into a key suitable to the gravity of the theme, will appear thus as a Chant.

Ex. 11.

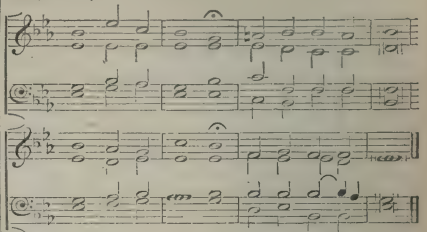


We hope that the fact is, from these examples, tolerably substantiated, that the second and fourth reciting notes belong rhythmically to the previous enclosure in double bars (compare Ex. 10 and 11).

If the reader requires further proof, let him turn "La ci darem" into a Double Chant; and also compare Lupton's excellent chant from Boyce's "By the waters," with its source.

Having turned a Single Chant into a complete musical sentence (see Ex. 8), it is now time to submit a Double Chant to the same process. Robinson's Chant will be presented in this new dress, if unnecessary bars be omitted:

Ex. 12.



If the reader will play this over in strict time, and then compare it with Ex. 5, which preserves intact the rhythm of the Chant as commonly written, he will be sceptical indeed if he does not call this (Ex. 12) a real musical sentence; that (Ex. 5) a sentence from which a something is eliminated.

There remains to be considered this important question, "How do you account for the non-disturbance of the rhythm by the ad libitum retention of the reciting notes?"

Enquiries in this direction are partially answered at once, by stating that the second and fourth reciting notes (see the pauses in Ex. 12) are the end and not the beginning of a limb of the sentence, they can therefore be, by universal assent, extended to any required length without injury to form, whether this extension of their duration is made for purposes of recitation or not; the first and third reciting-notes only remain therefore as requiring some explanation. The explanation thus asked for leads us into what is apparently an entirely new subject, but in reality, one which is connected beyond disseverance with the theory of chant-form, namely, the Theory of Pointing for Chanting.

On examination of a carefully pointed Psalter it will be found that the system is not only of use to keep the voices together after they have left the reciting note, but before it is finished, and that this is attained by marking a syllable or word with an accent thus:

O come let us sing | unto the | Lord || let us heartily re-joice in the | strength of | our sal | vation || or, by using a different fount of type, thus:

O come let us SING, &c.,
let us heartily reJOICE in the, &c.

What then is the object of this importantly marked arsis before the end of the reciting note? That it is important to mark it, is proved by the fact that if a word is not made prominent in the letter-press, choir singers will of their own accord accent a particular syllable or word, often without the smallest regard to its value in the text, just before leaving the reciting-note.

The answer to this, which is obvious to all experienced choir trainers, and which explains also the reason why a retention of the first and third reciting-notes can be tolerated, is, that this accented word is the point from which the rhythm of the first bar commences, or in other words this accent marks the down-beat of the first bar of the musical phrase, thus:

Ex. 13.

Ex. 14.

Ex. 15.

We can now account for the fact of the non-disturbance of the Rhythm by the long-sustained reciting note, by saying, that sufficient of the recitation is left and then accented, so as to determine definitely that point from which Time commences and the Phrase is measured. Aware of this fact, the late Dr. Stephen Elvey, a thoughtful and painstaking pointer of the Psalms, used in his Psalter distinctive types for words to be sustained during the time of a semibreve, as in Ex. 13, and during a dotted minim as in Ex. 14, and so on. And the Rev. H. Pullen has in his Psalter introduced a bar to point out the accent, thus:

O come, let us | sing | unto the | Lord.

But although the second and fourth Reciting notes do not present the same obstacles to the musical metre as do the first and third, yet it must be remembered that they are treated by choir-singers in just the same manner as those already discussed; thus they give a complete measure at the end of each phrase corresponding to that at the beginning of each phrase.

The objections to the form of a Single or Double Chant as attempted to be drawn out here, which is as follows:

will probably be to this effect; 1st, that in ordinary practice it is not found that choirs retain the last note of a single chant or last note of each half a double chant, for the space of two bars during antiphonal chanting; 2nd, that many chants, if converted into the above shape, would present most absurd forms of melody. With regard to the former of these objections, it may be said that choirs do not limit themselves to the one semibreve which closes the seven bars of a chant, but hold it on longer, if not for the full duration of two semibreves. An attempt to beat time to ordinary chanting, allowing exactly two beats for each final bar, will, prove this, and also, if two beats be strictly enforced the effect is most unpleasant.

In answer to the latter objection, it may be said that it might naturally be expected that those writers of chants who took the seven-bar form with its irregularly placed double bars as their model, without enquiring into its real meaning, would produce forms of melody only adapted to that special form. Also, that the use of bars in Chants at all, has been from the very beginning merely for the sake of assisting singers to cut prose into so many slices, and not for the purpose of pointing out to the theorist the rhythmical outline.

Single Chants were in all probability founded on those Gregorian tones which seemed best adapted to the English version of the Psalms. The introduction of bars must have been for many years quite tentative, the many different forms in which old Chants are written helping to prove this to have been the case. The form given in Dr. Boyce's Cathedral Music is well known. The following form, written originally on a six-line stave, occurs in an old book in Magdalen College Library, from which it is transcribed:

Ex. 16. Mr. Hen. Purcell.

This is the well-known Chant now written thus:

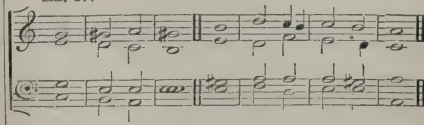
Ex. 17.



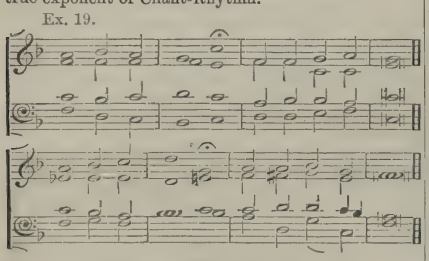
If the method of writing out this Chant, as shown in Ex. 16, be compared with that in Ex. 17, it will be found that the former is perfectly rhythmical, and the latter, as usual with us, thoroughly unrhythmical. The former strongly confirms, though it has not suggested, the views here expressed, and proves that our musical ancestors wrote out a Chant, if possible, as a correct musical phrase, although the additional notes seem to have been merely for the sake of appearances. The Chant just quoted is immediately followed in the same hand-writing by a "Double Tune," by Mr. J. Gakes, written thus:

Ex. 18.

This, evidently in the earliest double-Chant form, is also in itself a strong argument in favour of the theory here laid down.

In conclusion, it may be necessary to say that the transformation of an eight-bar phrase into a chant has been ventured upon here, only for the sake of the conclusions to be drawn from the result, not as signifying approval of such arrangements generally, or as suggesting that the argument can be strengthened by analysing those innumerable arrangements, in which the most trifling similitude seems to have justified the arranger in saying that his handiwork is "from Mr. So-and-so." Lastly, if young composers will try their hands at writing eight-bar phrases on the system here exemplified, and will then transfer them to the common shape, they will find their scope of melody greatly enlarged, and no doubt some really good Chants will result. One of the best chants ever written is here given (though without the permission of its author, E. J. Hopkins), in the form which it is sincerely hoped the reader will feel convinced is a true exponent of Chant-Rhythm.

Ex. 19.



THE ORATORIO CONCERTS.

AT the second Concert, on the 6th ult., the Oratorio was Mendelssohn's "Elijah," the principal vocalists being Madame Cora de Wilhorst, Miss Katharine Poyntz, Miss Marion Severn, Miss Julia Elton, Mr. Raynham (who supplied the place of Mr. Sims Reeves, unavoidably absent from an attack of hoarseness), Messrs. Stedman, Pyatt and T. Beale, and Herr Stockhausen. English audiences have been lately so accustomed to hear the part of "Elijah" sung in one unvarying manner that a purely German reading of the music became in the highest degree interesting; and although, therefore, Herr Stockhausen adhered to his own conception of the character, wisely disregarding the models established by his predecessors in this country, so thoroughly did he realise the intention of the composer—so artistically did he colour with the minutest shade of expression every phase of the music—that he completely carried his hearers with him throughout. The whole of his recitatives were given in masterly style; and the duet with the Widow, the impassioned solo, "Is not His word," and more especially the pathetic air, "It is enough," proved that he had studied the part with a reverence inseparable from the nature of a true artist. In his taunts to the Baal worshippers he was extremely successful, the defiant mocking tone in which he threw out the phrase "Call him louder," being in the highest degree dramatic, and we may also say that in the reiteration of these words it was quite refreshing to hear the notes sung as Mendelssohn has written them, and not as recent Elijahs have altered them, to display a high F. Madame Cora de Wilhorst sang the whole of the soprano music with much earnestness and care, creating the greatest effect in the duet with Elijah, which is more particularly adapted to her voice and method. Miss Julia Elton would have been compelled to repeat her very excellent interpretation of "O rest in the Lord," had she sung it under a conductor less resolute in his desire to resist encores than Mr. Barnby. She was however most enthusiastically applauded, a compliment with which we trust vocalists will in time learn to rest satisfied. Miss Marion Severn gave the music of the Queen, with good dramatic feeling, and Miss Katharine Poyntz in the duet (with Miss Severn) "Zion spreadeth her hands," and in the trio "Lift thine eyes." (with Madame De Wilhorst and Miss Severn) was thoroughly satisfactory. Mr. Raynham created a highly favourable impression in the tenor music, the air, "If with all your hearts," being especially well sung, and the recitatives being declaimed with much intelligence and truth of expression. Messrs. Stedman, Pyatt and T. Beale lent efficient aid in the concerted music, the performance of the double quartett, "For He shall give," amply proving that each part was entrusted to a steady and experienced singer. The choruses were uniformly well sung throughout; indeed there can be little question that so fine a rendering of them has never before been heard in the metropolis. Mr. Barnby has now so thoroughly got the whole of his choristers under the control of his baton that they move like one machine, the unanimity of their movement however being regulated by a sympathy with the music which, with all due allowance for the power of the conductor, can scarcely come from the conductor alone. The choruses, "Blessed are the men," "He, watching over Israel," and "Be not afraid," were perfectly sublime in depth of expression; and the Baal choruses and "Thanks be to God" were given with such extraordinary precision and brilliancy as to create a positive enthusiasm with the audience. The entire performance of the work was indeed a triumph for the Oratorio Concerts. On the 20th ult., at the third concert, the "Messiah" was given, the solo parts being sustained by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Emily Spiller, Madame Laura Baxter, Mr. Sims Reeves, Herr Stockhausen and Mr. T. Beale. Madame Sherrington was in excellent voice, and gave the airs "Rejoice greatly," and "I know that my Redeemer liveth," with true religious fervour, receiving for both the most enthusiastic marks of approbation. Miss Spiller sang "Come unto Him," and "How beautiful are the feet," with so much purity of style and earnestness as to elicit a storm of applause. Madame Laura Baxter, who was at first obviously nervous, gave a very effective rendering of "He was despised," thoroughly enlisting the sympathies of her hearers. Mr. Sims Reeves's singing of the tenor music in this Oratorio has so long been acknowledged as the finest rendering of the part we have ever had that we can add but little to the unqualified admiration which we have so often before expressed upon his singing. We may say, however, that the Recitative and Air, "Thy rebuke hath broken," and "Behold and see," were so exquisitely given as to create an effect upon the audience almost too deeply felt to be expressed in audible applause, although it need scarcely be said that such outward demonstrations of approval were loud and universal. The bass part was sung to perfection by Herr Stockhausen, the air, "But who may abide" (too often given to a contralto), and "Why do the nations," displaying his voice and style to the utmost advantage. A good word must also be said for Mr. T. Beale, who (being called upon at a few minutes notice, in consequence of the hoarseness of Herr Stockhausen) gave the trying air, "The trumpet shall sound" (with Mr. T Harper's unrivalled trumpet obbligato) so excellently as to assure us of his power to take the first parts in Oratorios, should he wish to devote himself to this style of music. All the choruses were sung with the utmost precision and effect, "And the glory of the Lord," "For unto us," "All we, like sheep," the "Hallelujah" and "Worthy is the Lamb" especially testing the highest powers of the choir with the happiest result. In the "Hallelujah" the sopranos were remarkably fine; and where the full tone of the choir was required, the effect was unimpaired by the slightest roughness in the quality of any department. Mr. Joseph Barnby, as usual, conducted, and Mr. F. A. W. Docker presided at the organ. The Hall at both concerts was crowded in every part.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The revival of Donizetti's sparkling Opera "Don Pasquale" at this establishment, enabled Madlle. Marimon to appear in a part thoroughly suited both to her voice and style. The vivacious Norina is by no means an easy character either to sing or act, and it may be anticipated therefore that Madlle. Marimon scarcely fulfilled all the requirements desired by an audience so familiar with the many excellent Norinas who have from time to time appeared. The music was, however, thrown off with an ease and brilliancy which elicited the warmest marks of approbation; and Madlle. Marimon added one more to her list of successes, although the exacting few amongst her admirers might still indulge a hope that time and experience would enable her to keep more within artistic control those exceptionally fine powers with which nature has endowed her. Signor Fancelli was encored in "Com' è gentil;" Signor Mendioroz played and sang the part of Malatesta with much spirit; and Signor Borella gave as fidgetty and exaggerated an impersonation of Don Pasquale as Buffo singers have latterly accustomed us to. The theatre closed on the 9th ult., the Opera being "Der Freischütz." The work was not very strongly cast, with the exception of the Agata of Madlle. Titiens, which was in every respect an excellent performance; indeed, we have scarcely ever heard the Scena "Softly sighs" so well sung. Signor Foli was Caspar, and Signor Vizzani, Max. The performance terminated with the National Anthem.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The competition for the Westmorland Scholarship, the Potter Exhibition, and the Prize Violin, took place on Tuesday, the 19th ult., at the Institution in Tenterden Street, Hanover Square, the examiners being the Principal (Sir Sterndale Bennett), Mr. F. R. Cox, Mr. W. Dorrell, Signor Garcia, Mr. John Hullah, Mr. H. C. Lunn, Mr. G. A. Macfarren, Mr. Walter Macfarren, Dr. Steggall, and Mr. Henry Holmes. The results were as follows:—Westmorland Scholarship, Miss Annie Butterworth, elected; Miss Jessie Jones and Miss Harford, highly commended. Potter Exhibition, Mr. William A. Howells, elected; Master Henry Walker, highly commended. Prize Violin, adjudged to Mr. W. Frye Parker. Highly commended, and to receive a prize of a violin bow, Mr. Charles A. Howard.

We are requested to state that Mr. H. M. M. Jenkins has been appointed Conductor to the Royal Small Arms Factory Choral Society, Enfield.

The annual competitive literary and musical meeting of the Welsh inhabitants of the metropolis was held at the Vestry Hall, Chelsea, during the past month, Mr. Watkin Williams, M.P., in the chair, supported by Mr. Morgan Lloyd (Barrister), Mr. Brinley Richards, and several other gentlemen connected with Wales. One of the objects of the meeting was to provide funds for the Welsh chapel in Sloane Street; but the more immediate purpose of the gathering was to distribute prizes to the successful competitors for Welsh poetry, music, and literature. During the evening several songs were sung by Miss E. Lloyd, Miss Evans, and Miss Edmonds. Mr. Brinley Richards played (on a splendid Broadwood grand piano) a fantasia, introducing some national Welsh melodies; it was encored, but Mr. Richards begged to be excused because the programme was a long one. The last named gentleman alluded to the want of national colouring in the selection, and expressed a hope that Lady Llanover would send her famous harper from Llanover to their next meeting, and so give them the pleasure of hearing their national music on the Welsh harp. The meeting was terminated by a loyal "demonstration," for when Miss Edmonds sang "God bless the Prince of Wales," the whole audience stood up and joined heartily in singing the chorus. Mr. Barrett accompanied the vocal music very skilfully. Votes of thanks were given to the president, to Mr. Brinley Richards, Miss Edmonds, and to all who gave their services, which we should add, were gratuitous. The excellent arrangements of the evening and the success of the meeting, were due to the energetic and patriotic zeal of Mr. Lloyd Davies, and Mr. Isaac Williams.

At a concert given on Tuesday evening, the 12th ult., at the Pimlico Rooms, in aid of the South-Western Dispensary, under the management of its Secretary, Mr. H. Venman, the loyal feeling of the audience was manifested by their rising en masse when it was announced that the air "God bless the Prince of Wales" would be sung to words specially written for the occasion, praying for the restoration to health of His Royal Highness, and for Divine comfort to the afflicted Princess, and other members of the Royal Family. The entire audience remained standing during its performance, and observed the most profound silence. The words were impressive, and rendered by the singers with deep feeling.

A concert was given by the London Society for teaching the Blind to read on Friday the 8th ult., at the Upper Avenue Road, Regent's Park, under the direction of the able and indefatigable Professor of Music to the Institution, Mr. Edwin Barnes. The programme, as usual, contained an excellent selection of classical music, all of which, especially the part-songs, the selection from the Messiah, and three of Gounod's compositions, were admirably rendered. The chair was taken by the Rev. Robinson Duckworth, M.A.

The ninth concert of the winter series, given by Messrs. Baucutt and Stem, at the Pimlico Rooms, took place on the 11th ult. Special praise must be awarded to Madame Annetta Frances, for her brilliant singing, her last song narrowly escaping a double encore. The other artists were Miss Rosa Gearin, Mr. J. C. Bird (English concertina), and Miss Powell, who proved a most able pianist. The hall was well filled.

Mr. W. H. Bamford, organist of St. James's, Camberwell, gave his annual concert at the Angell Town Institution, Brixton, on the evening of Thursday, the 7th ult., before a large audience. The vocalists engaged, were Miss Blanche Cole, Mdlle. Gondi, Miss A. Newton, Miss Emily Pittard, Mr. George Perren, Mr. T. Rogers, Mr. Theodore Distin, and the London Orpheus Quartett; Pianoforte—Mr. W. H. Bamford and Mr. John Harrison; Mr. Bamford's playing both of Mendelssohn's Capricio in A minor, and Lindsay Sloper's Fantasia on English airs was admirable, and elicited two encores. The concert was in every respect thoroughly successful, and the numerous encores throughout the evening testified to the satisfaction of the audience.

On Wednesday evening, the 6th ult., the College of Musicians gave its second Soirée at Shaftesbury Hall, Aldersgate Street, at which a Paper upon the Status of the Musical Composer was read by Mr. J. J. Haite, and vocal and instrumental performances filled up the evening. The singers were Mdme. Brook, Mdlle. Enrique, and Mr. Herbert Carter; Mr. A. F. Mullen played several solos upon the pianoforte, and also accompanied the vocal music. The attendance was, as usual, large.

A CONCERT was given by the members of the Victoria Park Choral Union at their room, Wetherell Road, South Hackney, on Wednesday evening, the 6th ult., when "A Christmas Cantata," by Dr. Fowle, was well rendered. Among the part-music in the miscellaneous portion of the programme were Bishop's glees, "Now by day's retiring lamp" and "Oh, by rivers;" "Since first I saw your face" was carefully sung as a quartet by Misses White and Genery, Messrs. Morgan and Dudley. The soloists were Mrs. Wells, who sang Horn's "Cherry Ripe," Miss Genery, who was highly effective in "I love the merry sunshine," Mr. Rowe, who gave Kelly's "Our Sailors and our Ships," and Hatton's "Homeward Bound," and Mr. Musto, who sang "The Pilgrim of Love." Mr. George Wells conducted, and Mr. T. M. Clark accompanied.

THE members of the Greville Choral Society gave a concert in the school-room attached to Greville Place Church, on Thursday evening, the 7th ult., which was well attended. Mendelssohn's unfinished Opera "Loreley" was an important feature in the programme. The solos were sustained by Mrs. Sharp in an admirable manner. The second part was miscellaneous, and included several concerted pieces and vocal solos, all of which were given with much effect. Mr. Sharp officiated as conductor, and Mr. Byrom as accompanist.

THE St. George's Glee Union gave its Monthly Open Meeting at the Pimlico Rooms on the 1st ult. The selection of part-songs, &c., included the old favourites, "Oh, who will o'er the downs," "T'other morning very early" and Bishop's "Tramp Chorus," which were well received by an audience filling the large Hall. The catch "'Twas you, sir" was capitally rendered by Messrs. Coles, Livington and Ellis, and encored. Miss Horder in "L'Ardita," and Mr. Thurley Beale thoroughly earned their encores. The other vocalists were Mrs. Mason and Miss Brown, a young lady rapidly rising into favour at these concerts. The pianoforte solos were both well chosen and effectively rendered by Miss White. The conductor was Mr. W. H. Bridges.

THE North London Sacred Harmonic Society gave a very successful performance of the "Messiah" on Tuesday evening, the 28th November, at the Methodist Free Church, Willow Street, Finsbury. The soloists were Miss L. Fonsica, who acquitted herself very creditably, more particularly in the air "Rejoice greatly;" Miss Hulford, Messrs. Perry, Froome and Hamilton. The choruses were sung with a precision that was highly creditable. Mr. Bent was the leader, and Mr. Tomling (in place of Mr. Boyce, who was absent through indisposition), conducted.

A VERY interesting lecture on Mozart was given by Mr. R. Forsey Brion at the Congregational Church, Tolmer Square, on the 18th ult. The illustrations from "Idomeneo," "Figaro" the Twelfth Mass, and the "Requiem," were rendered with excellent effect by Miss Emily Brion, assisted by several amateurs, and a choir of about fifty voices. The slow and last movement of the Pianoforte Sonata in F were admirably played by Miss Florence Wilkie. The lecture, which was given in connection with the Tolmer Square Mutual Improvement Society, was listened to with much attention, and at its conclusion a vote of thanks to Mr. Brion was proposed by G. Sowerby, sen., Esq., Chairman.

THE City Musical and Elocutionary Society gave its twelfth evening concert on Friday, the 1st ult. Principal vocalists — Miss Isabella Glennie and Miss Marienne Potter, Mr. Neale, and Mr. Knight Ashton; pianoforte, Miss Marienne Potter; conductor, Mr. F. M. Wenborn. The choruses were efficiently rendered, and the concert was highly successful in every respect.

THE "National Music Meetings" to be held at the Crystal Palace during the summer of this year (an advertisement of which appears in our present number), will doubtless create an active competition amongst musical executants of all classes. The prize to be awarded is stated to be a "work of ornamental art of the value of one thousand guineas;" and the announcement that a sum of money from the nett proceeds of the project will be handed over to the Royal Academy of Music and the Royal Society of Musicians may be accepted as an earnest of the desire on the part of the promoters of the undertaking to further by every means in their power the interest of art and artists in this country.

AN active controversy as to the authorship of the well-known melody "Home, sweet home," has been carried on in several periodicals during the past month. It was generally supposed to have been a Sicilian air, introduced by the late Sir H. R. Bishop in the Opera of "Clari; or, the Maid of Milan;" but Mr. J. J. Emery, who was for forty years with Goulding, D'Almaine and Co., the publishers of the compositions of Bishop, says in the Daily Telegraph that in a work entitled the "Melodies of Various Nations," the editor (Sir H. R. Bishop) not being able to find a Sicilian tune suitable, "wrote the melody of 'Home, sweet home,' sunk his own name, and called it a Sicilian air." The words now identified with the tune were supplied by Mr. J. Howard Payne, when Miss M. Tree introduced the song in "Clari." Its excessive popularity induced several music-publishers to issue their own editions of it, on the supposition that, being originally printed as a Sicilian air, it could not be copyright; and after much legal discussion on the matter both publishers and composer withdrew their claim to the melody. If Mr. Emery's statement be correct (and we really see no reason to doubt it) the question is satisfactorily answered.

THE second of the four classical concerts organised by Mr. W. H. Monk was given at the Assembly Rooms, Defoe Road, Stoke Newington, on the 12th ult., before a highly appreciative audience. One of the most interesting features in the programme was a Sonata in C for pianoforte and violin, by Mr. G. A. Macfarren, performed for the first time, the executants being Mr. Walter Macfarren and Mr. Henry Holmes. This composition was listened to with the deepest attention, and every movement was received with spontaneous and well-deserved applause. Haydn's Quartet in F (op. 77, No. 2), for two violins, viola, and violoncello, and Schumann's Quintet (op. 44) in E flat, for pianoforte, two violins, viola, and violoncello, were admirably played and warmly applauded, the latter work creating an effect, which proves beyond doubt that Schumann's compositions are gradually winning a high place in the estimation of music-lovers in this country. The concerted music was agreeably relieved by two graceful solos by Mr. Walter Macfarren, excellently performed by the composer, and an "Andante" and "Allegro Moderato" for the violin, by Handel, so well played by Mr. Henry Holmes as to elicit an encore. The vocalists were Miss Banks and Miss Agnes Drummond, who were especially effective in the Abbate Clari's Madrigalian Duet, "Cantando un di." Mr. W. H. Monk accompanied the vocal music with much care and judgment.

AN evening concert was given at the City of London College, Sussex Hall, Leadenhall Street, on Thursday, the 7th ult., the principal vocalists being Miss Annie Sinclair, Miss Alice Barnett, Mr. Stedman, Mr. Thurley Beale and Mr. R. Limpus; solo violin, Herr Lütl. An encore was awarded to Miss Sinclair for her excellent singing of "Ah fors' è lui;" a compliment also paid to Mr. Stedman, whose refined interpretation of "Good-bye, sweetheart," was a marked feature in the programme. Miss Alice Barnett (a pupil of Mrs. Macfarren) displayed a good contralto voice and excellent style in two songs; Mr. Thurley Beale gave Mendelssohn's "I'm a roamer" with his usual success; and Mr. R. Limpus was warmly and deservedly applauded in a couple of Buffo songs. Mrs. Limpus and Herr Lüti also contributed two pianoforte and violin duets, which were received with much favour. The concert was under the able direction of Mr. Stedman.

A CONCERT, under the direction of Mr. Stedman, was given at the Russell Institution, Great Coram Street, Russell Square, on the 11th ult. Miss Annie Sinclair, Miss Emily Pittard, Mr. Stedman, Mr. Thurley Beale and Mr. R. Limpus were the principal singers, all of whom were highly successful; Miss Pittard displaying an excellent contralto voice, and receiving an encore for one of her songs; Miss Sinclair eliciting much applause in all her solos; Mr. Stedman giving "The Thorn" with much earnest expression; and Messrs. Thurley Beale and Limpus creating a marked effect in songs with which their names are already intimately associated. The excellent pianoforte performance of Miss Josephine Lawrence was thoroughly appreciated; and one of the most successful pieces of the evening was Barnby's Part-Song "Sweet and low," which was given as a quartet.

WE read the following paragraph in the "Paris Bulletin," a journal devoted, as it states, to "literary and artistic correspondence," and published in one large sheet:—"A Bulletin administratif from the Minister of Public Instruction, acquaints the Musical world in Paris with the decisions taken for the future management of the Conservatoire. The principal points are that studies will be supervised by two distinct committees, one for musical instruction, the other for dramatic training. None will be admitted who have not gone through a prior examination by a competent jury formed of members of the 'Institut' professors, artists and composers."

A MISCELLANEOUS concert was given on the evening of Wednesday, the 13th ult., at the Victoria Hall, Archer Street, Bayswater, by Miss Florence Ashton (contralto), pupil of Signor Lago. There was a good attendance, the hall being well filled. The vocalists were Miss Ellen Glanville, Mdlle. Leoni, Mr. Frank Elmore, Mr. Powell, and Signor Monari Rocca; Miss Lucy McManus and Miss Sophy Heilbron, pianists; Herr Schuberth, violoncello; Conductors, Herr Schuberth and Signor Lago. The violoncello solos by Herr Schuberth comprised two of his own compositions, and an interesting "Musette" by Offenbach. A new duet composed by Mdme. Sievers, "Dunque giammai," was well received. Signor Rocca elicited much applause for his Buffo singing; and Miss Ellen Glanville was encored in Bishop's "Tell me, my heart." Mattei's popular "Non torno," capitally sung by Miss Florence Ashton, was re-demanded, and also Randegger's "Joyous Life." Miss Sophy Heilbron played with her usual brilliancy, and was compelled to re-appear after each of her solos.

MR. JOSEPH THOMAS COOPER, Organist and Choir-Master of Christ Church, Newgate Street, has been elected a member of the Philharmonic Society of London.

ON Tuesday evening, the 19th ult., a performance of Christmas Carols was given by the Choir of Craven Hill Congregational Church, Bayswater, under the direction of Mr. W. H. Lee Davies, the organist. The Carols were very successfully rendered, especially one by Mrs. J. W. Bliss, which earned well-merited applause. Solos were given with much effect during the evening by Messrs. Robertson and Chilton, Masters Gray, Adams, and Foster. Mr. Oldknow accompanied. The performances terminated with "God bless the Prince of Wales," and "God save the Queen."

RIVINGTONS: LONDON, OXFORD, AND CAMBRIDGE.

A Theory of Harmony, founded on the tempered scale. By John Stainer, Mus. Doc., M.A., Magd. Coll., Oxon.

PERSONS dwelling outside the teaching world of music may wonder that the most contradictory treatises on the theory of the art are not only constantly written by eminent professors, but cordially accepted and warmly eulogised, because it must appear to them that if a system founded upon a definite set of principles be pronounced true, another system founded upon an opposing set of principles must necessarily be false. But this feeling of wonder will disappear when the fact is proclaimed that no work on "Harmony" (as it is popularly called) has yet maintained its ground as an acknowledged text-book. Perronet Thompson has so thoroughly proved that nothing can be really called music that is not founded upon an enharmonic scale that he is driven to the dilemma of ignoring the works of some of the greatest writers; for as tempered instruments were good enough for these composers, unless they had a keen perception of some abstract truth underlying the imperfect system to which they adhered, which regulated their treatment of the chords, it would be impossible that their works should live when our ears become sufficiently tuned to reject the false intonation of the tempered scale. Considering, therefore, that we are still battling about the very elements from which modern harmony is derived, it is not to be wondered at that all kinds of systems should be put forth; and as, in a transition age, every intelligent thinker has a right to a hearing, we cordially welcome Dr. Stainer's book as a valuable contribution to the stock of works from which some day, we trust, a theory may be evolved which shall receive universal recognition. As will be seen by the title, Dr. Stainer bases his method upon the tempered scale. This, at least, is becoming practical, for, as our author truly says, it is useless to deduce the laws of harmony from a series of natural harmonics to govern the progression of chords made up of tempered intervals; but it becomes a grave question whether this desire to be thoroughly popular is not as much an error on the one side, as the desire to be thoroughly scientific is on the other. In the preface, we read, "At the present time it is enough, if by analyzing music as it is actually found, some generalisations can be arrived at which shall help the student to place clearly before his mind the chords which a composer has at his disposal, how they have hitherto been used, and how they may in future be used." Unquestionably this should be the chief aim of all theoretical writers, but so radical a reformer as Dr. Stainer, in his desire to sweep away existing absurdities, is apt perhaps to think more of the student than the art. For instance, all musicians will agree with our author that it is quite time to get rid of our worship for what are called "perfect" intervals, but we doubt whether any good is obtained by abolishing their designation, for infinitely superior as are thirds and sixths in harmony, their very power of being either major or minor prevents the possibility of their being called "perfect." It is always a pleasing task to sift the arguments of a theorist who has so intelligently and thoroughly thought out his subject as Dr. Stainer, and our objections, therefore, will we hope be received by him as the result of a careful consideration of his system; but ingeniously as he maintains the soundness of his assertion that "chords are formed by adding thirds together, the thirds being major or minor according to the nature of the scale from which they are taken," we cannot admit its scientific truth. It is certain that a perfect fifth by itself "does not give us the means of judging whether we are in the major or minor mode," but as it cannot be altered without disturbing the concordant nature of the harmony, it gives a strength and solidity to the chord which the variable third can never do. Passing on through the explanation of the various discords, the derivation and treatment of which spring logically from his premises, Dr. Stainer gives us some very able remarks upon pedal notes (a subject hitherto but imperfectly handled in most theoretical works), and expresses himself with remarkable clearness in describing modulation. Some of his observations, too, upon the duty of a creative artist may, we hope be taken to heart by young composers. "If he wish to compose for the art," he says, "a slightly manipulated reproduction of that refined use of dominant discords which has enervated a large amount of musical literature will be his most profitable employment. But if he compose for the love of art, he will after a thorough acquaintance with the best works of great masters, commencing with the ageless giants, Bach and Handel, and ending with Wagner, search carefully for the new path, and strive after progress." The very happy extracts from the compositions of the best writers throughout his book show that Dr. Stainer has not theorised without well examining his facts; and we may also add that some carefully prepared exercises for students are given at the end of the work. We can scarcely doubt that even those who dissent from many of the author's views will read his treatise both with pleasure and profit.

STRAHAN AND CO.

Music and Morals. By the Rev. H. R. Haweis, M.A.

HAD either of the four "books" into which this work is divided been published separately, we think that the author would have had a fairer chance of commanding that respect from the real lovers of music which so searching and intelligent a critic has a right to anticipate. But, although much contained in the book has already appeared in various magazines, Mr. Haweis has thought proper to ignore this fact, and put forth a volume in four distinct parts, "Philosophical," "Biographical," "Instrumental" and "Critical," the title of the work of course only applying to the first section. Inviting judgment, therefore, upon his labours in the cause of art as a thoroughly logical thinker, our author must not be surprised to find that his invitation has been accepted; and that those who read with that interest and attention which the excellently written opening "book" must excite, should eagerly peruse the remaining three to discover whether the opinions there expressed are legitimately deduced from the premises at first laid down. Passing over the clever remarks upon "Emotions and Objects," we come to his assertion that "to set words to music, as in Oratorio or Opera, or any kind of song, is in fact to mix two arts together. On the whole a striking effect may be produced; but in reality it is at the expense of the purity of each art." This at least is a theory; and whether we agree or disagree with it, we have a right to expect that the propounder of it will, in his critical remarks upon established works, endeavour to prove its truth and soundness. But how are we astonished when, turning to the next "book," we find these observations upon Handel's "Messiah." After saying that the words "Comfort ye my people," "fall like a refreshing day-spring from on high" (an effect in which we presume the music will be admitted to have some share), he speaks of the multitude of freemen sending forth the one thought that possesses them, "The glory of the Lord—the glory of the Lord shall be revealed." In "Who may abide the day of His coming?" he says, "the voice scales up to a high pitch," and dwells with a kind of awful suspense and fascination on the word "appeareth." The chorus, "All we like sheep," is stated to represent "with marvellous fidelity the constant and hopeless wanderings of the sheep," and "Their sound is gone out into all lands" is, we are told, "as powerfully descriptive as the going astray of the sheep themselves." Again, in speaking of Mendelssohn's "Elijah," the union of the music with the words is continually dwelt upon as the truest method of deepening their meaning to an audience, as an instance of which we may cite the following observation upon the chorus, "Behold God the Lord passed by": "We have known persons [in a state of rapt excitement upon hearing this chorus for [the first time, break out into a cold sweat at the words, smitten like tongues of fire from the rocks, "But the Lord was not in the tempest." As these extracts are from the same volume, we should like to know whether Mr. Haweis believes in his theory or his facts. His criticisms upon the works of the standard composers are generally good; but in spite of his enthusiasm upon the art, there is an air of "amateurishness" about many of his opinions which cannot be veiled; as, for example, where, in giving high praise to Handel's "Israel," he says, "elsewhere he has produced longer recitatives and more pathetic arias, nowhere has he written finer tenor songs than "The Enemy saith," or finer duets than "The Lord is a man of war." Of the "Biographical" part we have little to say. Most of the facts therein stated are taken from books with which musicians are well acquainted, although here and there we have some forcible remarks which prove that their author has very acute observation, and understands how to express himself in felicitous language. Speaking of English music, Sir William Sterndale Bennett is deservedly eulogised, but Sir H. R. Bishop, John Barnett and many others are passed by as if no such persons ever existed. We agree with his remarks upon the absurdity of introducing vocal solos in an area too large for the sound to travel; but why should Mr. Haweis endeavour to prove this by a personal illustration? "Mr. Sims Reeves," he says, "at the Crystal Palace, is no better than a penny trumpet in Westminster Abbey." To say nothing of the bad taste of this remark, it is not true; for of all the solo vocalists who are accustomed to sing at the Crystal Palace, no one makes his voice more thoroughly penetrate every portion of the auditorium than Mr. Reeves. The "Instrumental" book comprises some valuable information upon violins, pianofortes, and church bells, the last-named subject being very ably treated; and the fourth "book," headed "Music in England," contains some amusing but somewhat weakly-written observations upon the shortcomings of amateurs, and descriptions of several of our street-bands. Much of the volume seems hurriedly written, as if the author had scarcely time to refer to authorities for facts. For instance, Pelham Humphreys is invariably called Pelham Humphrey, Handel's "Il Pensieroso" is always named "Il Penseroso," and the air from the "Messiah" is called "How beautiful are their feet." But these are trifling errors compared with the following quotation from page 99: "Poor Weber, in his famous 'Mermaid' Song in Oberon, has the first verse thus:

'Softly sighs the voice of evening,
Stealing through yon willow groves.'

And in the next he has to set the same exquisitely peaceful melody to the words—

'Oh, what terrors fill my bosom!
Where, my Rodolph, dost thou roam?'"

Without stopping to enquire who is to be held accountable for such an extraordinary mistake as this, there can be little doubt that the author must suffer for it; for few musical readers will be able to see without a smile the impassioned Scena of Agata, in "Der Freischütz," confounded with the charming little song of the Mermaid in "Oberon." We may add, in conclusion, that the work is well got up, and that an additional interest is given to the volume by fac-similes of the hand-writing of several of the most eminent composers.

TRÜBNER AND CO.

Essay on the Poetic Signification of Beethoven's Sonatas, with a slight Introductory Sketch on Music. By F. E. Jencken, M.D.

THE passion for describing the meaning of certain musical works which their composers have wisely left undescribed appears an epidemic amongst amateurs: and Dr. Jencken, in his pamphlet, publicly proclaims that he has caught the infection. His "Sketch on Music," although containing nothing that has not been said hundreds of times before, is earnestly written, and proves that he has a real love for the art; but surely he should be content to play or listen to the Sonatas of Beethoven without rushing into print to tell us what were the composer's intentions in writing every movement, as if he alone were privileged to impart such information. Even supposing, for instance, that the "Sonata pathétique" should not be allowed to take rank on its own unaided merit as a purely musical work, will such a synopsis as this help to enhance its beauty? "GRAVE. 'Tis midnight, the autumn wind sighs through the lofty trees, scattering their withered leaves on the soft and mossy ground; countless stars sparkle in the sable sky," &c. "ALLEGRO CON BRIO. The calm thus engendered is, alas, but of short duration; tumultuous feelings and raging passions rend the afflicted soul," &c. "LARGO. The passions have subsided; the soul no longer troubled by wild emotions, a peaceful quiet steals over the agitated heart," &c. "RONDO. Life flows in a broader stream, and though at times interrupted by a tinge of sadness (the remembrance of the tempestuous past serves but to strengthen the will, inspiring man to nobler resolves and stronger activity." Space prevents our giving the whole of these descriptions, and our author must forgive us therefore for breaking the current of his poetical thoughts with an "&c."; but we have quoted enough to let our readers know what Dr. Jencken believes that Beethoven intended in this popular Sonata. It is curious that any person who can make the assertion that every composer is ruled by a dominant idea in the conception of his subject which is "not always clear to himself," should imagine that this idea can be made perfectly clear by his less gifted hearers; it would be infinitely more logical to believe that this very indefiniteness is one of the greatest beauties of a musical work, and to counsel all intelligent students merely to listen and admire. "Enough I believe has been said," writes Dr. Jencken, "to enable those who take a delight in Beethoven's compositions, and are gifted with a lively imagination, to discover, in a great measure, the leading idea prevalent in each." We sincerely trust that those who "take a delight" in the works not only of Beethoven, but of any composer, will attempt to do nothing of the kind. Whenever music is intended to be "descriptive," such intention has been sufficiently indicated by the author; and even if we could agree upon what has been a composer's "leading idea," we have no right to accept such poetical imaginings as truths. That such agreement, however, is not likely to take place may be inferred from the fact, within our own experience, that one of Mendelssohn's "Lieder ohne worte" is sometimes called a "Funeral March" and sometimes a "Drinking Song."

NOVELLO, EWER AND CO.

La Sonnambula. An Opera, in two acts. Composed by Vincenzo Bellini. Edited and translated into English by Natalia Macfarren.

As prejudice in favour of a well-known English translation, however bad such version may be, is likely to linger with the general public longer in operatic than in any other musical works, the editor tells us in a preliminary note to "La Sonnambula," that the words which have grown so familiar to us in connection with the most popular pieces in the Opera are, as a rule, by no means singable, "the monotony of rhymes in eeling and eeming (indeed throughout of rhymes ending in ing, out of all proportion to their prevalence in ordinary English), and the many heavy syllables on notes that should be light," causing a want of harmoniousness between the music and the text which cannot but prove detrimental to the effect of a lyrical work of this class. At the expense occasionally of accuracy of translation, when the sound of the English words seemed adverse to that of the music, Mrs. Macfarren has therefore endeavoured as far as possible to follow the feeling of the composer by selecting words that could be sung easily to the notes, and we are bound to say that in this somewhat arduous task she has been thoroughly successful. The interest always awakened by the little village story upon which the Opera is founded, and the extreme melodiousness of the music combine to make this work as popular with the vocalists as it is with the audience; and the edition before us, so carefully supervised in its minutest details, cannot fail to be welcomed as a valuable hand-book for the frequenters of our lyrical establishments, the indications of the score materially enhancing the worth of the book to intelligent listeners.

Two pieces, for the Pianoforte:—No. 1, Twilight; No. 2 Sunshine. Composed by Agnes Zimmermann.

THESE two graceful pieces will be most acceptable both to players and teachers who are wearied with the "music of the period;" for although, as in the literary works of an accomplished scholar, classical knowledge is never obtruded, that power which can only result from a severe mental training sufficiently underlies the compositions to give a solidity even to the simplest phrases. If it were not that the skilled workmanship of an artist can invest trifles with the highest interest, the many light pieces thrown off on the spur of the moment by some of our best composers would long ago have been forgotten; and it cannot be too often said, therefore, that a wise discretion should be exercised in the selection of what is popularly called "drawing-room music," for notwithstanding that the veriest rubbish of the day may be comprised under this heading, it will also include many minor works of the greatest writers which are now universally accepted as "classical." No. 1, "Twilight," has a flowing and melodious subject in true sympathy with the title, if it be allowed that the effects of nature are capable of being represented by sound. A quaint character is given to the theme by a seventh on the subdominant, followed by a $\frac{6}{5}$, which is sufficiently emphasised to make its repetition a point of interest. The piece, although short, contains much variety, and the passages, as may be expected from the experience of the composer, lie well under the hand. No. 2, "Sunshine," is based on an elegant theme, commencing on a pedal bass, the melody being sung with the upper fingers of the right hand almost throughout. The modulations are extremely well written, and the contrast of the legato subject accompanied with a staccato bass, has an excellent effect. We can scarcely doubt that these sketches, slight as they are, will command a worthy place, even in the crowded state of the music market.

Cradle Song, for the Pianoforte.
Les Etincelles; Galop.
Composed by Walter Macfarren.

Two welcome contributions to the chamber-music of the day, by a composer who has already earned his position as a writer of more elaborate works. The "Cradle Song" commences with a placid and charmingly-harmonised subject, which is followed by an elegant theme with a triplet accompaniment, the recurrence of which, in the subdominant, after some appropriate episodical phrases, is extremely happy. The piece is by no means difficult, but it will demand a refined touch and an intelligent appreciation of the author's meaning to give it due effect. The Galop is one of the most sparkling pieces we have seen from Mr. Macfarren's pen. The syncopated theme in the left hand, after the double bar, with the characteristic semiquaver accompaniment (afterwards imitated in the bass), is a striking point; and the brilliant octave passages which occur before the final appearance of the principal subject, give much vitality to the movement. This really excellent Galop will no doubt find many warm admirers during the present festive season.

Gondoliera, pour Piano. Par Siegfried Jacoby.

IT is difficult to write an original Barcarolle, but the composer of the present piece has a right to claim a certain amount of merit for having in some degree deviated from the beaten track. His piece opens effectively with a short introduction, leading with much freshness to the first subject, which is both flowing and melodious. The second theme, although more conventional, is extremely pleasing and well harmonised. The composition is replete with grace and elegance throughout, and deserves to find favour with pianists who have cultivated a refined touch.

Children's Songs. Arranged, with Pianoforte accompaniments, by T. S. Gleadhill and John Thomson.

THESE Children's Songs are published in two elegant volumes, one being devoted to sacred and the other to secular pieces. The aim of the publishers has been to supply young people, from ten to fifteen years of age with a collection of vocal music wedded to good healthy words: and this object has, we think, been satisfactorily carried out, the only danger being that some of the verses may be considered too old for the juveniles, and others too juvenile for the elder children. "From ten to fifteen years of age" is the very time when little people long to assert their individuality in the house; and when once a child begins to feel superior to toys, we doubt whether he would like to warble "Twinkle, twinkle, little star" in the drawing-room, or sing the "Baby March" for the delight of his admiring parents: indeed we believe that he would infinitely prefer to account philosophically for the appearance of the star by a quotation from his latest lesson on Astronomy; and, instead of glorying in the tottering steps of his baby relative, that he would be delighted to banish it to the nursery, with the rest of the "children." It may be said, however, that both in the sacred and secular series, many songs will be found which cannot fail to become favourites with youthful singers; and as the accompaniments are all easy to play, the services of "grown up" performers need not be called into requisition. The words and music of some of the pieces are published (as we are informed) in this work for the first time; others are well-known songs, and many are written to melodies by the best composers, as instances of which we may mention Beethoven's Air with variations in G, for the Pianoforte, and Mendelssohn's Two-part Song, "Oh wert thou in the cauld blast," the subjects of both these compositions being united to excellent and most appropriate words. The work is in every respect well got up, and will no doubt be extensively used as a gift-book for the New Year.

Brief Summary of Country News.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

BAYSWATER.—On Wednesday evening, the 13th ult., Miss Florence Ashton gave an evening concert at the Victoria Hall; artists:—Miss Ellen Glanville, who was encored in Bishop's "Tell me, my heart," Madlle. Anita Leoni, Signor Rocca, Mr. Frank Elmore, and Mr. Powell; solo pianoforte, Madlle. Sophia Heilbron; conductors, Herr Schuberth and Signor Lago. The concert was well attended.

BIRKENHEAD.—On the 15th ult. the members of the Birkenhead Choral Society gave their annual performance of Handel's Oratorio, the Messiah, in the Workman's Hall. The principal artists were Miss Cleiland, of Manchester, Mrs. George Keef, of Liverpool, Mr. H. T. Bywater, of the Birmingham Town Hall concerts, and Mr. Tom Kempton, of Trinity College, Cambridge. There was a full band and chorus of about eighty performers, the leader of the band being Mr. Lawson, and Mr. Powell solo trumpeter. Mr. Parry ably officiated as conductor. The hall was crowded by a highly respectable audience. The Oratorio was given with great effect, and several of the choruses were enthusiastically redemanded. The solos were admirably rendered, and the artists were deservedly applauded in most of the pieces. The band was very efficient, and played the Overture, the Pastoral Symphony, and the accompaniments in a creditable manner. Perhaps on no previous occasion has the Society performed the Messiah with so much eclât. We should state that, before the Oratorio commenced, the choir sang the first verse of "God bless the Prince of Wales," and the first verse of the National Anthem, amidst the cheers of the audience, who appeared highly pleased at having the opportunity of thus expressing their loyalty.

BLACKPOOL.—On Thursday evening, the 30th November, the Blackpool Vocal Society gave the first concert of the second season in the Assembly Rooms, Talbot Road, to a large audience. The first part comprised Handel's Dettingen Te Deum, an anthem, "The Lord hath chosen Zion," by Mr. J. F. Bridge (Organist of Manchester Cathedral), and Mendelssohn's Eight-part Psalm, "Why rage fiercely the heathen." The second part consisted of secular choruses, songs, &c. The principal vocalists were Mrs. Webbe, Mrs. Maries, Miss Partington, Miss Mary Grindrod, Messrs. Dumville, Kirtland, Johnson, Waddington, and Stanton; accompanists—Mr. Grindrod (harmonium), and Mr. J. G. Wrigley, of Rochdale (pianoforte); conductor. Mr. N. Dumville (Manchester). The choruses were as a whole well sung, and reflected much credit upon the conductor. Miss Grindrod's rendering of "When thou tookest upon thee to deliver man" received well-deserved applause. A word of praise must also be given to Mr. Stanton for his excellent singing of "Vouchsafe, O Lord." In the second part mention must be made of a Quintett, "Waters of Elle;" and an effective song, by Hatton, "The Trumpet on the Rhoue" (with trumpet obbligato), excellently sung by Mr. Dumville. "God save the Queen" brought this successful concert to a close.

BRIGHTON.—Mr. Worsley Staniforth, Organist of St. Paul's, gave his first concert, on the 30th November, in the Dome of the Royal Pavilion. Notwithstanding the occurrence of other musical attractions, it was attended with a tolerable amount of success. In a musical point of view, the concert-giver must certainly be congratulated on this his first effort since his residence in Brighton, which dates only from the death of his predecessor at St. Paul's, the late Mr. T. W. White. Madame Florence Lancia, Miss Marion Severn, and Mr. Edward Lloyd were the principal artists engaged, assisted by the talented choir of St. Paul's, including Mr. Weller and Mr. Gerrard. Mr. Staniforth performed twice on the organ in a manner that gave evidence of his thorough mastery over the instrument. Mr. Kuhe also performed two pianoforte solos, which gave great satisfaction, calling forth hearty plaudits.

BURSLEM.—Handel's Jephtha was heard for the first time in the Potteries on the 12th ult., when it was given by the Tonic Sol-Fa Choristers, in the Town Hall, before a large and highly respectable audience. The principal vocalists were Miss Annie Edmonds, Miss Marion Severn, Mr. Kerr Gedge, and Mr. Winn, with Mrs. Munden and Mr. Bentley, of the choir, for the recitatives "Rise Jephtha," and "Glad tidings." The soli parts were well sustained throughout. Miss Edmonds was encored in "Farewell, ye limpid springs," and Mr. Gedge in "Waft her, angels;" but the latter was not repeated. The choristers displayed remarkable precision, power, and accuracy of intonation in the execution of their part of the work; and the hearty applause at the close of each chorus, showed that their efforts were thoroughly appreciated by the audience. The Oratorio was curtailed, as at the recent performances at the Oratorio Concerts in London; and Mr. Sullivan's admirable additional accompaniments were used, by the kind permission of Messrs. Novello, Ewer, and Co. Mr. C. A. Seymour, of Manchester, was leader, and Mr. H. Walker, organist. The "unaccompanied" recitatives being accompanied by the latter gentleman. The performance was conducted by Mr. Powell, under whose direction the Potteries Choristers have now sung six Oratorios, viz.: Messiah, Samson, Judas, Creation, Elijah, and Jephtha.

CARBROOK.—A sacred concert was given on Tuesday evening, the 28th November, in the United Methodist Free Church, Clifton Street, on behalf of the funds at present being raised for special purposes in connection with the above place of worship. The principals were Messrs. Gardiner, Skelton, Chambers, Jubb, and Capsey, instrumentalists; and Mrs. Frith, Messrs. Turton, Stacey, and Parker, vocalists. Numerous selections were given from Judas Maccabeus and the Messiah. The overtures and the vocal parts, assigned to Messrs. Stacey, Turton, and Parker, were well rendered. Mrs. Frith gave very affectively "From mighty Kings," and also several recitatives from the Messiah. The performance was admirably conducted by Mr. Davies. At the close the Rev. G. B. Caple proposed a vote of thanks for the gratuitous services of the performers, which was cordially responded to by the audience.

CLAPHAM.—A performance of the Messiah was given at the St. James's School-rooms, on Tuesday, the 5th ult., in aid of the St. James's organ fund. The whole of the musical arrangements were under the direction of Mr. William Lemare, the conductor of the Brixton Choral Society. The solos were sung by Miss Blanche Cole, Miss Adelaide Newton, Mr. George Perren, and Mr. Lewis Thomas. The choruses were rendered with precision and effect by members of the Brixton Choral Society, conducted by Mr. Lemare, and supported by the accompanist to the Society, Mr. John Harrison. The work was given in so praiseworthy a manner as to reflect much credit upon all who took part in the performance.

CREWE.—The members of the Crewe Philharmonic Society gave their second annual performance of the Messiah, in the Town Hall, on the evening of Tuesday, the 28th November, under distinguished patronage. The audience, though not so large as on the occasion of the Society's first performance of this work, was sufficiently so to testify that the efforts of the members are valued and appreciated. The principal executants were Miss Clelland, of Manchester (soprano), Miss Heywood, of Manchester (contralto), Mr. W. Grayson, of Lichfield Cathedral (tenor); and Mr. T. Brandon, of Gloucester Cathedral (bass). Mr. Grayson's best effort was the air "Thou shalt break them," which was delivered with great declamatory power and spirit, and for which he obtained a hearty encore. Mr. Brandon, although an entire stranger to a Crewe audience, established for himself a good name by the excellent manner in which he acquitted himself in the music assigned to him, and he was greeted with enthusiastic applause at the conclusion of the air, "Why do the nations," which he was compelled to repeat. Miss Heywood sang with much feeling and expression, especially in the airs "He shall feed His flock" and "He was despised." Miss Clelland's singing was everything that the most critical could desire, "Rejoice greatly" and "I know that my Redeemer liveth" being amongst her most successful solos. The instrumental and choral portions of the work were creditably rendered, the choruses, "And the glory of the Lord," and the "Hallelujah," being deserving of particular mention. Mr. E. Chapman, the Society's conductor, directed the performance with much skill and judgment.

DEPTFORD.—The Brockley Choral Society gave its annual performance of the Messiah at the Town Hall, on Friday, the 22nd ult., the artists; Miss Edith Maudsley and Miss Marienne Potter, Mr. Nordblom, and Mr. Bell. The band and chorus were both numerous and efficient. The solos were well rendered, the whole performance reflecting great credit on the talented conductor, Mr. Edward Miles.

DUDLEY.—The anniversary of the consecration of the Parish Church was celebrated by a choral festival, on St. Thomas's day, the 21st ult. The music was rendered by about 160 voices, selected from the neighbouring choirs of the district. The preacher was the Rev. Canon Rayson, M.A., Sacristan of Worcester Cathedral, who delivered an excellent discourse from the 2nd chapter of Philippians, 4th verse. The Rev. Dr. Dixon read the first lesson, and the Rev. M. Holden the second. The responses were chanted to Tallis, intoned by the Rev. W. Reyner Cosens, M.A., Vicar of Dudley, in an able manner. The 106th Psalm was sung to a chant by Dr. Alcock. "Cantate Domino" and "Deus Miseretur" to Turle. The anthems selected for the occasion were "To thee, Cherubin," from Handel's "Dettingen Te Deum," and the "Gloria," from Mozart's 12th Service, which were given with remarkable precision and effect. The musical portion of the service was under the direction of the Choir-master, Mr. G. H. Mainwaring; Mr. Blunden presided at the organ.

EDINBURGH.—Professor Oakeley's very enjoyable performances on the organ in the Music Class-room of the University, which must be counted among the most valuable aids to musical culture existing in Edinburgh, began for the season on the 30th November. The first Recital took place in the presence of a considerable audience, among whom were a large proportion of students. Prior to the performance the Professor gave a concise history and description of the organ, alluding to its erection out of the Reid funds, the presentation of the case, the draping of the hall, the hydraulic machinery, the number of stops, &c. He then made a few remarks on the pieces to be played and their composers. He went into Handel's reasons for writing concertos for organ and orchestra, and not writing music for the organ alone, like his great contemporary Bach, attributing it chiefly to the imperfection of the English organs of the day compared with those of Germany. He alluded to the fugal character of the Andante from Beethoven's Symphony, and its reminiscences of Mozart; commended the music of the Brussels organist, Guilmant; mentioned some interesting details of the career of Sir W. Sterndale Bennett, and characterised his "Barcarole" as full of fancy, grace, and refinement. A large part of the audience evidently enjoyed the high musical treat afforded them, and some few were able to enter into and appreciate, as it deserved, the very masterly performance of Bach's G minor Fugue, with which it wound up.

ERITH.—A performance of the Messiah took place on Thursday, the 14th ult., by the Woolwich Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. J. Whomes. Principal artists—Miss Jones, Miss Dutton, Mr. Arthur Thomas, and Mr. Chaplin Henry. The Town Hall was well attended, and the performance most successful.

GLOUCESTER.—The Gloucester Choral Society gave its first concert this season, on Monday evening, the 4th ult., at the Shire Hall. The work performed was Handel's Alexander's Feast, the solo parts being allotted to Miss Clark, Mr. Grayson, and Mr. Brandon. Miss Clark created a good effect, and received several encores. Mr. Grayson has an excellent voice, and is certainly the best tenor the Society has engaged for some time past; and Mr. Brandon was much applauded in all his solos. The choruses were well given, and there was a marked improvement in the steadiness with which they were sung. Following Alexander's Feast came the Coronation Anthem, "The King shall rejoice." The instrumentalists, under Mr. Woodward, were thoroughly satisfactory. Mr. Matthews presided at the organ, and Mr. John Hunt, as usual, conducted.

GRANTHAM.—The members of the Grantham Philharmonic Society have lately organised a series of Winter Popular Concerts, under the direction of Madame Sillen, whose attainments as a classical pianist will doubtless contribute greatly to the success of the undertaking. This is an entirely new movement in Grantham, and it is gratifying to find that it has been most favourably received, each concert having attracted a very numerous and select audience. The programmes combine instrumental and vocal music of a high class, being formed chiefly on the model of the Monday Popular Concerts, with the difference that rather more vocal pieces are given. Books of words, containing valuable historical and descriptive annotations, from the pen of G. A. Macfarren, Esq., are issued with each concert; and it is evident that no effort is spared to render the compositions of the great masters intelligible and attractive to the public, though the executants are mostly amateurs. The third concert took place on the 12th ult., and was a decided success. The principal vocalist was Miss Harmons, a pupil of Madame Natalia Macfarren, who was most enthusiastically received. This very talented young lady possesses a fine soprano voice, and has an admirable style of singing, due, doubtless, to her careful training. In Haydn's "With verdure clad," the scena, "Softly sighs," from Der Freischütz, and Macfarren's "The beating of my own heart," she entirely enlisted the sympathies of the audience. Among other instrumental pieces the programme contained Haydn's "Surprise Symphony;" two of Mendelssohn's "Lieder ohne worte;" Haydn's Trio, No. 8, for piano, violin, and violoncello; Weber's Duet, for piano and violin, No. 4; and Beethoven's Duet, for piano and violin, op. 30, No. 3, which were well given and favourably received.

GRAVESEND.—An evening concert was given on the 7th ult., at the Assembly Rooms, Harmer Street, in aid of the funds of the Orphanage of the Outdoor Officers of Customs, under the direction of Messrs. W. Phillips and A. L. Cope, which was extremely well attended, the Mayor and the principal families of the town being present. The solo vocalists were Madame Ashton, Miss Ada Percival, Miss Cavanagh, Mr. Frank Elmore, Mr. Chaplin Henry, Mr. Seymour Smith, and Mr. Churchill, with the Westminster Glee Union. Madame Ashton was especially successful in Bishop's "Peace inviting," the "Bailiff's daughter," and "I'm not the Queen" (with Miss Percival and Mr. Elmore). Miss Percival made a good impression in "The green trees whispered;" and Miss Cavanagh was equally effective in "Sing me that song again." Mr. Chaplin Henry was enthusiastically encored for his singing of "In sheltered vales," as was Mr. Elmore in "The Normandy maid:" his "Death of Nelson" was also much applauded. Other vocal pieces, contributed by Mr. Churchill, Mr. Cope, and the Westminster Glee Union, were everything to be desired. Altogether the concert was a great success. Messrs. W. Miller and J. F. Meen were the accompanists.

HAGGERSTON.—The first concert of the Dalston Choral Association for the present season was given under the conductorship of Mr. R. Payne, on Friday the 1st ult., at the Bay Street Rooms. The performances consisted of Gounod's Messe Solennelle and a miscellaneous selection. The soloists were Madame Ashton, Messrs. Colson Phillips and Albert Hubbard, who acquitted themselves throughout in admirable style. The concerted music was given by the chorus and a small orchestra in a manner which left little to be desired. Special notice may be taken of the precision of intonation evinced in the difficult "Cum Sancto Spiritu," and of the great regard paid to expression in the "Benedictus" of the Mass.

HARROGATE.—A concert was given in the Royal Spa Concert Rooms, on Wednesday evening, the 29th November, in aid of the Rifle Band fund. The first part of the programme comprised selections from Elijah and St. Paul, which were sung by members of Christ Church choir. The second part consisted of secular music. The principal vocalists were Masters Waring and Fenwick, Messrs. Calvert, Deighton, Gibbon, and Lawton. Special mention must be made of the manner in which Mr. Lawton gave the aria, "Lord God of Abraham." The other vocal pieces were also creditably sung. The band, under the leadership of Mr. Rawling, gave two selections. Mr. Baxter gained an encore for his solo on the harp. Mr. Arnold accompanied on the harmonium with his well-known ability. The audience was both large and influential.

HASTINGS.—The concert given at the Music Hall on Tuesday evening, the 28th November, by Mr. John Abram, Mus. Bac., assisted by members of St. Paul's choir and several influential amateurs, was thoroughly successful. The orchestra was composed of about sixty vocalists, of whom nearly two-thirds were ladies, and by a company of instrumentalists, which in regard to numbers was well balanced, and for musical skill was all that could be desired. Sir Sterndale Bennett's sacred Cantata, The Woman of Samaria, formed the first part of the programme, and the manner in which this composition was rendered was highly satisfactory. The soprano parts were very effectively sustained by Mrs. Grundy, the contralto by Miss Alexander, and the Rev. J. R. B. Watson's well-cultivated voice was a valuable acquisition in the bass. The recitatives, chiefly for contralto and bass, were given with much judgment. Mrs. Grundy was very effective in the air, "Art Thou greater than our father Jacob?" Miss Alexander in "O Lord, Thou hast searched me out," and the Rev. J. R. B. Watson in "Whosoever drinketh of this water."

The only tenor piece, "His salvation is nigh them that fear Him," was allotted to Mr. James, who did full justice to it, and was much applauded. One of the most successful pieces was the unaccompanied quartet "God is a spirit," by Miss Robinson, Miss Daniels, Mr. Jeffery, and the Rev. J. R. B. Watson. On the whole the choruses were exceedingly well sustained, being characterised by a precision which was highly commendable; "Therefore with joy" and "Abide with me" were among the most attractive pieces. The second part was secular, and commenced with Mendelssohn's overture "Fingal's Cave," which was well performed. Several solos were excellently given; and the selection comprised a number of part-songs, including "Down in a pretty valley" and "Sylvia," the latter of which is Mr. Abram's own composition. In the accompaniments Mr. Abram was ably assisted by Mr. Henry Leslie (pianoforte primo), Mr. A. Chesterfield (pianoforte secondo), and Mr. E. Plumstead (harmonium). The proceeds of the concert were devoted to the fund for liquidating the debt on St. Paul's Schools.

HEREFORD.—The second concert of the season, given in the Shirehall by the members of the Hereford Choral Society, took place on Tuesday evening, the 19th ult., when the audience, though not so large as on previous occasions of the kind, was evidently deeply interested in the attractive entertainment placed before them. Handel's ever welcome Oratorio, the Messiah was the work performed, and though, no doubt for good reasons, some of the most telling parts of the composer's chef d'œuvre were omitted, the various solos and choruses were most efficiently rendered. Mr. Townshend Smith conducted with his usual ability, and Madame Talbot Cherer, by her brilliant vocalization, fully maintained the prestige which attaches to her as a singer of Oratorio music. She was especially happy in her delivery of the aria "Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion," the difficult passages in which she overcame with consummate ease. Miss Broad, who is well known to and appreciated by local concert-goers, undertook the contralto music, and it is scarcely necessary to add that, as she was in good voice, she acquitted herself most satisfactorily. The Rev. G. A. Robinson was the leading tenor vocalist, and as he is also well known to the public of Hereford, we need merely say that he was as successful as usual. The Rev. W. D. V. Duncombe was the principal bass; he proved most effective in the important part he undertook. The most telling of the several fine arias which fell to his share was probably "Why do the nations so furiously rage together," which he delivered with much effect. The choir was not so strongly represented as could have been desired, but the choruses were sung in a style that betokens long and patient study by the singers, and careful training on the part of the conductor. The grand "Hallelujah Chorus" was, as usual, the one best calculated to exhibit to advantage the powers of the singers, but the Chorus "For unto us a child is born," on this as on other occasions at a performance of the Messiah, has always carried off the palm. The instrumentalists acquitted themselves creditably of their task, and it is pleasing to record another eminently successful performance by the Hereford Choral Society.

HOXTON.—On Tuesday evening, the 5th ult., a gathering of a very pleasing nature took place in the school-room of the Academy Chapel, under the presidency of the Rev. Robert Henry. It appears that the public devotions of the congregation worshipping at Hoxton Academy have been rendered far more hearty and enjoyable, in consequence of the marked improvement in the "service of song" introduced by the worthy organist, Mr. E. J. Wallis. A committee of ladies, in conjunction with Messrs. Death, Fell, and other gentlemen, have been actively engaged in getting up a substantial mark of their regard, the result of which was the presentation of a very handsome silver tea service, in value some 30 guineas, and bearing the following inscription:—"This tea service was presented to Mr. and Mrs. Wallis, by a few friends, in appreciation of the zealous and able manner in which Mr. Wallis has improved and conducted the psalmody of Hoxton Academy Chapel." The presentation, made in appropriate terms by the chairman, was gracefully responded to by Mr. Wallis. Short complimentary addresses were then delivered by Messrs. Death, Fell, Hall, Hunt, &c., in which the history of the past was reviewed, and the marked improvement of the present freely admitted. The members of the choir were especially commended by the chairman for their reverend behaviour during service.

KILBY, LEICESTER.—A concert was given on Wednesday evening the 20th ult., in the Temporary School-room, and was very well attended. The first part (sacred) consisted of the choruses, "But as for His people," "Stone him to death," "How excellent Thy name, Gloria (12th Mass), and "He watching over Israel," which were fairly sung by a choir numbering forty voices. The solo, "Jerusalem," was very well given by Mrs. Bennie; and Mr. J. B. Putt and another local amateur were encored in the duet "The Lord is a man of war." The second part consisted of two part-songs, "See the chariot at hand" and "O hush thee, my babie," both of which were encored. Mrs. Bennie was highly successful in her rendering of "Ah! che assorta," which was redemanded. A word of praise must be accorded to Miss Swinnerton, a lady residing in the neighbourhood, for the excellent manner in which she played the accompaniments; in addition to which she performed with much ability Ketterer's "Caprice Hongrois" on the pianoforte. The proceeds, which were highly satisfactory, were given to the fund for providing new schools for the parish.

LEEDS.—The programme of the Town-hall Popular Concerts, on Saturday, the 9th ult., contained some very interesting features. A selection from the Creation was first given, the soloists being Miss Amy Empsall and Mr. Denbigh Newton, the chorus being given by a well-trained band of the Madrigal and Motet Society, conducted by Dr. Spark, and accompanied on the organ by Mr. T. W. Dodds. Miss Empsall has a good voice and was highly successful. In the trio from "The Heavens are telling" she was ably assisted by Mr. Nunns and Mr. Newton. Mdlle. Brousil obtained much applause for her violin playing, and was ably seconded by Dr. Spark on the organ in a "Romanza," by Reitz. The choral selections were given with great taste and effect, especially Macfarren's arrangement of "Ye banks and braes." During the evening "God bless the Prince of Wales" was sung, the audience standing, as if by a common impulse.

LIVERPOOL.—The eleventh subscription concert of the Philharmonic Society, on the 5th ult., was exceedingly attractive and successful. The principal artists were Madame Trebelli-Bettini, Signor Fancelli, and Signor Caravoglia; solo violin, Mr. J. T. Carrodus. The great orchestral work was Beethoven's Symphony in F, No. 8. The overtures were that to Die Zauberflote and Litolff's Maximilian Robespierre. C. E. Horsley's "Grand Procession March" was also performed. Mr. J. T. Carrodus played the Andante and Rondo from Molique's 5th Concerto very finely, and gave a most expressive and passionate rendering of Ernst's solo from Il Pirata. Madame Trebelli-Bettini's singing was, as usual, the perfection of dramatic expression and highly-finished vocalisation: her "Non più mesta" was encored, as well as the duet "Ai cappricci" (L'Italiana in Algeria), which she sang with Signor Caravoglia. The other songs of the concert, and also the part-music and choruses, were much applauded.——Mr. T. J. HUGHES gave his annual concert on the 7th ult., at the Institute, which was very largely attended. Mr. Hughes was ably assisted by the Misses Phillips, Mr. T. Jones, and Mr. C. W. Robinson, vocalists; Mr. G. A. Wielopolski Phillips, solo cornet: accompanist, Mr. Skeaf. Pianoforte pieces were given by Mr. Charles Edward Horsley and Mr. Skeaf (who played his own arrangement of "Caller Herrin'," entitled "The Fisherman"), for which encores were awarded.——The first of the usual winter series of classical concerts, on the plan of the London Monday Popular Concerts, took place in the Philharmonic Hall, on the 13th ult., to a large and highly appreciative audience. The executants were Madame Norman-Neruda, MM. L. Ries and Zerbini, Signor Piatti, and Mr. Charles Hallé; vocalist, Miss Alice Fairman. The programme included Mendelssohn's Quartet for strings, in A minor, op. 13; solo Sonata (pianoforte) in C major, op. 53 (dedicated to Count Waldstein), Beethoven; string Quartet in B flat, op. 18, No. 6, Beethoven; and Sonata for pianoforte and violin, in A major, op. 12, No. 2, Beethoven, all of which went to perfection. Miss Alice Fairman sang a song by Benedict and "Cangio d'aspetto" (Handel), which was encored.——THE twelfth Philharmonic concert for 1871, on the 19th ult., was, as usual before Christmas, devoted to a performance of the Messiah, but on this occasion preceded by a verse and chorus of "God save the Queen," which was received with great enthusiasm. The principal artists were Madlle. Titiens, Madlle. Enriques, Mr. Bentham, and Signor Foli; trumpet obbligato, Mr. Thomas Harper. The performance was a very fine one, the choruses being given with great firmness, power, and effect. Maddle. Titiens and Signor Foli rendered their share of the music with their accustomed success; but a word of especial welcome is due to Madlle. Enriques and Mr. Bentham, who are new to the Philharmonic audience, in this Oratorio. They gave the contralto and tenor songs with admirable expression and refinement, and were deservedly applauded.

LYNN.—The first concert of the Philharmonic Society for the present season was given at the Music Hall, on the 24th November. The principal vocalists were Madame Emmeline Cole and Mr. H. J. Minns. The first part of the programme comprised selections from the oratorios Saul, Samson, Judas Maccabæus, and the Messiah. Mr. Minns won much applause for his delivery of "Comfort ye," and "Every valley;" and the choruses, especially "And the glory of the Lord," and the "Hallelujah," were remarkably well sung. The second part was miscellaneous, and included, besides several vocal solos, a fantasia on the flute, excellently performed by Mr. Flint. Mr. T. C. Carey conducted, and Mr. W. O. Jones presided at the harmonium.

MANCHESTER.—Mr. J. Yarwood gave his annual concert in the Hulme Town-hall, on Saturday evening, the 9th ult., to a very large audience. The artists were Miss Bellott, Miss Page, Miss Chadwick (of the Royal Academy), Mr. T. Allen, the Middleton Apollo Glee Party, the Sappho Choral Union, of male voices, the members of the Greek Church Choir, and the Oldham Prize Hand-bell Ringers. All the selections were well rendered, several being encored. The glee, "Strike the lyre," opened the programme, and was sung in excellent style, with all the glee parties combined, as was also Mr. Yarwood's new Greek national anthem, which has been accepted and acknowledged by their Majesties the present King and Queen of Greece. An equal success attended "Welcome, welcome," by the same composer. Miss Bellott was highly effective in "La Zingarella" (Campana), and the "Minstrel Boy." Miss Chadwick deserves commendation for her artistic rendering of the song "When sparrows build" (Gabriel), and Blumenthal's ballad "Why was I looking out;" and Mr. Allen sang "Marmion" in a style deserving of high praise. The Middleton Apollo Glee party sang exceedingly well "In a cell" and "The Isles of Greece," the latter being encored. The performance of the Prize Hand-bell Ringers was received with great applause. The glees were under the able conductorship of Mr. Yarwood. The accompanists were Miss Page and Mr. W. Nichols.——THE performance of the Messiah at Mr. De Jong's Promenade Concerts, at the Free Trade Hall, on the 16th ult., was thoroughly successful. The solo vocalists were Madame Cora de Wilhorst, Miss Palmer, Mr. Maas, and Mr. Brandon, all of whom acquitted themselves to the thorough satisfaction of the audience, Mr. Maas especially (who supplied, at a very short notice, the place of Mr. Vernon Rigby, absent from indisposition), creating a marked effect in the tenor music. Mr. De Jong conducted the Oratorio with much judgment; and Mr. Bridge's organ accompaniments were an interesting feature in the concert.

MONTROSE.—The first concert of the season given by the Harmonic Union took place in the Guild Hall, on Tuesday evening the 19th ult. The programme consisted wholly of Scotch songs, harmonised in four-parts, duets and solos. The members of the Union, numbering forty voices, with one or two exceptions, rendered the pieces with praiseworthy precision. Miss Clirehugh presided at the pianoforte, and accompanied with good taste and judgment. One agreeable feature in the proceedings was between the parts, when the Union sang "God bless the Prince of Wales," the whole of the audience standing. At the close one of the honorary members (Rev. Mr. Steven) proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. Taylor, the conductor, and the members of the Union, and trusted it would not be long before another such agreeable evening was given. The vote of thanks was heartily awarded.

MOSS SIDE, MANCHESTER.—On the 24th November Miss M. E. Moseley gave a miscellaneous concert in the Assembly Hall to an appreciative audience, assisted by Misses Sutton, Sunter, and Taylor, and Messrs. Williams, Jordan, and Booth, together with a select glee party. The playing of the pianoforte solos by Miss Moseley (including the overture to Fra Diavolo, Auber, Fantasia on Irish Airs, E. de Paris, and several arrangements of her own) was a marked feature in the programme, and elicited much and deserved applause. Miss Sutton was highly effective in her singing of "She wore a wreath of roses," and "Oh bid your faithful Ariel fly;" and Miss Sunter and the other vocalists also gave considerable satisfaction in their various songs. Mr. Thomas Coulton conducted the glees and choruses; and the concert on the whole was a decided success.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—A concert in aid of St. Paul's Church Choir fund was held in the Surgeon's Hall, Victoria Street, on the 5th ult., and was patronised by a numerous and fashionable assembly. The concerted pieces, by Mendelssohn, Sullivan, Pinsuti, &c., received a refined and finished rendering at the hands of the members of the Church choir, and reflected the utmost credit on their talented instructor, Mr. C. H. Shepherd. Ascher's pianoforte piece, "Chant des Naiades," was played with much executive skill and refined feeling by Mrs. Hancock. Especial praise should be awarded to that promising young musician, Mr Alexander Hill, assistant organist at St. Paul's Church, whose services on the occasion were equally unassuming and effective. Amongst other artists whose kind aid is deserving of notice we must not omit the mention of Miss Eleanor Jack, Miss Cuthbertson, Mr. R. Jack, and Miss Hall. Mr. Shepherd, who is an Associate of the Royal Academy of Music, is to be unreservedly congratulated on the excellent results of the concert, as its entire success is solely attributable to his judicious management and personal direction.

PENZANCE.—A vocal and instrumental concert was given on Monday, the 11th ult., the artists being Madame Rosenberg (soprano), Mr. Sampson (tenor), Mr. Rice (violin), Mr. Nunn, A.R.A. (violoncello), and Mr. Trembath, Mus. Bac. (pianoforte). Madame Rosenberg sang "Robert! toi que j'aime" and "Il Bacio;" Mr. Sampson gave Benson's "Row gently here," and a song by Dürrner, with violoncello obbligato. The instrumental portion of the concert consisted of a trio in D minor for piano, violin, and violoncello, by F. E. Bache, and a trio by De Beriot (both of which were much applauded); a violin solo, by De Beriot (Mr. Rice); a violoncello Romance, by Mendelssohn (Mr. Nunn); and an Andante and Presto Agitato, by Mendelssohn (Mr. Trembath). The latter gentleman also gave an Andante and Allegro Vivace, by Batiste, on the great organ, with excellent effect. This party also visited Falmouth, Redruth, St. Austell, and Truro in the same week, and gave concerts with scarcely any alteration of programme.

PERTH.—On Monday evening, the 11th ult., the Euterpeon Society gave a private concert in the Academy. The first part consisted of Beethoven's Mass in C. Although the chorus was rather small for the proper rendering of such a great work, it was sung throughout very effectively. The solos and choruses were given with precision and taste, reflecting much credit on the devotion of the members and the ability of the conductor, Mrs. Hempel. The second part consisted of part-songs by Sullivan, Macfarren, and Mendelssohn. Several songs, duets, and trios were also given; and a pianoforte duet, by Mrs. Hempel and a member of the Society was performed with much effect.

PLUMSTEAD, KENT.—The first concert of Mr. W. Reeves's Choral Class took place at the School, Bloomfield Road, on Tuesday, the 19th ult. Miss Mead was encored in two songs, as was also Mr. Reeves in "God bless the Prince of Wales," and Miss Lockyer in a pianoforte solo. The remaining soloists were Miss Harrison, Mr. Waites, Mr. Manning, and Mr. Barnett. The concert was well attended. Mr. W. Reeves conducted.

RAMSGATE.—A concert was given on Tuesday evening, the 21st November, at St. George's Hall, by Messrs. Birch (alto), Moulding (tenor), and Higgins (bass), of the Canterbury Cathedral choir, assisted by Master F. Elmes and Messrs. Wilson and Lott, and the Ramsgate Tonic Sol-Fa Choral Society. The programme, which was a most attractive one, consisted of solos, duets, trios, and quintets, all of which were rendered in a most satisfactory style. The performance commenced with a chorus from Lahee's Cantata, The Building of the Ship, sung by the Choral Society, accompanied by Mr. Lott: this was followed by several vocal pieces, which were deservedly applauded. The gem of the evening was a quintet, by Spofforth, "Come, bounteous May," given by the Canterbury singers, which was repeated. A novel and interesting part of the programme was formed by two solos on the flageolet, played in an excellent manner by Master F. Elmes. The Choral Society sang a number of part-songs, glees, and choruses, which were well received, the Glee "England" being encored. Mr. Lott, organist of St. Dunstan's Church, Canterbury, acted as accompanist, and Mr. Thomas Duckett conducted.

RAWMARSH, YORKS.—The choir of the Congregational Chapel gave a concert of sacred music therein, on Tuesday, the 5th ult. The programme consisted of selections from Handel's Dettingen Te Deum, Judas Maccabæus, Samson and Messiah, and included the following songs, &c.: "Pious orgies" and "Let the bright seraphim" (Miss Brameld); "He was despised" (Miss Dunhill); "Hail, Judea," and "See the conquering hero comes" (Misses Brameld and Dunhill); "Sound an alarm" and "Thou didst not leave" (Mr. W. Walker); "Thou shalt break them" (Mr. W. Brown); "Arm, arm, ye brave," "Rejoice, O Judah," and "Why do the nations" (Mr. T. Harrison). All these pieces were well sung, Miss Brameld and Mr. Harrison especially distinguishing themselves. Mr. T. Brameld presided at the organ with his usual ability, and played, as voluntaries, two of Bach's pedal fugues in a very efficient manner. The entire performance was a genuine success for the choir.

REDRUTH.—A performance of Mendelssohn's Elijah was given on the 28th November, by the Camborne Choral Society, in the Druid's Hall, to a very large audience. The choruses were rendered with the utmost precision and spirit. The principal vocalists were the Misses Mitchell, Mr. Harvey, Mr. Thomas, and Mr. H. A. Smith, all of whom acquitted themselves uniformly well, "Hear ye Israel," "Woe unto them," "Then shall the righteous," and "Is not His word like a fire," being perhaps the most successful solos. Mr. J. H. Nunn, A.R.A., conducted with his usual ability.

SALISBURY.—The attendance on Tuesday, the 28th November, at the Hamilton Hall, at the miscellaneous concert given by the Sarum Choral Society, was a large one. Miss Ada Jackson gave much satisfaction in the songs from Oberon, and was encored in one of them, which she repeated. Her singing of "With verdure clad" was loudly applauded, and the audience insisted on a repetition of another of her songs later in the evening. Herr Pollitzer's playing of Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto was an admirable example of purity of tone and finished execution. Of Mr. Rowland, we need only remark that he more than sustained his reputation as a great contrabassist; he was tumultuously encored, but contented himself with bowing his acknowledgments; We must not omit a word of commendation to the choral members of the Society, and especially to the Cathedral choristers. They sang admirably, particularly in the charming bit of melody in the chorus, "Who would stay," as did also the male voices in "Glory to the Caliph." Great praise is due to the conductor, Mr. C. J. Read, for the pains he must have been at in framing so excellent a programme. There was a most efficient orchestra, and the overture to William Tell was in every respect a highly satisfactory performance.

SOUTHSEA.—On Friday evening, the 15th ult., the new organ was opened in St. Simon's Church, on which occasion the Rev. Octavius Winslow, D.D., of Brighton, formerly a Dissenting minister of Bath, preached a sermon from Revelation xiv., first clause of the 3rd verse: "And they sung, as it were, a new song before the throne." The organ (an exceedingly fine instrument), built by Mr. A. Hunter, of Kennington, at a cost of £410, was opened by Mr. Hiles, of Brighton. At the close of the service about £320 had been obtained towards defraying the cost of the organ.

SPILSBY.—On Monday, November the 27th, Mr. T. W. Dodds (organist of the Grammar School Chapel, Leeds) gave an evening concert at the St. James's School-room, with Miss Anna Hiles and Mr. Dodds, as vocalists; and Mdlle. Bertha Brousil (violin), Herr Adolphe Brousil (violoncello), and Mr. T. W. Dodds (pianoforte), as solo instrumentalists. The performance was in every respect a decided success.

STOCKPORT.—An interesting classical concert was given at the Mechanics' Institute, on Tuesday, the 12th ult. The programme was well selected, Haydn's quartet for strings (op. 64, No. 4), played by Messrs. Bernhardt, Van Biene, William Minshall, and Charles Turner being amongst the most attractive features. Mr. Bradbury Turner's trio for piano and strings must also be mentioned in terms of high commendation; it was well performed and much applauded. Miss Bristow's pianoforte playing, especially in Beethoven's Sonata, in D minor (op. 31, No. 2), was the theme of general admiration. Solos on the violin by Mr. Bernhardt, and on the violoncello by Mr. Van Biene, were also given with much success; and several vocal pieces were contributed by Mdlle. Gondi and Mr. Riley, M. De Solla officiated as accompanist.——THE Choral Society gave its first concert of the season on the 19th ult., at the Stockport Sunday School, in aid of the Institute for the Blind, Deaf, and Dumb. Handel's Oratorio Joshua was the work selected. The principal vocalists were Miss M. Thorley, Mrs. Thorley Brown, Messrs. Henderson and Lovatt, whose rendering of their various parts was excellent. The choral portion of the work was very efficiently given. Mr. Jolliff led the band, Mr. Collier presided at the organ, and Mr. Williamson conducted.

STRATFORD ON-AVON.—The second of the Philharmonic Society's concerts of the present season took place at the Theatre Royal on the 12th ult., and attracted a large audience. The programme, which was chiefly composed of instrumental pieces, contained the overtures to Semiramide, Zauberflote, and La Gazza Ladra, Beethoven's Sonata, No. 3 (Pf. solo), the first movement of Beethoven's Symphony in B flat, &c., all of which were well performed by the members of the Society. The vocal portion of the concert was much admired, it being rendered by several lady amateurs, and some members of the church choir, in a most satisfactory manner. Mr. Maries sang Wallace's "Bellringer" in excellent style, and was of great assistance at the pianoforte in several of the pieces. The Rev. Newton Smith deserves the thanks of the musical public of Stratford for the exertions he makes to ensure these concerts being a success, which they cannot fail to be when such good music is introduced.

SWANSEA.—On the 18th ult. the Swansea Harmonic Society, assisted by the Neath Harmonic Society, gave a highly successful rendering of Mendelssohn's Elijah at the Music Hall. The principal artists were Miss Banks, Miss Marion Severn, Mr. Kerr Gedge, and Mr. Winn, all of whom executed their allotted parts most efficiently. The orchestra (under the leadership of Mr. Woodward) was selected from Hereford, Worcester, and Gloucester, and the well-known Cyfartifa band. The choir (numbering about 250 voices), under the able conductorship of Monsieur Jules Allard, may be congratulated upon the excellent manner in which the whole of the difficult choruses were given. Mr. Bargeer Wall ably presided at the harmonium.

TURNHAM GREEN.—The Turnham Green Musical Society having some time since resumed its weekly practice, gave an entertainment, the first this season, in the Girls' School (National) Room, on the evening of the 7th ult. The entertainment opened with the glee, "Waken, lords and ladies gay," followed by a solo and chorus, Schumann's "Gipsy life." Miss Mitford sang "Child of earth" and "Thy voice is near;" Miss Furtado, "Quando a te lieta" and "The sailor sighs," with Captain Furtado (the duet deservedly obtaining an encore). "Over the rolling sea," having also been encored, Captain Furtado sang "The bashful man" with much effect. During the evening Dr. Moxey read "Is he dead" and "The Battle of Flodden;" and Mr. Warner Sleigh, "King Robert of Sicily" and "The charity dinner." The profits of this Society's entertainments are devoted to charitable purposes.

WINCHESTER.—The Musical Society gave an excellent performance of Handel's Serenata, Acis and Galatea, at St. John's Rooms, on Tuesday evening, November 28th, to a fashionable audience. The principal solo parts were well sung by members of the Society, assisted by Mrs. Grant, née Miss A. Fuller. The band and chorus numbered sixty performers. Leader of the band and solo violinist, Mr. C. Fletcher; conductor, Mr. M. Robinson.

WINDSOR.—A military concert was given in St. Mark's School, on the 30th November, by the band of the 1st Life Guards, under the direction of Mr. Waterson. The programme included Sir G. J. Elvey's "Festival March," and a Quintet in F, composed by Mr. Waterson, which was well received. Miss Alice Fairman was encored in Randegger's song, "To thee, my love," and a similar compliment was awarded to Mr. Christian, who gave Emanuel's song, "The Desert." Mr. Montem Smith was loudly applauded in both his ballads. Mr. Lawrence was pianist.

WOLVERHAMPTON.—On Tuesday evening, the 12th ult., a concert took place in SS. Peter and Paul's School, which was attended by a large and appreciative audience. The programme was highly interesting, comprising, amongst other things, the overtures to Zampa and Euryanthe, Wanderstunden (Heller); "The Yeoman's wedding song;" "My mother bids me bind my hair" (Haydn); trio, "This magic wove scarf;" and an arrangement by Sydney Smith, for pianoforte, of airs from Faust, &c., &c. The overture to Zampa was played by Messrs. Arscott and Powell with great precision and refinement. This was followed by "The Yeoman's wedding song," given by Mr. Short with remarkable vigour and expression. Mrs. Hadley, though suffering from a cold, was succesful in "Lilly's Good night." Miss Rigby received special favour for her unaffected delivery of Haydn's classical song, and was called upon to repeat the last verse. The same compliment was conferred upon Mrs. Hadley and Mr. Short for their singing in the second part. In the Faust selection Mr. Arscott showed much facility of execution and great expression, and his performance of the piece was loudly applauded. Mr. Arscott accompanied with much care and judgment.

WOOLWICH.—The Woolwich Choral Society gave a performance of the Messiah, at the Lecture Hall, with full band and chorus, under the direction of Mr. J. Whomes, on Tuesday, the 5th ult.; artists—Miss Jones, Miss Dutton, Mr. Arthur Thomas, and Mr. Chaplin Henry; solo trumpet, Mr. Dearden.

CONTAIN A PROGRESSIVE COURSE OF INSTRUCTION IN MUSIC, UPON A SYSTEM DESIGNED BY HIM.

The exercises are set at the top of each page, and blank staves are left for the pupil to copy the examples given. It is intended that the pupils should fill up the first page by copying the exercise given, and write from memory on the second blank page. Every succeeding exercise includes all that has been taught in the preceding examples. The rudiments of music are explained as simply as possible. Diagrams of the pianoforte keyboard are provided, by means of which the notes can be more easily learnt than by any other method. The fundamental rules of harmony and thorough bass are practically illustrated, and a plan laid down by which singing at sight can be learnt without assistance. The Music Copy-Books will, it is believed, be equally useful to master and pupil, by relieving the former from the necessity of constantly repeating the same rules, and ensuring the gradual progress of the latter.

Parts I. and II. contain RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC.
Part III. contains INSTRUCTIONS FOR THE PIANOFORTE.
Parts IV. and V. contain THE RUDIMENTS OF HARMONY.
Part VI. contains INSTRUCTIONS IN VOCALISATION, PART-SINGING, AND SINGING AT SIGHT.

Price Sixpence each; postage free for 7 stamps.

CHAPPELL'S PENNY OPERATIC PART-SONGS.

For Soprano, Alto, Tenor, and Bass.

The present collection of Part-Songs is entirely new, being selected and adapted from the most striking and popular Choruses in the Favourite Foreign Operas. The Arrangement is purely Vocal, such Choruses only being chosen as can be sung without the aid of an Instrumental Accompaniment. The Words have been expressly written for the work, and the harmonies arranged in four parts, as likely to be most useful in small classes.

1.	Hymn of the Fisherman's Children	Adapted to a Melody from Herold's "Zampa."
2.	Fays and Elves (In mia fe)	... ... From Flotow's "Marta."
3.	Spring's Bright Glances (In Elvezia non v'ha)	... From Bellini's "La Sonnambula."
4.	From Yonder Vale and Hill (D'immenso giubilo)	From Donizetti's "Lucia di Lammermoor."
5.	Here we Rest (Qui la selva)	... From Bellini's "La Sonnambula."
6.	Onward to Battle (Squilli echeggi)	... From Verdi's "Trovatore."

A NEW WORK FOR THE ORGAN.

HANDEL'S CHORUSES

Arranged for the Organ, with Pedal Obbligato, EXPRESSLY for the use of AMATEURS, by Dr. Rimbault. Price 3s. each. Nos. 1 to 12 are now ready:—

No. 1. Zadok the Priest.	No. 5. Sing unto God.	No. 9. For unto us a child is born.
2. From the Censer.	6. Hallelujah.	10. He trusted in God.
3. We never will bow down.	7. Lift up your heads.	11. But the waters overwhelmed them.
4. He gave them hailstones.	8. Let us break their bonds asunder.	12. The Horse and his rider.

The present publication has been undertaken with a view to supply a musical want long felt by amateurs and lovers of the organ, i.e., an edition of Handel's Celebrated Choruses arranged for the organ with pedal obbligato, that shall be effective, combining all the salient parts of the score, and yet at the same time be within the reach of those performers who have not made the instrument their entire study. We have, it is true, many arrangements; some for "Organ or Pianoforte," others by our most eminent organists. The first belong to a past age; the second, in all cases, are only fit for professional performers, and require an amount of skill for their proper execution rarely attained by amateurs. In the present edition, the notation has been carefully studied so as to simplify the reading, whilst the pedals, in all cases of difficulty, have the assistance of the left hand of the performer. Many other points have been considered so as to render the arrangement fitted to the object it has in view—to supply an edition of Handel's Choruses for the Organ expressly for the amateur.

MASON AND HAMLIN'S
CABINET ORGANS.

MESSRS. METZLER AND CO. have the pleasure to announce that they have made arrangements with the MASON AND HAMLIN ORGAN COMPANY for the SOLE AGENCY for the Sale of their Instruments in the United Kingdom. Messrs. METZLER AND CO. have shown these Instruments to a few of the most eminent professional men in London, and have received the following Testimonials in their favour :—

2, Manchester Square, Jan. 26, 1872.

Gentlemen,—I entertain the highest opinion of Mason and Hamlin's Cabinet Organs. The tone is mellow and free from reediness, the touch excellent; and altogether I believe these Instruments are destined to be very popular in this country.

Yours truly,

Messrs. Metzler and Co., Great Marlborough Street. JULIUS BENEDICT.

The Specimens of the American Organs which I have examined at Messrs. Metzler and Co.'s, are remarkably sweet and even-toned throughout the various registers, and are free from many of the objections I have hitherto entertained of Manual Reed Instruments. Moreover, they have a good touch, and are capable of some charming effects and pleasing combinations. The appearance of these Organs in solid walnut wood, and brightly gilt pipes in front, is greatly in their favour. Altogether, I can very strongly recommend these Instruments,

WM. SPARK, Mus. D.,
Organist of the Town Hall, Leeds.

Messrs. Metzler and Co. Sydenham, S.E., 23rd Jan., 1872.

Gentlemen,—I have played upon several of your "Mason and Hamlin's Cabinet Organs," and consider them to be very satisfactory Instruments. The tone is exceedingly sweet, the speech quick, and the manipulation easy.

Faithfully yours,
W. J. WESTBROOK.

I have just tried and examined several of Mason and Hamlin's Organs at Messrs. Metzler and Co.'s, and I find the tone to be unusally mellow, sweet and equal. The touch of the Instruments is also light, elastic, and free from lumpiness.

EDWARD J. HOPKINS,
Jan. 22, 1872. Organist to the Hon. Societies of the Inner and Middle Temple.

I have a very high opinion of the "Mason and Hamlin Cabinet Organ." Although the sounds are produced from reeds, the quality of tone is extremely rich and sympathetic, almost equal to that obtained from pipes. It is very easy to blow, and great effects are produced by the Automatic Swell. The octave-coupler and sub-bass add greatly to the richness of the Instrument, which is remarkable for purity of tone. For Sacred Music at home, the "Mason and Hamlin Cabinet Organ" is very desirable, and in many respects that could easily be pointed out, it possesses great advantages over the small-priced pipe organs.

EDWARD F. RIMBAULT.

At the request of Messrs. Metzler and Co., we have tried and examined several of Messrs. Mason and Hamlin's Cabinet Organs, and we find the tone of these Instruments to be full, powerful, and of agreeable quality, with an absence of reediness; the articulation is rapid, and the touch very good. They appear to us to be the best substitute for a pipe organ.

CHURCH AND STAGE.

The defining lines guarding the enclosures of the two professions, forming the subject of the present article are now wider apart and stronger than they formerly were; indeed so wide and well formed, that it is scarcely possible for the casual observer of to-day to realise the fact, that there could have been at any time a marked connection between them. But if it should be one in the position of the casual observer, whose eye is running over these words; and, moreover, if he the said casual observer is good enough to feel interest in knowing more of the matter, let him consent to be held by the button-hole for a few minutes, and then cease to be the casual, and become the special observer, at least in this particular case.

In ancient times dramatic performances constituted part of the observances on the days of sacrifice to certain gods, as in Athens the drama was exhibited at certain of the festivals of the "gay and good Dionysos," better known to modern readers as Bacchus. Rome, too, although not a great patron of dramatic art, had its theatrical performances on the days of special feasts. But upon the adoption of Christianity, severe penalties were inflicted upon all connected with the theatre; and the edicts of the Emperor Julian deprived the people of an amusement to which they had become accustomed, and for which they still longed. To satisfy in some degree this longing, Gregory of Nazianzen and the two Apollinarii introduced the first religious plays or mysteries with but indifferent success; the people desirous of having the broad comedy of former dramatic pieces, compromised the matter by the invention or adaptation of such saturnalian mummeries as the Feast of Fools and the Feast of the Ass.

The Feast of Fools was celebrated in church, profanity going so far besides as to appoint a Bishop of Fools in the Cathedral churches; and in the churches immediately dependent on the Papal See, a Pope of Fools. The behaviour of those concerned in carrying out these practices was as indecent as the institution. All those curious in such matters are referred to Hone's "Ancient Mysteries" for the details of both of the Feasts above alluded to, as it would scarcely serve the present object to make other than a passing mention of them. These absurdities gave rise to others, and the troop of buffoons, jugglers, and minstrels which usually accompanied the merchants of early times to the great fairs or markets, exerted their skill in the representation of these things, and gained such a hold over the popular mind, that "the clergy finding that the entertainments of dancing, music, and mimicry, exhibited at the protracted annual fairs made the people less religious, by promoting idleness and a love of festivity, proscribed the sports and excommunicated the performers. But finding no regard was paid to their censures, they changed their plan and determined to take these recreations into their own hands. They turned actors; and instead of profane mummeries presented stories taken from legends or the Bible."*

* Warton's History of English Poetry.

There being no settled or permanent theatre at any place in early times, the minstrels acted plays in the halls of the nobility; and the boys at public schools did a like thing at Christmas in their own halls, and the custom is kept up to the present day, as an example of which the practice of acting plays at Westminster School may be pointed to. The ancient consuetudinary, as it is called, of Eton School (containing all its old and original customs) relates that about the 30th of November (St. Andrew's Day), the master was accustomed to choose such Latin plays as were most excellent and convenient to be played in the following Christmas holidays before a public audience.

While the people were amused with Skelton's "Trial of Simony," Bale's "God's Promises," and "Christ's Descent into Hell," the scholars of the times were composing and acting dramas on historical and other subjects (the earliest known comedy "Ralph Roister Doister," by Nicholas Udall, 1551, owing its origin probably to this spirit); the singing boys of the various foundation choirs acted plays in deference to this same fashion, strengthened perhaps by the practice they had gained in their traditional performances consequent upon the election of a boy bishop at St. Nicholas-tide, which election seems to have been common among every religious community capable of supporting a choir; and although the custom has faded away, yet traces of its existence may be still found, and the permitted pre-eminence of the child, and the temporary deference paid to him by his senior in age and superior in office, during a certain period of the year, is to be observed in some communities as yet wholly unspoiled by modern customs. For example, at the Christmas eve festivities at Magdalen College in Oxford, the choristers sit at the high table, usually occupied by dons of the severest dignity, and are waited upon by the very dons whose places they for the time usurp; and there are doubtless other places where a shadow of the former importance laid upon children of the choir is to be noted by those who have will and opportunity for observing.

In the performance of Mysteries and Latin plays the boys acquired skill to act in regular dramas; and Warton says, that at the commencement of the theatre in England they were the best and almost the only regular comedians;—but more of this presently.

Henry VII., being in his castle of Winchester, was entertained on a Sunday in the year 1487, while at dinner, with the performance of "Christ's Descent into Hell," by the choir boys of Hyde Abbey and St. Swithin's Priory, two large monasteries there, and in the same reign, 1489, there were shows and ceremonies, and plays exhibited "by the boys" in the Palace at Westminster. These were based upon or selected from the old Mysteries so popular at the period; and the circumstance is also remarkable from the fact that this was the only occasion recorded of boys playing in the ancient Mysteries. It is not in the present design to describe these things further than to say, that as at that time legendary stories connected with Scripture characters, were received and believed with as much earnestness as the narrative of the true text, it is not remarkable to find apocryphal stories mixed up with the plain and accurate events told in the New Testament, for the Sacred Story was only known so far and in such manner as the teachers of the time chose to impart, and the "plays" helped their teaching by placing in a tangible form the mysteries of Scripture. From the Earl of Northumberland's Household Book (1512) we learn that the children of his chapel performed Mysteries during the twelve days of Christmas, and Easter under the direction of his Master of the Revels. Bishop Percy, in his "Reliques of Ancient Poetry," cites several particulars of the regulated sums payable to "parsones" and others for their performances. The exhibition of scriptural dramas on the great festivals entered into the regular establishment, and formed part of the domestic arrangements of our ancient nobility; and what is more remarkable, it was as much the business of the chaplain in those days to compose plays for the family, as it is now for him to write sermons. The practice of acting plays at Christmas in the Colleges of Oxford and Cambridge continued down to the time of Cromwell, and many of the pieces performed were written by the clerical members of the several Colleges. To superintend these performances an officer was appointed, generally "a well learned, grave man," from among the rulers of the College, and there are frequent entries in the College books of payments made for expenses incurred in these representations; and there is many a reference in quaint old books to the effect of the performance of choristers, clerks and chaplains in these old plays. For example, in Wood's "Athenæ Oxoniensis" there is a record of the visit of Queen Elizabeth to the University of Oxford in 1566, and a description of the performance of certain plays in the halls of Christ Church; and upon her visit to Cambridge she also was present at a series of dramatic shows, among others the Aulularia of Plautus, and the tragedies of Dido and Hezekiah in English; all these were performed in the nave of the chapel of King's College by a company of scholars chosen from the several colleges. But not alone to olden days, but in the recital of essays in Latin and Greek usually given at Trinity and other colleges in Cambridge, may the custom be traced to modern times; and not entirely in England was the practice allowed, for the children connected with, or in training for the Church to take part in dramatic performances, in many instances in their own chapels, but it was also a very ancient habit in many of the seminaries in foreign countries; and although the temptation to digression on the subject is strong, it must be suppressed for the present, as there is yet some more to tell about the connection between Church and Stage in our own land. Allusion has already been made to the annual election of a boy bishop in many religious communities. The references to this custom in existing ancient records are numerous and amusing, but one example will be sufficient for the present object, and serve as the means of gaining a general idea of the antiquity and absurdity of the practice elsewhere; yet absurd as it appears to be to us in these days, some of the wisest men in their generation have countenanced this farce, among others Dean Colet, the founder of St. Paul's School, who though no friend to the superstitions and fopperies of the ritualism of his time, yet expressly orders that his scholars "shall every Childermass daye come to Paulis churche and hear the childe-byshop's sermon; and after be at the hygh masse; and each of them offer a peny to the childe-byshop, and with them the maisters and surveyors of the scole." This "childe-byshop" was selected from among the choristers of St. Paul's Cathedral, who seem to have been held in great esteem for their histrionic powers, for so early as the year 1378 the choristers of St. Paul's Cathedral in London, presented a petition to Richard II. that his Majesty would prohibit some ignorant and inexperienced persons from acting the history of the Old Testament, to the great prejudice of the clergy of the Church, who had expended considerable sums for preparing a public presentation of that play at the ensuing Christmas. This young fraternity proceeded to the performance of the more regular drama, and many of Shakspeare's and Ben Jonson's plays were first performed by them. Their services were so much in requisition that they often acted at court, and on occasions of particular festivities in the royal mansions, and those of the nobility a little distance from London. In the year 1544 while the Princess Elizabeth resided at Hatfield House in Hertfordshire, under the custody of Sir Thomas Pope, she was visited by Queen Mary; the next morning after Mass, they were entertained with a grand exhibition of bear-baiting, with which their highnesses "were right well content." In the evening the Great Chamber was adorned with a sumptuous suit of tapestry, called "The hanging of Antioch," and after supper, a play was presented by the children of Pauls. These particulars are gathered from Strype, who also describes an entertainment given by Lord Arundel to the same Princess Elizabeth, when Queen, in the year 1559, at the Palace of Nonsuch in Surrey, in these words: "There the Queen had great entertainment, with banquets, especially on Sunday night, made by the said Earl; together with a musick, and the warlike sounds of drums and flutes, and a kinds of musick till midnight. On Monday was a great supper made for her; but before night she stood at her standing in the further park, and there she saw a course. At night was a play by the children of Pauls and their master, Sebastian. After that a costly banquet accompanied with drums and flutes. This entertainment lasted until three in the morning; and the Earl presented her Majesty with a cupboard of plate." Warton also records the fact that in the year 1562, when the Society of Parish Clerks celebrated one of their annual feasts, after morning service in Guildhall Chapel, they retired to their own hall; where after dinner a goodly play was performed by the choristers of Westminster Abbey, with waits, and regals, and singing, that is to say, vocal music with the accompaniment of reed wind instruments and portable organs.

The children of the Chapel Royal were also famous actors, and were formed into a company of players by Queen Elizabeth, under the conduct of Richard Edwardes, a man distinguished alike as a poet, as a scholar, and a musician. He was educated at Corpus Christi College in Oxford; and upon the establishment of Christ Church in that University in the year 1547, was made Senior Student. Queen Elizabeth gave him a patent as Gentleman of her Chapel Royal, and upon the death of Richard Bowyer in 1561, he became master of the children, and received permission to let the choristers out for hire, a practice followed by many successive masters with more or less evil to the children, until a very recent date. The whole of Lilly's plays, and as before stated, many of those of Shakespeare and Ben Jonson, were first performed by the children of the Chapel Royal, frequently joined by the choristers of St. Paul's. The folio edition of Ben Jonson's play, "Cynthia's Revels; or the Fountain of Self-love," first acted in 1600, gives the names of the boys who played some of the principal parts: Nat. Field, Sal. Pavy, Tho. Day, J. Underwood, Rob. Baxter, and John Frost. Little is known of the future of these boys; but one of them has been immortalised by the grateful author in some verses of exquisite beauty, this one was Samuel Pavey, the second in the list just quoted. Misled by the abbreviation used for his Christian name, Sir John Hawkins calls him Salathiel, and Warton, Salvadore, two names of like beginning, but of very opposite meanings and endings. Ben Jonson's epitaph is so beautiful that it may be well used as an ornament to this subject.

"Weep with me all ye that read
This little story;
And know, for whom a tear you shed,
Death's self is sorry.
'Twas a child, that did so thrive
In grace and feature,
As Heaven and nature seemed to strive
Who owned the creature.
Years he numbered scarce thirteen
When fates turned cruel;
Yet three filled zodiacs had he been
The stage's jewel;
And did act, what now we moan
Old men so duly;
As, sooth, the Parcæ thought him one
He played so truly.
So, by error to his fate
They all consented;
But viewing him since, alas, too late!
They have repented;
And have sought, to give new birth,
In baths to steep him;
But being so much too good for earth,
Heaven vows to keep him."

It may be reasonably imagined (further to quote Warton) that the great reputation these children performers gained, excited the jealousy of the grown actors at the theatres; and Shakspeare himself endeavours to extenuate the applause which was idly indulged to their performance, perhaps not always very just, in the following speeches of Rosencrantz and Hamlet:—Ros. "There is an aery of little children, little eyases, they cry out on the top of the question, and are most tyranically clapped for't, these are now the fashion, and so berattle the common stages, so they call them, that many wearing rapiers are afraid of goose-quills, and dare scarce come hither." Ham. What, are they children? Who maintains them? How are they escoted? Will they pursue the quality no longer than they can sing?" Answers to Hamlet's questions have not been found, for it seems that even so long ago as the period alluded to, the boys were treated as the Cathedral boys of comparatively recent times were, that is to say carefully looked after so long as they were a source of profit, but little regarded afterwards.

The limits of the present paper prevent any further enquiry into the connection between Church and Stage; it will be sufficient only now to point out the main causes of the disseverance of the two interests, as far as the singing-boys of St. Paul's and of the Chapel Royal are concerned, these choirs being the most important and the longest to hold this ground. Accident and royal displeasure effected that which survived many shades of opinion, and failed to be reformed by any. The Cathedral being destroyed by the great fire of London in 1666, greatly weakened the bond between the stage and the "children of Paul's" by temporarily dispersing the choir; and in a later time Queen Anne, influenced by a proper and sensible feeling on the subject, prohibited the children of her chapel from taking part in stage-plays for hire or the advantage of the master. It is scarcely worth while to speak here of the many instances in which the singers in the most noted choirs, have distinguished themselves upon the stage, alternating, as Tom Brown in his Letters, published 1686, from the Dead to the Living, says—between the Church and the playhouse, like Mahomet's coffin between two loadstones. Neither is it intended to rejoice over the moral advantage obtained by the disunion of Church and Stage; though it may be said that the better knowledge of the propriety which should belong to the condition of those engaged in the service of the Church, has resulted in a change in the management of choirs and choristers, and if there is still room for improvement in many places, the spirit and the will to effect that improvement are happily not wanting. THE ORATORIO CONCERTS.

The fourth Subscription Concert took place at Exeter Hall on the 23rd ult., when Mr. Joseph Barnby's Sacred Cantata, "Rebekah," and Haydn's Oratorio, "The Creation," were the compositions selected for performance, Mr. Barnby's work, originally produced at the "Oratorio Concerts" in April 1870, and given at the Hereford Festival in September of the same year, is now sufficiently well known to render a recapitulation of its merits unnecessary; and we need only say, therefore, that with the enlarged number of vocalists at Exeter Hall, the broad writing in the choral parts, especially the fugue at the conclusion, came out with increased effect. The Evensong too, the commencement of which for altos, tenors, and two basses, unaccompanied, is somewhat trying for a choir, was given well in tune; and the chorus of Damsels, "Who shall be fleetest?" was sung throughout with much refinement. Madame Cora de Wilhorst (who, although no apology was made for her, was obviously suffering from a severe cold) did her best under the circumstances, for the soprano music, and made her greatest effect in "O flower of the verdant lea," which she had evidently studied with much earnestness. Mr. Sims Reeves's rendering of the melodious song, "The soft southern breeze," was a model of chaste and pure vocalisation, and it was only by again and again bowing to the audience that he could escape the encore which his exquisite singing called forth. Herr Stockhausen gave the bass air, "The daughters of the city come," with true artistic feeling, and Mr. Maas displayed an excellent tenor voice and highly cultivated style, more particularly in the duet already mentioned with Madame de Wilhorst. The "Bride's March" was well played and much applauded; and Mr. Barnby, at the conclusion of the work was greeted with the warmest demonstrations of approval. The "Creation," with Madame Cora de Wilhorst, Miss Katherine Poyntz, Miss Strangways, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Maas, Herr Stockhausen and Mr. Thurley Beale, for principal vocalists, was excellently rendered throughout. "On mighty pens" gave Madame de Wilhorst a good opportunity of convincing her audience that she has not only facile execution, but an intelligent appreciation of the composer's meaning; and although her high C would have driven Haydn wild, we presume that modern taste sufficiently sanctions such licence to hold her blameless, especially seeing the liberties constantly indulged in by other great vocalists. Miss Poyntz was highly effective in the music which fell to her share, the duet "Graceful consort" (which she sang with Mr. Thurley Beale) being rendered with much purity of style. One of the finest readings ever heard of the air "In native worth," was given by Mr. Sims Reeves; indeed we may say not only that he rivals every other singer in this beautiful song, but that he actually rivals his former self, for certainly we have never heard him in such thorough possession of all his artistic powers as on this occasion. We need scarcely say that the applause which followed could only be stopped by proceeding with the next piece. Herr Stockhausen sang the solos allotted to him with true artistic expression, the air "Now Heaven in fullest glory" especially creating a marked effect. Mr. Thurley Beale lent valuable aid in the trios, "Most beautiful appear," and "The Lord is great," singing especially well in the duet "Graceful consort," and Mr. Maas again proved himself an efficient and reliable singer in much of the tenor music, his part in the two trios already named being remarkably well given. All the choruses were sung with that crispness and firmness of tone to which Mr. Barnby's excellent choir has now accustomed us. "The Heavens are telling," "Achieved is the glorious work," and "Praise the Lord, ye voices all," displaying the result of a vigorous discipline to the utmost advantage; and we must also warmly commend the exquisite piano with which the choir breathed the words "And the spirit of God mov'd upon the face of the waters." The concert was, as usual, conducted by Mr. Joseph Barnby, and Mr. F. A. W. Docker presided at the organ.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

As no tickets were furnished to us for the first performance of Mr. William Carter's Cantata, "Placida, or the Christian Martyr," our remarks must apply to the second representation, which took place on the 18th ult. Why Mr. Carter should have ventured to place his Cantata before the public with an organ and pianoforte accompaniment only, in a Hall the size of which seems to baffle all attempts to produce a satisfactory effect with a full orchestra, it is not for us to determine; but we are bound to say that a numerous audience appeared amply gratified at the result; and if the composer shared their satisfaction, we have no right to complain. The story of "Placida" is destitute of dramatic interest, but it is well put together, and skilfully laid out for music. That Mr. Carter has written a work which will live we cannot say, but that there is very much merit in the composition is beyond a doubt. With the exception of the airs, "O daughter mine" (excellently sung by Mr. Arthur Byron), and "There is a gem" (equally well rendered by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington), the songs have but little character. The real strength is in the choruses and concerted pieces. In the chorus, "God's mercy is on them that fear Him," we have some really effective writing, the fugue especially being well wrought out; and the double chorus, "O, that men would praise the Lord," may be also cited as a composition worthy of praise. We care but little for the unaccompanied chorale, "From highest Heaven He came," but the chorus of Angels, "Come, ye blessed children of the Father," is a smooth piece which may probably make its way apart from the Cantata. The Trio, "Dear, tender child" (encored) is somewhat too suggestive of Mendelssohn to satisfy those who expect new ideas in new works, but it is extremely effective, and was exquisitely sung by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Madile. Anna Drasdil and Mr. Lewis Thomas. Had Mr. Carter more relied upon himself he would have achieved a greater success in the dramatic music which concludes the work, but Mendelssohn and Handel haunt us, even in spite of ourselves, and much clever writing suffers in consequence. The "Solemn March" (well played upon the organ by Mr. George Carter, and encored) recommends itself to a popular audience by its rhythmical subject, but it is monotonous, and rather ponderous than mournful. The choir, consisting of 1,000 voices, sang the music with an evident desire to do the utmost justice to the composer; and in addition to the principal vocalists already named, Mr. Henry Guy and Mr. Chaplin Henry lent efficient aid. The Cantata was preceded by a "Thanksgiving Anthem for the Recovery of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales," the composition also of Mr. William Carter, of the merits of which, as it is an occasional work, and as the convalescence of His Royal Highness is happily likely to continue, it will be scarcely necessary to speak, any reason for its repetition being we hope at a far distant date. The solo parts in this Anthem were sung by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington and Madlle. Anna Drasdil. A second Part, of miscellaneous music, followed the Cantata, in which all the vocalists mentioned (with the exception of Mr. Lewis Thomas) took part. We cannot conclude our notice without bearing testimony to the excellent manner in which Mr. George Carter presided at the organ, and Mr. William Carter at the pianoforte.

On the 4th ult., an evening concert was given in the St. Paul's National Schools, Southwark, under the direction of the organist, Miss Helen Edith Green. The first part consisted of selections from the works of Handel, Mozart, and Mendelssohn, and the second of songs, duets, glees, &c. Miss Green was enthusiastically applauded for her rendering of "Wapping old stairs," as was also Miss Florence Earle for "Ringing the flower bells," and Miss Rosa Hughes for "Rescued." "The Lord is a man of war" was well sung by Mr. Green and Mr. Arthur Green. Mr. William Harris's voice was heard to advantage in "Honour and arms," and M. Dessurne's singing of "Il balen" was much admired. A pianoforte trio, performed by the Misses Green and Miss Hughes, was also deservedly well received. Mendelssohn's Eight-part Psalm, "Judge me, O God," the "Kyrie" and "Gloria" from Mozart's Mass in G, and other pieces, were carefully rendered by the chorus, which was composed of members of several choirs. The room was well attended and the concert very successful.

By the New York Times we learn with regret that Mr. Theodore Hagen, editor and proprietor of the New York Weekly Review, died on the 27th December, of disease of the heart.

The third of Mr. W. H. Monk's Classical Concerts was given at the Assembly Rooms, Defoe Road, Stoke Newington, on the 23rd ult. As usual, an excellently selected programme was provided, including Mendelssohn's Duet in B flat (op. 45) for pianoforte and violoncello, and Beethoven's Trio in C minor (op. 1, No. 3,) for pianoforte, violin and violoncello, the executants being Herr Pauer (pianoforte), Mr. H. Holmes (violin), and Signor Pezze (violoncello). Herr Pauer also played Schubert's Impromptu in B flat and Weber's well-known Rondo in E flat, and, the latter composition being encored, he gave with equal success his own piece, "La Cascade." Mr. H. Holmes's performance of a Barcarole by Spohr and a Bourée by Bach, on the violin, was also an interesting feature in the programme. The vocalists were Miss Marion Severn and Mr. Percy Rivers, the former singing Gounod's song "There is a green hill far away," with true religious feeling, and the latter giving a highly intelligent reading of Beethoven's "Adelaide." The vocal music was ably accompanied by Mr. W. H. Monk.

On Thursday, the 18th ult., the Railway Clearing House Musical Society gave a successful concert in the spacious dining-hall of the establishment, before a large audience. The band and chorus numbered 100 performers, conducted by Mr. W. Williams. The programme consisted of the "Kyrie" and "Gloria" from Mozart's Twelfth Mass, Locke's music to "Macbeth," W. H. Birch's popular Operetta, "The Merrie Men of Sherwood Forest," and a good selection of songs and overtures. The Operetta was the principal feature of the evening. The part of Robin Hood (tenor) was excellently sung by Mr. Hildersley, and Mrs. Bishop, as Maid Marion, used her voice with good effect, particularly in "Sweet echo" (flute obbligato, Mr. W. G. James), which was listened to with rapt attention. The duet "I'll love thee still," by Mrs. Bishop and Mr. Hildersley, was warmly appreciated. "To arms, to arms, the trumpet sounds," was rendered by Mr. Hildersley with much taste. The parts of Little John and Friar Tuck were very creditably taken by Messrs. Young and Westley. The choruses were well sung throughout, and the band, under the able leadership of Mr. R. H. James, performed in a very creditable manner. This is the second concert which has been given by this new Society, which already numbers upwards of 150 members.

The Brixton Choral Society gave the second concert of the season on Monday the 22nd ult., when Mendelssohn's "Lauda Sion" and J. F. Barnett's "Ancient Mariner" were given. If we mistake not, the latter work was performed by the Society two years ago, but the progress of the choir, under Mr. Lemare's judicious training, during that time, was very forcibly shown by the spirited manner in which the choruses were sung. The solos in both Cantatas were entrusted to Miss Ellen Horne, Madame Poole, Mr. W. H. Hillier and Mr. Thos. Distin. Mr. Harrison very ably presided at the organ for the "Lauda Sion," and at the pianoforte for the "Ancient Mariner." Mr. William Lemare conducted in his usual careful manner; and the result of the performance was highly satisfactory. We learn that the "Creation" is the next work to be rehearsed.

A concert was given at the Chelsea Literary and Scientific Institution, Vestry Hall, King's Road, on the 5th ult., the principal vocalists being Miss Pattie Laverne, Miss Emily Pittard, Mr. Stedman, Mr. Thurley Beale and Mr. Limpus. Two movements of Beethoven's "Kreutzer Sonata," for pianoforte and violin, were so well played by Mr. Otto Booth and Mr. Hoyte that the performers were enthusiastically recalled. A duet by Artot was also given by the same artists, and Mr. Hoyte created a marked effect by his performance of Liszt's Fantasia on "Rigoletto." Miss Pattie Laverne was highly successful in her songs, and elicited a hearty encore for Venzano's "Ah che assorta," Miss Emily Pittard received the same compliment for her singing of "My love, he is a sailor," Mr. Stedman was warmly applauded in his two songs, "Love's Request" and "The anchor's weighed," and the other vocalists were equally successful. Mr. Limpus was the accompanist.

We sincerely trust that the retirement of Mr. John Goss from the post of Organist of St. Paul's Cathedral—an office which he has held for so many years with honour to himself and benefit to the art—will not involve any diminution of his activity in composition; for, in spite of the undoubted talent exhibited by many who have latterly written for the church, the service-music of so consummate an artist can scarcely be too much multiplied. We are informed that he will continue to retain the title of "Organist of St. Paul's," and receive the emoluments of his office; and it is only necessary to add that, in common with all who have been brought into contact with him during his professional career, we earnestly hope that he may experience renewed health and vigour by that cessation from his more laborious duties which he has so nobly earned. His successor, Dr. John Stainer, M.A., is so well known as an able musician and excellent organist, that little doubt can exist as to his conscientiously fulfilling the duties, and worthily upholding the dignity, of the responsible position which he has accepted. As a fitting conclusion to his active official career, Mr. Goss has been commissioned to compose both an Anthem and a "Te Deum" for the forthcoming Thanksgiving for the recovery of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, which is to take place at St. Paul's. We are authorized to say that those who desire to sing in the choir on this occasion, must address the Rev. the Succentor of St. Paul's, Mr. Goss having no power in the matter; and we believe that persons wishing to gain admittance into the body of the Cathedral, should at once apply to the Lord Chamberlain.

The Report of the Committee of the Birmingham Amateur Harmonic Association, presented at the Annual Meeting on the 19th December, shows that the affairs of the Association are in a highly satisfactory state, and that the balance in hand at the commencement of the year has been sensibly increased. Two concerts have been given in the Grand Assembly Room of the Masonic Hall, at the first of which Handel's "Jephtha" was performed with the utmost success; and a third was to have taken place on the 12th December, but was postponed in consequence of the serious illness of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales. The financial results of these performances have fully realised the expectations of the Committee; and it is confidently anticipated that, with the renewed exertions of the members during the present year, the subscription list may be very materially enlarged. All interested in the progress of high class music must wish this excellently conducted Society every possible success.

Mr. Henry Leslie's prospectus of the seventeenth season of his Concerts is exceedingly interesting, the music selected being just of that kind for the due interpretation of which his excellently trained choir is unrivalled. In addition to the best Madrigals by the composers of the Elizabethan period, and the choicest modern Part-songs, we are promised a new Cantata, "Praise ye the Lord," by Mr. Henry Holmes; Gounod's "Ave Verum," (composed expressly for Mr. Henry Leslie's choir), Schubert's twenty-third Psalm, for female voices, "The Lord is my Shepherd," and Bach's Motett, for double choir, "The Spirit also helpeth us." Carissimi's "Jonah" is also included in the prospectus, a revival which cannot but excite much attention, as it is one of the earliest attempts at Oratorio, and but little indeed is known of this composer in the present day. The work has been translated from the original Latin text, and prepared for performance by Mr. Henry Leslie. The first of the four Subscription Concerts announced will take place on the 9th inst.

The following loyal and dutiful address to Her Majesty was unanimously passed at the Christmas General Meeting of the Royal Society of Musicians of Great Britain:—"To the Queen's most Excellent Majesty. The Royal Society of Musicians of Great Britain, in General Meeting assembled, desire most humbly to approach your Majesty with feelings of joy, respect, and loyal devotion, in congratulating your Majesty on the convalescence of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. In sorrow and affliction, it has ever been the high privilege of the divine art of music to soothe the weary and to be the means of 'delivering the poor that cry.'* This Society looks back with pride, and recollects the constant—it might with sincerity add affectionate—interest with which your Majesty and your Majesty's predecessors have, from the time of Handel, watched its progress and the beneficent nobility of the profession of music. Therefore it renders it peculiarly the province of the Musicians of this land to tender their homage, and sing the praises of God's mercy in sparing to the nation their beloved Prince, your Majesty's son. Before commencing the duties, this day (of ministering to the wants of their necessitous brethren, their widows and orphans), the Members of this Society venture to express their respectful sympathy with your Majesty, Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales, H.R.H. the Princess Louis of Hesse, H.R.H. the Princess Christian, H.R.H. the Princess Louise, H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, and the rest of your Majesty's family, during the sad long hours of the past month, and to anticipate many happy returns of the forthcoming new year, crowded with the blessings, the Royal Society of Musicians of Great Britain (in common with the rest of your people) pray may be showered around your Majesty's throne. By order, Stanley Lucas, Secretary.—Christmas General Meeting, 12 Lisle Street, Leicester Square, W."

A clever and caustic article upon modern singers' high note cadences, which recently appeared in the Birmingham Morning News, will we hope have the effect of helping to draw attention to this rapidly spreading disease. The author very truly asks whether, if the high notes with which it is now the custom to conclude popular solos had been thought an improvement, the composers would not have written them; and desires to know what would be the probable effect upon the audience if at the end of Beethoven's "Pastoral Symphony," the whole of the performers, in a "grand cadence," were to rush up to the highest notes their instruments were capable of producing, or if Mr. Charles Hallé were to wind up the "Moonlight Sonata" by a powerful chord at the top of the pianoforte. Our readers will know that this is a practice upon which we have often commented; and we are glad to find that the matter has been ventilated in a town of such musical reputation as Birmingham.

BY accounts continually received from America we learn that the attraction of Madame Parepa-Rosa, as principal soprano in all the standard Operas, has, if possible, increased since her return to that country. Her re-organised Grand Opera Company was received with enthusiasm in Washington; and at Buffalo, after her performance of Martha, the Russian Grand Duke Alexis (who is now on a visit to America) presented her with an elegant gold bracelet of Russian workmanship, set with twelve turquoises and twenty-eight diamonds, in remembrance of the pleasure he had experienced in listening for the first time to her exquisite voice. The manner in which all the Operas performed by the Parepa-Rosa company have been placed upon the stage reflects the utmost credit upon all concerned; and it may also be said that much of the success which has attended the enterprise is owing to the skill and judgment of Carl Rosa, whose artistic taste and admirable leadership in the presentation of the highest class works cannot be too much commended.

MR. EARDLEY PHILLIPS, the talented organist of St. Stephen's, South Lambeth, was presented with a handsome cabinet-inkstand by the members of the church choir on Monday, the 8th ult. The testimonial was intended as a slight acknowledgment of Mr. Phillips's unremitting attention to the members of the choir at their weekly rehearsals.

THE members of the Crystal Palace Choir resumed their weekly rehearsals on Thursday evening, the 11th ult., on which occasion they presented Mr. Manns with an elegant silver tea and coffee service, together with an address, beautifully emblazoned by one of themselves, expressive of the affectionate esteem in which he is held by them, both for his great musical talents and uniform kindness and courtesy. Mr. Grove, the Secretary of the Palace, kindly undertook to make the presentation, and in a very feeling and pertinent address, felicitously expressed his own warm personal regard, and also of those for whom he volunteered his services. Mr. Manns' reply was marked by a happy union of the emotional and humorous, which tended, if possible, to strengthen still further the bonds of friendship between conductor and choir A few complimentary speeches brought to a close a very pleasant and interesting ceremony.

A VERY successful performance of the "Messiah" took place at Trevor Congregational Church, Brompton, on the 17th ult., in aid of the fund now raising for repairs. The vocalists were Miss Maria Langley, Miss Mary Johnson, Miss E. Willmott Renshaw and Messrs. J. and T. Soper. The organists were Mr. E. Willmott Renshaw and Miss Mary Johnson, and the conductor was Mr. Walter Johnson. A large audience was assembled.

THE "Monday Evening Musical and Literary Entertainments," given in the Pimlico Rooms weekly, prove successful, and supply a want long felt in the neighbourhood, besides being an aid to works of deserving charity. The managers, Messrs. J. Baucutt and C. A. Stein, spare no pains to make the concerts interesting. On Monday, the 8th ult., the vocalists were Mesdames Rolfe, Brown and Buley, each of whom contributed some excellent songs. Mrs. Dauncey Maskell lent her valuable aid, and displayed much elocutionary power and pathos in the various selections rendered by her. Mr. J. Baucutt and Mr. C. A. Stein also took part in the entertainment. The Misses Herbert presided at the pianoforte.

THE prospectus of the sixth season of the Schubert Society, under the presidency of Sir Julius Benedict and the directorship of Herr Schuberth, announces four concerts during the ensuing season. We are quite at a loss to understand the meaning of the title of the Society; but as it is especially formed for the purpose of performing classical and comparatively unknown works, chiefly of chamber music, and as this intention has been hitherto ably carried out, we cordially hope that it may meet with the success it deserves.

THE St. George's Glee Union gave a special concert at the Pimlico Rooms on the 15th ult., when, in addition to concerted pieces by the choir, of which Sullivan's "Hush thee, my babie," gave the most satisfaction, valuable assistance was rendered by Mr. G. T. Carter, who was encored in "Tom Bowling;" Mr. H. Guy, who, though new to the audience, was compelled to repeat "Anita;" Mr. Thurley Beale, who received the same compliment for his singing of the "Bellringer;" and Mr. Chaplin Henry, whose voice was heard to much advantage in the song "In sheltered vale." Miss Annie Lennox and Miss Blanche Reives were also highly effective, the latter receiving much applause in "Through the wood." Among the instrumentalists were Miss Ellen Bliss, who played "Il tremolo" admirably; Mr. Tamplin, who delighted the audience by his performance on the Mustel organ; and Herr Schuberth, who was equally successful on the violoncello. Mr. W. H. Bridges conducted with his usual ability.

A MEETING fully attended by upwards of seventy representatives of the leading manufacturers of musical instruments in the United Kingdom was held in the East Theatre of the Royal Albert Hall on Saturday, the 20th ult., to consider what musical pitch should be recommended to Her Majesty's Commissioners for adoption, with regard to the Recitals which will be given during the Exhibition of 1872 upon those instruments accepted for exhibition. The following members of the Musical Committee attended:—Lord Gerald Fitz-Gerald, the Hon. Seymour Egerton, Mr. Frank Morrison, Mr. Alam Cole, and there were also present Sir Julius Benedict, Mr. John Hullah, Mr. G. A. Macfarren, Herr E. Pauer, Mr. W. Ganz, Mr. Pittman, Mr. J. Rivière, &c., &c., and other gentlemen representing foreign commissions. Mr. John Hullah was voted to the chair. A discussion ensued, in which gentlemen representing the firms of Messrs. Broadwood, Henry Brinsmead, Distin & Co., Boosey & Co., Bevington, Kohler, and Forster took part. Mr. Macfarren then moved that H.M. Commissioners should be recommended to adopt the musical pitch which the Society of Arts twelve years ago suggested for general use, viz.: that of 528 vibrations to C. Sir Julius Benedict seconded this motion and Mr. Ernst Pauer suggested, that in the event of its being carried, a tuning-fork of the pitch proposed should be circulated by H.M. Commissioners not only to English, but also to foreign manufacturers. The motion was then put to the meeting and was carried with only one dissentient. Captain the Hon. Seymour Egerton and Lieut. E. G. Clayton, R.E., attended on behalf of H.M. Commissioners.

A SCHOLARSHIP, presented by the Mendelssohn Foundation Committee to the Royal Academy of Music, has been awarded to Miss Mary Crawford. Mr. Eaton Faning was highly commended.

STEAM POWER WORKS—

And HERTFORD PLACE.

Madame Angus Weldon, who has a rich contralto voice, was enthusiastically encored in "The lark now leaves his wat'ry nest," Miss Arabella Warren gave, with good feeling, "I mourn as a dove," from "St. Peter;" and Mr. J. H. Croft sang with much pathos, "If with all your hearts," and Mattei's "Non è ver." A selection of choruses, glees and quartets were very creditably performed by lady and gentlemen amateurs from the neighbourhood.

Mr. John Gill has retired from the management of the Choir at St. James's, Marylebone. All the Choir Boys left with Mr. Gill, and have presented him with a handsome inkstand, as a mark of their esteem and regard.

The directors of the Crystal Palace Company have fixed the 1st of May for a grand National Festival in celebration of the recovery of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales; and have commissioned Mr. Arthur Sullivan to compose a Te Deum, for voices and orchestra, to be performed on the largest scale in the centre transept on that day.

The National Music Meetings, to be held during the ensuing summer at the Crystal Palace, have already awakened a lively interest amongst those who desire the healthy progress of every branch of the art in this country. We understand that a Council will be formed, consisting of the most eminent authorities in music, from which body the competitors for the prizes will elect a jury by ballot. It will be seen by an advertisement in our present number that Messrs. Novello will publish the whole of the choral music to be used on the occasion. Most of the works in Classes 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, will be issued in the cheap form, so that every facility will be afforded to Choral Societies for procuring and preparing the pieces for competition, the number and order of which are to be decided by the jury in each class. The first annual meeting is announced for June 27, 29, July 2, 4, and 6.

We understand that it is the intention of Herr Stockhausen to give a series of Three Recitals during the ensuing month, consisting of selections from Schubert's Schöne Müllerin, and Winterreise, and Schumann's Dichterliebe. He will be assisted by Miss Agnes Zimmermann and Madlle. Sophie Loewe. The singing of this eminent artist has so enlisted the sympathies of the musical public during his stay in this country that little doubt can exist of the interest with which this announcement will be received; for, apart from the pleasure which must be derived from the performance of comparatively unknown works, so intellectual a reading of them as may be confidently anticipated must appeal most powerfully to all the lovers of high-class German music. Herr Stockhausen, we are informed, will only sing in London during the present season at these Recitals and at the "Oratorio Concerts."

Reviews.

Novello, Ewer and Co.

Awake, awake, put on thy strength, O Zion. Anthem for four voices, chorus and semi-chorus, by J. Stainer.

The translation of Dr. Stainer from one of the Oxford Chapels to the Cathedral of London calls particular attention to those artistic labours, which are his credentials for the new office. His publication of a book on musical theory is a justification to the world of any tenets peculiar to himself, and reference must be made to that work for explanation of some passages in the anthem before us that seem unaccountable upon principles elsewhere enunciated. A course of harmony for instance at the turning over from page 3 to 4, and the singular progression from a second inversion of a chord of G minor between bars 2 and 3 at the top of page 14, are remarkable, and to some hearers, not satisfactory. The anthem is in four movements, one of which is a choral recitative, and in this the novel device is employed of omitting the bar-lines, which gives the utmost freedom to the singers, but at the cost of control; since, even, where a conductor was present, it would be difficult to make a number of executants hold the same path without defining roadmarks, but where, as in a church, they must be without direction, the difficulty must be increased, if not rendered insuperable. The work is avowedly designed for use on Saints' days, Ordinations, at Choral Festivals, and occasions of general Thanksgivings. Its extent and its variety of character fit it for such seasons; the second movement, "How beautiful upon the mountains," being for semi-chorus or for four solo voices, will make a good contrast to what precedes and follows; and the organ part, which is often independent of the voices, will much enrich their effect. This last is a resource of which our elder English writers made little avail; and it is turned to best account by such a master of the instrument as is the author of the piece under notice.

The Erl-King's Daughter. Ballad, founded on Danish Legends. The English version by Miss Louisa Vance. The music composed for solo voices, chorus and orchestra, by Niels W. Gade. Op. 30.

"Whether we become acquainted or not," writes Mendelssohn to Gade in 1842, "I beg you will always look on me as one who will never cease to regard your works with love and sympathy, and who will ever feel the greatest and most cordial delight in meeting with such an artist as yourself." In spite of the years which have elapsed since this letter was penned, how little progress have the works of this composer made, especially in this country. And yet the Cantata before us, had we indeed no other composition by which to judge, affords ample proof not only of his creative faculty, but of the possession of a dramatic power which is too rare to be disregarded. The subject of the Cantata is based upon old Danish ballads, the English version, by Miss Louisa Vance, being really so excellent as to appear as if it had been originally written in that language. A short instrumental Introduction, in which occurs the subject afterwards sung by the Erl-maidens, leads to a chorus which forms what is called the "Prologue" to the work. The first Part then commences with a chorus (the voices quaintly beginning on a $\frac{2}{4}$) interspersed with solos for Oluf and his Mother. The principal theme of this piece is extremely melodious, and a prominent figure in the accompaniment occurring in various keys, is a highly interesting point. After a characteristic song for Oluf, a duet with his Mother, commencing in A minor, is effectively concluded by the chorus bursting in with a forte, upon the words "The black steed rushes," first in the minor, and afterwards in the tonic major. The song for Oluf at the commencement of Part 2, "Night, thou art silent," is extremely beautiful. The voice starts upon a dominant seventh, with a striking melody; and the accompaniment in triplets, and afterwards in rapid semiquavers, gives much intensity to the expression of the words. An exquisitely light and fanciful chorus of Erl-maidens then occurs (the theme of which is heard, as we have said, in the instrumental Introduction to the "Prologue")which is twice most effectively interrupted by a solo for Oluf. This is succeeded by a dramatic scene for the Erl-King's Daughter, Oluf and Chorus, which ends the second Part. A "Morning Hymn" ushers in Part 3, the calm and devotional character of which is in admirable sympathy with the words. The two last numbers of the Part are chiefly choral, but with most effective solos for Oluf and his Mother, the death of the knight being expressed with true pathos. The passionate grief of the Mother having subsided, the chorus sings with deep solemnity the words "Sir Oluf is dead;" and with a brief choral "Epilogue," the Cantata ends. We can of course give but a faint idea of the beauties of this work by the few lines our space has permitted us to devote to it; but we have little doubt that now it is for the first time available in this country, and more especially in the cheap octavo edition, Choral Societies will eagerly procure it and judge for themselves.

Der Freischütz (The Freeshooter); Romantic Opera, in three acts. Composed by Carl Maria von Weber. Edited, and in greater part translated into English, by Natalia Macfarren.

In preparing a carefully edited version of this work for the English public, it became necessary for Mrs. Macfarren boldly to state her reason for very materially differing from the translation which time, rather than artistic taste, has sanctioned in this country. An Opera so thoroughly German both in the story and music as "Der Freischütz" cannot be baldly rendered into English rhyme by one who does not deeply sympathise with the earnest manner in which the composer has set the original words; and we are glad to find therefore, in a note to the present edition, that no portion of the accepted version has been retained (save in the first lines of some of the best known pieces) whenever it interfered with the due expression of the music. As one instance of the improvement effected in this new translation, we may mention the Scena generally known as "Softly sighs." It is impossible to imagine words more thoroughly appropriate to the opening phrase of the beautiful prayer than those which Mrs. Macfarren has written, "Softly sighing—day is dying," or any more opposed to the rhythmical expression of the melody than the familiar ones, "Softly sighs the—voice of evening." Again in the duet, No. 6, usually known as "Come be gay," the opening solo is always sung in English to words which are not only no translation of the original, but actually have no reference at all to what is taking place upon the stage. That such a wanton disregard of a composer's intention should still be tolerated is a proof how small an amount of attention is given by our native vocalists to the connection between the words and the notes which they are uttering; and the thanks of all admirers of Weber's chef d'œuvre are due therefore to the editor of the version now before us for translating the German text, not only in the duet just mentioned, but throughout the Opera, with that reverence for genius which seems as rare as it is laudable. The indications of the instrumentation, if well studied, will give a very excellent idea of the masterly scoring in this work; and it may be also stated, as an important feature in the edition, that the spoken dialogue is the acting version as performed in Germany, largely and most judiciously curtailed from the original of Kind. In every respect "Der Freischütz" is one of the most perfect of the many Operas already issued in this popular series.

Festal March, for the Pianoforte. By J. Baptiste Calkin.

If we were merely to say that Mr. Calkin has written a really good March, we should scarcely do him all the justice he deserves, for the festal character of the composition before us is certainly one of its greatest recommendations. The leading subject is bold and well harmonised, and the second theme, in the relative minor, is tuneful and well considered as a contrast. The coda is vigorous and brilliant; and, without making any extraordinary demands upon the player, the piece will be certain to prove effective. The March is also carefully arranged by the composer for four hands.

Novello's Part-Song Book (Second Series). A Collection of Four-part Songs, composed by Henry Smart.

This book, forming Volume 8 of the second series of Novello's Part-Song Book, contains a choice selection of these compositions by one of the most successful writers of the day. Those who possess themselves of the entire work will have indeed a mine of wealth to work upon, for although some of the songs may be liked better than others, there is an almost indescribable charm about each which cannot fail to produce its effect, even with a mixed audience. It would be impossible to mention the characteristics of every composition in the volume, considering that they number twenty-one, but some of our favourites must be pointed out. No. 1, "The Shepherd's Farewell," has a smooth and appropriate melody, a beautiful point being gained in the second verse by the Sopranos, Tenors and Basses singing the words "She sleeps, perchance she dreams of me" staccato, whilst the Altos sustain a note to the end of the phrase. No. 3 is a really religious "Ave Maria," simple in the extreme, but exquisitely voiced, and full of effect. No. 4, "Spring," flows in $\frac{9}{8}$ rhythm, with a true feeling for the words. We especially like the last three bars, where the Sopranos mount to the high A♮, holding it whilst the other parts move in smooth quavers. In No. 6, "Hymn to Cynthia," the composer has completely caught the spirit of Ben Jonson's quaint poetry, and the result is a capital part-song, which will however require careful and intelligent singing to give it due effect. No. 7, "Cradle Song," is a perfect gem: the Basses, divided, sustain the key-note and fifth, the Altos enter on the third bar, singing the word "lullaby" twice in the same measure, whilst the Tenors, and, afterwards the Sopranos, have a legato melody of extreme beauty. These effects are occasionally varied, and after some transient modulations, the return to the original subject is managed with consummate skill. It would be impossible to speak too highly in praise of this song; from first to last, it is the work of a refined artist. No. 9, "Dream, baby, dream," is another very excellent composition, full of sympathetic feeling and highly effective. No. 13, "Sweet Vesper Hymn," has a melodious theme, commencing with the Tenors, the placid nature of which proves how deeply the composer studies the nature of the words he undertakes to set. No. 15, "Stars of the Summer Night," expresses Longfellow's popular verses with remarkable fidelity. The subject is very striking, and the voice parts are occasionally broken with excellent effect. There is much character in No. 16, "Wind thy horn." Starting wilh a bold movement in four parts, we afterwards get some effective points by repetitions of the cry "Hilliho," whilst a note is sustained by the other voices. No. 17, "The Land of Wonders" (the words translated from the German of Schiller) has a legato theme, the repose of which is extremely sympathetic with the poetry. The change from triple to double rhythm gives much interest to the close of the song; and the conclusion of the Sopranos upon the fifth of the chord is also a point worth attention. No. 18, "Ye little birds that sit and sing," may be cited as a well written and melodious composition; and No. 21, "Now May is here," which is somewhat more varied in contrapuntal effects than most of the songs in the collection, is strikingly beautiful throughout. We can scarcely doubt that a volume so rich in contents will command a rapid and extensive sale.

CRAMER, WOOD AND CO.

Three Musical Sketches for the Pianoforte Composed by C. W. Smith.

Mr. Smith writes like a cultivated pianist, but as his compositions do not come under our notice for the first time, we candidly confess that we had hoped for unmistakable signs of progress—not so much in the ideas as in the forms of his pieces. The "Lieder ohne Worte" school is a delusive one. A very common-place melody singing at the top of a series of arpeggios, is apt to sound very much better than it really is; and we should counsel any composer who devotes his attention to the production of these wordless songs to play his theme simply with the harmonies and ask himself how he likes it. Mr. Smith's first sketch has really so little save its gracefulness to recommend it that we doubt whether it would repay the trouble required to play the two hands with sufficient smoothness to ensure the effect required by the author. No. 2, a Presto in G Minor, although too Mendelssohnian in character, we like much better. There is vivacity in the opening subject; and the second theme, notwithstanding the monotony caused by its being in the same key, has a tranquil character which is extremely effective. The "Andante Cantabile," No. 3, is a smooth, flowing melody, moving chiefly in crotchets for both hands. The harmonies are appropriate and well written, and the piece will form good practice for legato playing. We hope to meet Mr. Smith again, and trust that he may be induced to try his hand at music of a more varied character and style.

Lamborn Cock and Co.

Gavotte. For the Pianoforte.
Second Polonaise. Ditto.
Composed by Walter Macfarren.

It is a significant sign of the times when not only the solid works of the old composers are constantly revived, but modern writers are throwing their ideas into those forms which, until the last few years, it was feared had been allowed to die out. A good sterling piece like Mr. Macfarren's Gavotte will do much towards directing the taste of pianists into the right channel; for, in addition to its being cast in a classical mould, it is melodious and pleasing enough to charm all players. The first phrase is bold and striking; and the legato theme in the subdominant, with its transient modulations, contrasts well with the opening subject. Throughout this Gavotte the composer has happily caught the style and spirit of the old dance; and pianists will do well to possess themselves of a piece which will be found excellent both for practice and performance. There is much originality in the subject of the Polonaise; and this is high praise for a composition, the rhythmical character of which invests even trifling themes with a factitious importance. It commences in G minor, and the placid nature of the second subject, in the tonic major, prevents any of that monotony which is so often observable in music of this class. The return to the first theme, and the coda, are managed with much skill, the conclusion being both brilliant and effective. These pieces will advance Mr. Macfarren's reputation as a composer of what, for want of a better term, must be called "drawing-room music."

C. Jefferys.

The Chase of the Fairies. For the Pianoforte.
The Haunt of the Wood Nymphs. Ditto.
Composed by Henri Bevani.

These two graceful little sketches, intended for young players, are sufficiently tuneful to fulfil their object. The harmonies, however, are open to objection, and might be revised in parts with much advantage to the compositions. In the "Chase of the Fairies," for instance (seventh bar of the subject), the A sharp against the A natural leads very oddly to the chord of B major; and the eleventh bar (which, on its recurrence, is scarcely ever harmonised twice alike) seems to have no legitimate place in the chain of chords. We like the second piece better, both melody and harmony being more duly considered. The subject, too, has decided character, and a good contrast is gained in the second theme by giving it to the left hand, with an accompaniment for the right. Juvenile pianists will, we think, be pleased with both these pieces, for their limited capacities have been well cared for by the composer.

The Musical Directory, Annual and Almanack for 1872.
The Professor's Pocket Book, and Daily and Hourly Engagement Diary for 1872. Published under the immediate direction of Sir Julius Benedict.

The "Musical Directory" should be so valuable as a reliable work for reference that we have been especially careful, in our annual inspection of its contents, to point out any errors which may have crept in; and, as our readers know, this calalogue of mistakes, at first somewhat formidable, has diminished with each number, until we have now a really useful and dependable book, which should be in the hands of every person connected with the art. In spite of the increasing watchfulness of the editor, however, we must wait until 1873 for the last remnant of carelessness to disappear, for in the number before us it is stated that Paganini died on the 27th April, 1840, and again on the 27th May of the same year. In the opening article, on the musical events which have taken place during the year 1871, we are again reminded what a positive blank it has been as far as the progress of the art is concerned, and can only hope that the coming season may be more fruitful in tangible results. The "Pocket Book" appears for the second year, under the able supervision of Sir Julius Benedict. For professional men this little work will prove invaluable, for not only is there a separate line to record engagements for every hour in the day throughout the year, but a very large amount of information is given which is often wanted when neither time nor opportunity will admit of reference to other books.

We have received a letter from Dr. Stainer pointing out a mis-print in the review upon his "Theory of Harmony" in our last number, which totally obscures his meaning. At page 342 the quoted sentence should commence "If he compose for the mart,"—not art.

Original Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—I have read Dr. Stainer's Paper "On the Rhythmical Form of an Anglican Chant," which appears in the current number of your excellent journal, and as I cannot but feel that his theory is altogether erroneous, and founded on an assumed axiom unwarranted by any natural laws governing such questions, will you kindly permit me to offer a few remarks on the subject?

He commences by stating that a single Chant consists of two parts, containing 3 and 4 bars respectively, each part being separated by a double bar. This he scans as one musical phrase of 7 bars, simply because 3+4=7, and on this hypothesis proceeds to found his argument.

Now I have always understood the term "phrase" to mean an incomplete idea, and I cannot consider a single Chant as coming under that designation. Again, rhythm is measured by accent, and if, for the sake of arguing the question raised, on equal terms, it is for once admitted that a Chant is constructed according to the laws of any recognised musical form, the strongly marked θεσις, on the reciting note in the fourth bar, clearly conveys the impression to the ear that a new phrase commences at that point. The existence of two phrases, therefore, of 3 and 4 bars, constituting a "cross rhythm" (such as exists in the Scherzo of Beethoven's Choral Symphony), found symmetrically complete in a double chant, and rendered so in a single chant by its repetition, becomes at once apparent.

The opening of the Andante in Schubert's op. 120 does not in its rhythmical arrangement bear the slightest resemblance to Chant structure. It is however undoubtedly a seven-bar phrase of 21 pulses, and I therefore fail to see, in the event of its being reduced from triple to duple measure, why it should more naturally fall into an eight-bar phrase of 16 pulses, rather than one of seven bars containing 14 pulses; for in order to effect such a metamorphosis, it becomes necessary to destroy the peculiar rhythm of the last bar, and alter its entire character.

Ex. 4 is certainly not a seven-bar phrase, but embodies two of 4 and 3 bars respectively (present chant form reversed), which sufficiently accounts for its "sounding unlike one when played over several times," to say nothing of the fact that two minims are substituted for one semibreve in the initial bar of each phrase.

Ex. 2 establishes an important point fatal to Dr. Stainer's theory, for here we find the musical accent entirely dependent on that of the words, and the second line of the hymn commencing with an accented syllable, the note of the tune to which that syllable is intended to be sung is placed on the strong beat of the bar. In this particular instance it can be done without offering violence to the musical rhythm; but in many cases where tunes are adapted to verses of altogether irregular metre, the retention of scholastic musical form is of necessity disregarded, the preservation of the verbal accent being the chief consideration.

Now, the "form" of a chant is also entirely dependent on the prosodical arrangement of the words it is intended to illustrate musically, identity of accent being a sine qua non. This fact, however, seems to be utterly ignored by Dr. Stainer, who next presents us with Robinson's Chant, written in such a manner as to entirely destroy this identity of accent, the recognised double bars being omitted, and the reciting notes, with the exception of the first, placed on the weak part of the bar. The effect thus produced certainly proves that "something is supplied by the mind to the chant," that "something" being the θεσις on the reciting note, a result naturally attained, if the seven-bar notion be discarded and a "cross rhythm" substituted.

For the same reason, the extracts from "Elijah" and the Sonata Pathétique of Beethoven give us the same false accent when it is attempted to convert them into Chants, proving conclusively that the structural resemblance insisted on by Dr. Stainer has no foundation in fact. To render this more clearly, I will take the excerpt from "Elijah" in its original form. It is a vocal phrase, the accent falling thus in both music and words:—

And in that still voice, onward came the Lord.

But when adapted to Chant form according to the method indicated, the accentuation will appear thus:—

And in that still voice, onward came the Lord.

And "he must be indeed a sceptic" who, in the face of such evidence as this, fails to see that coincidence of verbal and musical rhythm is an unassailable principle, and that it is consequently impossible, to adapt two four-bar phrases to the form of an Anglican Chant by ignoring the accent on the reciting notes demanded by the exigency of the words. Yet this is precisely the method adopted by Dr. Stainer while endeavouring to write a Chant in such a manner as to present "a real musical sentence." It is indeed a most singular oversight on his part, this being a point of the greatest possible importance; the method of writing a rhythmical melody, imparting to it an individuality that is instantly disturbed if any alteration in its accent is attempted. As a singular instance of this I will cite the opening bars of the Andante in Mendelssohn's 2nd Pianoforte Concerto, commencing thus:—

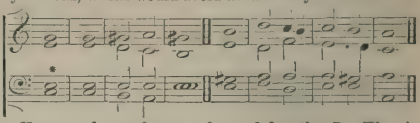
If we render this in triple measure with an altered accent (as in the specimens of adapted Chants referred to above) we produce the following curious plagiarism, that certainly does not exist in Mendelssohn's "subject" as it originally stands:—

&c.

I trust this will act as a salutary warning to any young composers who contemplate writing four-bar phrases with the view of manufacturing good chants on this principle.

Again, I do not see what is gained by the proposed alteration of the orthography of a chant in the endeavour to render it amenable to an assumed form, especially as it is stated that "many chants in this new shape would present absurd forms of melody." Nor can I coincide in his statement that the older method of writing chants forwards his views; for in neither of the two instances with which he furnishes us does the reciting note fall on the weak part of a bar. If, however, in conformity with modern musical ideas, it should be thought desirable to introduce any change, why not adopt the plan indicated by Purcell, which would avoid all difficulty? thus:—



Here we have phrases of equal length, Dr. Elvey's system of pointing is practically carried out, without giving undue prominence to an αρσις as at present, and all false accents are consequently disposed of. Still, until it is proved by actual experiment that we obtain more satisfactory chanting by any alteration in the universally recognised form of the present day, I think we had much better leave matters as they are, "for in recitative and chanting we are no more tied down to stated measure than the ancients, but are governed by the accent and cadence of the words." (Burney, vol i. p. 83)

There is very little doubt, however, that the chant ought simply to be described as recitative, both on account of its nature and origin. If we refer to the history of the Church, we find that the earliest known Christian Chants, were those known as the "Tones Ambrosian," and there is strong reason for supposing that these, although founded on the Greek "modes," are of Hebrew origin, many Jews having sought refuge at Antioch in those remote days. These were afterwards adopted by the Western Church, having been remodelled by Pope Gregory, and from them the modern Anglican Chant is derived. The "Antiphons" used at the commencement and close of each Psalm, during Vespers in the Romish Church, bear undoubted evidence of a Hebrew source, as they are almost identical with the "Musical Accents," called "Pharah," "Karne," &c., still sung before and after each verse of a Psalm by the Spanish and German Jews, many of which can be proved by traditional records to be the same melodies as were originally used in the Temple. In some of these, a kind of reversed recitative is observable, as many as 14 or 15 notes in ad libitum tempo, being sometimes apportioned to one syllable; but the Gregorian Chants proper, are really recitative—and although written without bars, and intended to be sung senza tempo, it will be found that a strong accent is always placed on the reciting notes.

It therefore seems that the present irregular construction of the modern Anglican Chant is authorized by ancient precedent, the double bar being introduced simply to mark the division of the verse at the colon, and the single bars, to assist the singers in attaining something like uniformity, in adapting the interspersed melodial notes to certain fixed syllables immediately preceding the close of each half of the verse, rather than to indicate the existence of anything like strict musical form.

In conclusion, there is one other point on which I fear I must disagree with Dr. Stainer. I cannot admit that the Psalms consist of "prose cut into slices;" on the contrary (to use the words of an esteemed essayist)—"There is no sacrifice of lyrical propriety or poetical method, for if there be poems strictly lyrical;—that is, whose spirit and sentiment move congenial with the movement of music, and which by their very nature call for the accompaniment of music—these Odes of a despised people are such."

Apologising for troubling you with so lengthy a communication, I am, Sir, yours faithfully,

FREDERIC ARCHER.

London, Jan. 16th, 1872.

* I have ventured to substitute E for G here in order to avoid a disagreeable "false relation."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Dear Sir,—In my article on the Rhythm of a Chant in your last number, I guarded myself against claiming any originality in the theory put forward. I am glad I did so, as I find that Professor Oakeley many years ago had followed out the same line of reasoning, and had written a Chant in the form I advocate. To him be the credit.

Yours, truly,
J. Stainer.

Brief Summary of Country News.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

Abbey Leix.—Mr. W. H. Elgar (Organist of the Church) gave his third concert at the Assembly Rooms, on Wednesday, the 17th ult., assisted by pupils and members of his glee class. The programme consisted of glees, duets, trios, and part-songs, all of which were well rendered, and fully merited the hearty applause which greeted them from a crowded audience.

Allerton, Bywater, Castleford.—A concert and reading took place in the National School, on Monday evening, the 22nd ult., before a crowded audience. The Rev. Mr. Winterbottom presided. The readers were the Rev. Mr. Gambles, Messrs. Wilkinson and Dickinson. The vocal portion consisted of glees, trios, and songs, sustained by the church choir, assisted by other friends. Especial mention may be made of the manner in which Messrs. Dickinson, Bellwood and Robinson sang their respective songs. Mrs. Winterbottom and Mr. M. Arnold (of Harrogate) presided alternately at the piano, the latter giving a fantasia, "The murmur of the stream," by W. Borrow, with much effect.

Adelaide.—The Adelaide Philharmonic Society gave the first concert of the third season on Thursday the 2nd November last. The programme was miscellaneous, and included several very effective vocal pieces, Shield's song "The Wolf," by Mr. L. Jagoe, "The return of May," by Mrs. G. T. Harris, and "Sweet sleep be thine, love," by Mr. Searle, being amongst the most prominent solos. A good selection of part-music was also excellently given; and mention must be made of Mr. R. B. White's artistic performance of Mendelssohn's first pianoforte concerto. The band consisted of more than twenty instrumentalists, and the chorus of about a hundred vocalists. Mr. E. Spiller was conductor, Mr. R. B. White, R.A.M., leader, and Mr. J. Shakespeare presided at the pianoforte.

Bath.—On Wednesday evening, the 17th ult., Miss Kate Tylee gave her first concert at the Assembly Rooms, assisted by the following distinguished artists—Madame Florence Lancia (vocalist), M. Sainton (violin), and Herr Daubert (violoncello). The programme consisted of a varied selection of classical music, from the works of some of the most eminent composers. Beethoven's Trio in C minor was the opening piece, performed by M. Sainton, Herr Daubert, and Miss Kate Tylee, which was exceedingly well rendered. Herr Daubert's violoncello solo, "Fantaisie sur Le Desir," was played in excellent style, and M. Sainton's "Fantaisie on Faust" was given with much animation, and heartily applauded. Madame Florence Lancia sang Rossini's "Una voce poco fa" and Gounod's "Serenade" with much feeling and refinement, the latter being unanimously encored, as was also Diodorato's song, "Good night, sweet mother." Miss Kate Tylee displayed much taste and delicacy of touch in her pianoforte solo, "Deux airs Russes," by Thalberg, and she was compelled to repeat the piece. Haydn's Trio in G major No. 1, by M. Sainton, Herr Daubert, and Miss Kate Tylee, concluded the programme. Mr. W. H. Cooke accompanied with considerable ability.——Sir Julius Benedict's St. Peter was performed with excellent effect by Mr Bianchi Taylor's choir on the 20th December, the concert being a complimentary one given by the members of the choir to their esteemed conductor. Miss E. Taylor (who was evidently suffering from a cold), Miss Howarth, and the Misses Brettelle, were thoroughly satisfactory in the parts allotted to them, and Miss Andrews sang "I mourn as a dove" with true devotional feeling, and received an encore. Mr. Moody in "O, house of Jacob," and Mr. Estens in "Though all men shall be offended," perfectly realised the intention of the composer, and the choruses were rendered with remarkable precision and energy. Mr. Bianchi Taylor was received with the heartiest applause on taking his seat at the desk.

Birkenhead.—On Friday the 22nd Dec., the Harmonic Society gave a concert, which was fully and fashionably attended. The principal vocalists were Madame Billinie Porter, Mr. George Wild, and Mr. T. J. Hughes, Mr. Lawson being leader of the band, Mr. Billinie Porter acting as accompanist, and Mr. E. Rogers conducting. The first part of the programme was sacred, and the second secular. Madame Billinie Porter's voice told effectively in Mendelssohn's two compositions, "I waited for the Lord," and "Hear my prayer." The "Ray of hope," which she sang in the second part (with violin obbligato, by Mr. Lawson), gave the greatest satisfaction, and was encored. Mr. George Wild sang with much care, and was recalled, and Mr. T. J. Hughes was rewarded by two encores. Mr. Lawson performed one of De Beriot's violin concertos, accompanied by Mr. Billinie Porter, which was enthusiastically received. The choir appears to have been well trained, and sang various choruses with great precision, showing the pains which must have been taken by the conductor.

Bolton.—On the 23rd ult. the Bolton Philharmonic Society gave the first of a series of concerts at the Temperance Hall. The principal vocalists were Miss Fallows, Mr. Henry Taylor, and Mr. Lovatt, all of whom were highly successful, not only in the miscellaneous part, but in Mr. W. H. Birch's Operetta, The Merrie Men of Sherwood Forest, which was given throughout with much spirit, and deservedly applauded by a large audience. The concert concluded with the National Anthem.

Bristol.—The Bristol Madrigal Society held its annual "Ladies' Night" on the 11th ult., when an excellent selection was rendered under the chairmanship of the President, Mr. John Hare, and the able direction of Mr. D. Rootham. The Society was assisted by gentlemen from the Cathedral of St. Paul's, London; Windsor, Cambridge, Wells, Exeter, Gloucester, and Hereford. The whole performance was given with the usual precision. Mr. J. D. Corfe's excellent arrangement of the National Anthem, with which the concert commenced, was very effectively rendered; and amongst the pieces most applauded may be named Marenzio's Madrigal, "When April, deck'd;" Reay's four-part song, "Sweet is the breath;" and Dowland's "Come again, sweet love." Pearsall's "Sir Patric Spens" has never been sung with more effect by this Society, of which that eminent composer was one of the founders.

Bruton.—Mr. Hayter, Organist of the Parish Church, gave his second annual concert on Monday, the 22nd ult. The orchestral music was performed by Messrs. Rumsey and Hayter, violins; Mr. Rumble, viola; Mr. Cox, violoncello; Mr. Palmer, flute; Mr. A. Cox, cornet; and Mr. J. Rumsey, piano; the vocal music being rendered by several talented amateurs of the neighbourhood. The performance was thoroughly successful, several pieces being encored.

Bury St. Edmunds.—A concert was given at the Athenæum Lecture Hall, on the 19th ult., under the able conductorship of Mr. Fearnside, organist of St. James's, for the benefit of his pupil, Mr. Deadman. The vocalists were Miss Fearnside, Mrs. Crockford, Mr. Atkinson, Mus. Bac., and Mr. Jay, and the concert-giver was also aided by the band of the Choral Society, under the leadership of Mr. Pratt. All the vocal pieces were very well rendered, Miss Fearnside receiving encores for both her songs, the same compliment being awarded to Mrs. Crockford for her rendering of "The last rose of summer," and also to several others. Mr. Deadman's pianoforte solo was excellently played, and Mr. Pratt's violin piece was warmly and deservedly applauded. Mr. Fearnside accompanied with much skill and judgment.

Canterbury.—Mr. Longhurst's new Oratorio, David and Absalom, was produced by the Canterbury Harmonic Union, under the direction of the composer, at the Canterbury Music Hall, on Tuesday, the 16th ult., with unequivocal success. The "Book of Words" has been carefully compiled from the Holy Scriptures by the Rev. Henry Geary, the story of course being taken from the Second Book of Samuel. The local papers give unqualified praise to the music, and characterise the work as one of the most scholarly that has been given to the public for many years. Miss Ellen Horne (Mrs. Paull) made a highly favourable impression upon her audience in the soprano music, the air in the first part, "If we confess our sins" (with a violin obbligato, exquisitely played by Mr. Willy), being a most finished piece of vocalisation; and the utmost effect was given to the contralto recitatives by Madame Poole, the air, "And David went up and wept," being also finely sung. Messrs. Kerr Gedge, Moulding, Rhodes, and Higgins, were thoroughly satisfactory in the music allotted to them, and Mr. Plant and Master Maxted rendered valuable aid in the quartetts. Mr. Longhurst was greeted with quite an ovation at the conclusion of the performance.

Caversham, Reading.—A concert was given in the School-room on Thursday, the 4th ult., by the members of the Caversham Parish Choir, assisted by some ladies of the parish and neighbourhood. The programme consisted of a good selection of sacred and secular pieces, that in the evening being entirely secular. The choruses, especially "Oh, the sweet contentment," and "Hark, abroad the storm is roiling," were remarkably well sung, the latter being loudly re-demanded. The glee, "Where the bee sucks," and "The three chafers," from the "Orpheus" collection, were also effectively rendered. The solos were, "It's a way we have," "Good-bye, sweetheart," &c. Mr. Cooke, the organist and choir-master of the parish church, conducted, and the accompaniments were very ably played by Miss Noble, of Caversham Hill.

Cranleigh.—A very capital concert was given in the School-room, on Friday evening, the 5th ult. The principal performers were Miss Ellen Glanville, Messrs. Taylor, Wilkinson, Dyson, Lawrence, Goddard, and Kiddell. The very excellent singing of Miss Ellen Glanville, the only professional vocalist present, was thoroughly appreciated by a large audience. Great praise is due to Mr. T. H. Mousley for his able conductorship.

Derby.—The performance of the Messiah by the Choral Union, at the Drill Hall, on the 29th December, was thoroughly successful. Mrs. Bateman in "I know that my Redeemer liveth," Miss E. Gamble in "He was despised," Mrs. Crowther in "He shall feed His flock," and Mrs. Thompson in "Rejoice greatly," were highly effective; and the singing of Mr. C. H. Coulson in the whole of the tenor music was the theme of general admiration. Mr. Naylor must also be commended, especially for his rendering of "Why do the nations." The choruses were given with much decision, and the band, under the leadership of Mr. H. Farmer, was everything that could be desired. Mr. Woodward conducted, and Mr. Trimnell presided with much ability at the organ.

Douglas, Isle of Man.—The second quarter of Miss Wood's Choir and the Douglas Singing Class was inaugurated on Tuesday evening, the 16th ult., in the Wellington Hall, by a social tea meeting and concert. The entrance of Miss Wood was made the subject of a perfect ovation. The programme consisted of selections from Barnby's Cantata, Rebekah, with part-songs, solos, &c. The Cantata Rebekah, with which the concert opened, is a masterly composition, requiring more than ordinary talent to make it effective. Mr. S. J. Bamber having taken his place at the pianoforte, and Miss Wood the conductor's chair, the signal for commencement was given. Mr. Coffin, jun., took the part of Eliezer, and Miss Hutchinson that of Rebekah. The airs and recitatives were given by Mr. Coffin and Miss Hutchinson very effectively, and received the well-earned applause of the audience. Mr. Coffin sang with great self-possession and finish, and his début was thoroughly satisfactory. Miss Hutchinson possesses a powerful and flexible voice, and she was received throughout with rapturous applause. The choruses were given in a very creditable manner by the choir, fully testifying to the painstaking training it had received under Miss Wood's care. It is no slight testimony to Miss Wood's success as a teacher, that she has in so short a time brought her singing class and choir to such a state of discipline as to be able to come before the public, and to render creditably so difficult a piece of music. The second part was miscellaneous, and contained several vocal solos, well given by Mr. W. Kissack, Miss Muntz, Mr. Kerruish, Mr. Livesay, jun., and Mr. Coffin. Mr. Bamber ably presided at the pianoforte, and Miss Wood not only conducted the whole concert in a very efficient manner, but as efficiently acted as accompanist in several of the songs.

Dublin.—Four of the seven lights in the chancel of St. Bartholomew's Church have been recently filled with stained glass by Mr. O'Connor, of London, as a memorial to William Henry Owen, the first organist and choir-master of the Church, who was killed in the railway catastrophe at Abergele. In the opes above the four lights (which are in couplets) are introduced angels, with musical instruments, marking the object of the windows.

Dudley.—The annual sermons on behalf of the choir of the Parish Church were preached on Sunday, the 21st ult., by the Rev. Gilbert Bradley, M.A., Vicar of St. Edmunds, and the Rev. W. Reyner Cosens, M.A., Vicar of Dudley. The Rev. R. G. Wollaston sang the priest's part, and the Responses (Tallis) were well sung by the choir. The anthems selected for the occasion were, "O taste and see" (Goss) for the morning, and "Praise the Lord" (Goss) for the evening service, both of which were well rendered by the choir, under the direction of the choirmaster, Mr. G. H. Mainwaring. Mr. H. J. Blunden presided at the organ. The collections amounted to the handsome sum of £32.

Dundee.—The performance of Handel's Messiah on the 21st December, by the Tonic Sol-fa Association, at the Kinnaird Hall, was highly successful. The choruses were excellently given by a choir of about 100 voices, conducted with much intelligence and judgment by Mr. Frank Sharp. The solo vocalists were Miss Annie Edmonds, Miss Julia Elton, Mr. W. Parkinson, and Mr. Robert Hilton, all of whom were thoroughly efficient; Miss Edmonds in "I know that my Redeemer liveth," Miss Elton in "He was despised,' Mr. Parkinson in "Every valley," and Mr. Hilton in "For behold, darkness," producing a marked effect upon the audience. Mr. W. H. Richmond presided most ably at the organ.

Edinburgh.—Services were celebrated in St. Paul's Episcopal Church, York Place, on Christmas-day, at eleven and three o'clock, when large congregations attended. The church was most tastefully decorated with evergreens, presented and prepared by ladies and gentlemen of the congregation. The service in the afternoon was suitable to the pro-cathedral, being fully choral, with special anthem appropriate for the occasion. As it was known that the anthem was to consist of "There were shepherds," "Glory to God," and the "Hallelujah Chorus" from the Messiah, and that the "Magnificat" and "Nunc Dimittis" were to be sung to music composed by Professor Oakeley, some time before three o'clock the large church was crowded in every part, so that it was almost impossible to obtain even standing-room. Professor Oakeley was the organist, and had under his direction a choir of nearly seventy voices, composed of ladies and gentlemen belonging to the congregation. The "Magnificat" and "Nunc Dimittis" (in E flat) were originally composed for the choir of Canterbury Cathedral, but have been almost entirely rewritten, and have recently been issued in their present form as a second edition of the original service. They are characterised by breadth and dignity, are thoroughly devotional, and in strict accord with the traditions of the English Cathedral school. The choir rendered them with great enthusiasm, and in a style worthy of the high standard so long maintained by English cathedrals. The selections from the Messiah were also given with much fervour and artistic excellence; and the high degree of precision attained by the choir evinces very careful training on the part of the Rev. Mr. Douglas. The voluntaries played were the Pastoral Symphonies of Handel and Corelli, before the service, and after it "For unto us a Son is born," and "Moses and the children of Israel sang this new song, 'I will sing unto the Lord, for he hath triumphed gloriously; the horse and his rider hath he thrown into the sea'"—in the execution of which the capacities of the Messrs. Hamilton's fine organ were brilliantly displayed. It should be mentioned that the solos were sung by a lady member of the congregation in admirable taste, and with the quiet expression of deep devotional feeling.——The crowded attendance at Professor Oakeley's organ Recital, on the 18th ult., included a large number of students, who, with the general audience, seemed heartily to appreciate the musical treat furnished by the talented Professor. Instead of the usual brief verbal sketch of the compositions to be performed, the audience on this occasion was presented with a neatly-printed synopsis appended to the programme, comprising also a few bars of the leading theme of each work. The whole of the pieces, which were selected from the writings of the most classical composers, were admirably executed.

Exmouth, Devon.—Haydn's Oratorio, the Creation, was performed by the Exmouth Harmonic Society on the 22nd December. The band and chorus numbered forty performers. The principals were Miss A. Vinnicombe (soprano), Mr. Treham (tenor), and Mr. Parsons (bass). The work was given throughout with the greatest care, under the conductorship of Mr. W. Vinnicombe.

Finchampstead.—On Wednesday, the 10th ult., a concert was given at the School-room, by the choirs of Crowthorne and Finchampstead, under the able superintendence of Mr. Bishop, the choir-master of both places. The School-room was very well filled, the audience numbering 170. The performance was a most successful one, and gave great satisfaction, especially the following pieces:—"Glorious is Thy name," "Up, up, ye dames," "The three fishers," and "I come, quoth she, from the beautiful Rhine." "Cherry ripe" was also very nicely sung by a little boy, who had to be placed on a chair to be seen at all. The piece, however, which deserves the highest encomium, was a pianoforte solo, "Le Chant des Naiades," which was played with much effect by Miss Bishop. Both choir-master and choirs have every reason to be satisfied with the result, and it is hoped that their next concert will be as successful as their first.

Glasgow.—The Glasgow Choral Union gave a performance of the Messiah on the 28th December. The principals were Miss Banks, Miss Enriquez, Mr. E. Lloyd, and Mr. Winn. Mr. A. C. Mackenzie, of Edinburgh, was leader; Mr. J. Wood, of Huddersfield, solo trumpet; Mr. A. L. Peace, organist; and Mr. Lambeth, as usual, conductor. The choruses were given with marvellous precision and effect, especially the concluding numbers. The solos were rendered throughout in a most satisfactory manner; and a special word of praise is due to Mr. Wood for his admirable playing in "The trumpet shall sound."——On the 1st ult., two concerts were given by the Choral Union, at which the same artists appeared as on the 28th December. At the morning concert the principal items were Handel's Coronation Anthem, "Zadock the Priest," Gounod's Gallia, and the Mount Carmel scene from Elijah, The solos in Gallia were well rendered by Miss Banks, and the work seemed to make a deep impression on the audience. The programme at the evening concert was of a popular nature, and proved highly successful.

Grange.—The newly-formed Grange Musical Society gave its first concert on Tuesday, the 2nd ult. A very excellent miscellaneous programme was provided, amongst the most effective vocal pieces in which may be mentioned the "Yeoman's wedding song," by Mr. Smith, of the "Wandering Minstrels," the "Stirrup cup," by Mr. Winson, and several glees and trios. At the next concert it is probable that a complete Cantata or Oratorio may be performed.

Grantham.—The sixth concert of the Grantham Amateur Vocal Society was given on the 16th ult., in the Corn Exchange. The music in Weber's Opera Oberon was performed on the occasion, and, considering the very difficult nature of the work, the entertainment was undoubtedly a success. Miss Lloyd, Miss Norris, and Miss J. Brown sang in a very creditable manner, and Mr. Norris's fine voice was also heard to much advantage. Miss J. Brown sang "A lonely Arab maid,' and "Oh, Araby," with great taste; Miss F. Robbs gave the solo, "O, 'tis pleasant to float on the sea," in an effective style, and Mr. Norris rendered the parts allotted to him with much success. Miss Johnstone and Madame Sillen ably presided at the pianoforte during the evening. The Society is certainly to be congratulated upon possessing such a conductor as Dr. Dixon, an artist who appears to spare neither time nor pains in order to raise his class to a state of the highest efficiency. The proceeds of the concert are to be devoted to a fund for the future improvement of the organ of the Parish Church.

GREENWICH.—On the 23rd ult., a concert, in connection with the "Greenwich Society for the acquisition and diffusion of useful knowledge," was given by the Standard Concert Party. Miss Sinclair and Madame Poole were enthusiastically encored in two songs, Mr. Stedman was similarly honoured for his excellent rendering of "Good-bye, sweetheart," and received much applause for Blumenthal's "Evening song," and Messrs. Hubbard and Limpus were also thoroughly successful in their vocal solos. Miss Adelaide Pullen (a pupil of Mr. Walter Macfarren) played with much effect her master's "Second Tarentelle" and Thalberg's "Mosé in Egitto," and was warmly and deservedly applauded. The accompanist was Mr. R. Limpus.

HALIFAX.—On the 12th ult. a performance of the Messiah was given in the Shed School-room, by the Haley Hill Choral Society, under the able conductorship of Mr. W. H. Whitaker. The concert on the whole was a creditable one, the choruses being given in a very spirited manner. The soprano vocalists were Mrs. Carter, Misses Blakey, Holdsworth, and Hanson; Mrs. Carter being very effective in "Rejoice greatly," and Miss Blakey singing "I know that my Redeemer liveth" with much feeling. The contralto was Mrs. Empsall. The bass solos were given by Messrs. Briggs and Knight with their usual success. Special reference may be made to Mr. J. Verney Binns, who sang the whole of the tenor solos in a very efficient manner, considering the fact of its being his first appearance in oratorio music.

HAMMERSMITH.—The third annual concert of the Hammersmith Choral Society took place at the West-End Lecture Hall on Friday evening, the 5th ult. The following choruses were very effectively rendered: "Sancta Maria" (Dmorah), "Et incarnatus" (Haydn's Third Mass), "To Thee, great Lord" (Mosé), "Sleep, gentle lady" and "Now tramp" (Bishop). Mr. H. M. Cadman sang "Pro Peccatis" (Stabat Mater) with much effect, Herr Volck was highly effective in Beethoven's "Adelaide;" Miss Greenwood was greatly applauded in her two songs, "Merrily over the snow" and "A song there was of early days," and a duet between this lady and Miss Pawsey, "We come from fairy bowers," was also warmly received. Mr S. Filby, of St. Paul's, Hammersmith, conducted with his accustomed ability.

HARROGATE.—On Wednesday evening, the 17th ult., a performance of sacred music was given in the Congregational Church, by the choir, assisted by several friends. The programme comprised the "Kyrie," "Gloria," "Qui tollis," and "Quoniam," from Mozart's Twelfth Mass; solos and chorus from Handel's Samson, Beethoven's "Hallelujah," &c. The principal vocalists were Miss Place, Miss Arnold, Messrs. Parker, Benson, and Calvert. Handel's celebrated Concerto No. 2, in B flat, for the organ, was played by Mr. M. Arnold in a highly creditable manner, and the concert was in every respect thoroughly successful.

HAWARDEN.—The members of the Hawarden Parish Choir gave an amateur concert on Monday evening, the 15th ult. kindly assisted by the Misses Gladstone, Mr. W. Gladstone, Mr Wade, Rev. A. Legge, Miss Nettleton, Mr. Wilkinson, &c. The concert was a great success, and was thoroughly appreciated by a large and fashionable audience. Miss Gladstone officiated as accompanist, and Mr. J. G. Smith conducted.

HIGHWORTH (WILTS).—The members of the Highworth Harmonic Society gave their first concert on New Year's Day. The programme consisted of two parts, sacred and secular. The choruses from the Messiah were sung with commendable accuracy and precision. In the second part of the programme, too, the careful training of the conductor, Mr. H. V. Fletcher, was very apparent, the glees and part-songs being given without accompaniment, in excellent tune and with good expression. A word of praise must be given to Miss Kitty Fletcher (of London), who sang "With verdure clad," and two or three other songs with much effect. Mr. Read, the organist of the Parish Church, and Mr. George Rivers presided at the harmonium and pianoforte, and accompanied with skill and judgment. We are glad to find that the funds of the Society were considerably augmented by this, the first concert, given by the members.

HUDDERSFIELD.—On Thursday evening, the 18th ult., a musical service, illustrative of the "Pilgrim's Progress," with adapted readings, was given in the Hillhouse Congregational Church, by scholars in connection with that place, numbering upwards of 300, under the able leadership of Mr. G. Gaunt. All the vocal pieces were very effectively rendered and much appreciated by a large audience. As the performance proved more successful than was anticipated, it is intended to repeat it in a short time. A collection was made for the purpose of liquidating the debt on the school.—ON Tuesday, the 23rd ult., a concert was given in the Assembly Rooms. The principal artists were Madlle. Liebhart, Madame Demeric-Lablache, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Lander (vocalists), Madlle. Therese Liebe (solo violin), Herr J. Baht Sauviet (solo flute), and Mr. Edward Reyloff (solo pianist and accompanist). Madlle. Liebhart sang remarkably well, and the other vocalists also acquitted themselves in a most creditable and satisfactory manner. The greatest treat, however, appeared to be the performance on the flute by Herr J. Baht Sauviet, the manner in which he performed the most difficult variations upon the "Keel row" being really marvellous.

IPSWICH.—The concert of Mrs. Arthur Wykes Cole, which took place at the Public Hall, on the 5th ult., was fully and fashionably attended. The pianoforte performance of Mrs. Cole was the theme of universal admiration, her execution of Beethoven's Pastoral Sonata, and Thalberg's Fantasia on Masmiello, eliciting the most enthusiastic applause. Several pieces rendered to perfection by the Anemoic Union created a marked effect with the audience, and the clarionet solo by Mr Lazarus, on themes from Der Freischütz, was also an important feature in the instrumental selection. The vocalists were Mr. Sims Reeves (who sang his very best throughout the evening) and Madame Thaddeus Wells.

KILMARNOCK.—The erection of a fine organ, built by Messrs. Forster and Andrews, of Hull, in the Corn Exchange Hall, was an event which excited much interest, and reflected the utmost credit upon the many persons who exerted themselves to promote so laudable an object. The inaugural concert, given by the Philharmonic Society, took place on Friday, the 29th December, before a large audience. The programme was a highly attractive one, embracing recitals on the organ by Dr. Wm. Spark, of the Town Hall, Leeds, selections by the Society from Haydn's Creation, Mozart's Twelth Mass &c., and several vocal solos by Miss Margaretta Smyth, Miss Isa Andrew, Mr. David Kennedy, and Mr. Duncan Smyth. Dr. Spark's performance was listened to with the utmost interest, the qualities of the new instrument being displayed to the greatest advantage.

LANCASTER.—An instructive and interesting entertainment was given in the Music Hall, on Thursday evening, the 11th ult., to the members of the Athenæum, by Dr. Spark, the talented organist of the Town Hall and St. George's Church, Leeds, entitled "The Life and Compositions of Haydn." The lecturer treated his subject with great command; and the illustrations were as well selected as they were well rendered by Miss Kennedy, Miss Anyon, Madlle. Brousil (violin), Mr. Dodds, and Dr. Spark at the pianoforte. Madlle. Brousil's performance was one of the most conspicuous features in the programme, and she was received with enthusiastic applause. Dr. Spark, as pianist, was all that could be desired, displaying in every respect the same skill and judgment on the pianoforte as he is so well known to possess on the organ.

LEAMINGTON.—Mr. C. Sydney Vinning gave his second Pianoforte Recital, at the Regent Hotel Saloon, on the morning of the 18th ult., to a large and fashionable audience. The programme contained Beethoven's Sonata in C sharp minor, Mozart's Sonata in A minor, besides other works by Mendelssohn, Weber, Bennett, Schumann, &c. Mr. Vinning's playing was marked throughout with much taste and executive facility, and he was greatly applauded. The vocalist was Miss Rebecca Jewell, who gave a new song, "That dear song I loved the best," by Allan Hyde, "La dea del Lago," by Donizetti, and "Will he come," by Arthur Sullivan.

LEEDS.—The last of the Town Hall Popular Concerts for the year was given on the 30th December. The character of the entertainment and the reputation of the artists engaged, drew together a large audience, and altogether the concert was one of the most successful of the season. The vocalists were Miss Marie Rossetti, Mr. Geo. Perren, and Mr. Maybrick, who were assisted by the chorus of the Leeds Harmonic Union. Dr. Spark presided at the organ, and Mr. T. W. Dodds officiated as accompanist. The first part of the programme consisted of a selection from La Sonnambula, but it had to be varied in consequence of the absence, from indisposition, of Miss Haydon. The second part, which opened with a part-song for the Harmonic Union, was miscellaneous. Mr. Perren is well known in Leeds, and he needed no introduction to ensure him the hearty reception he met with. Miss Rossetti and Mr. Maybrick, who sang at these concerts for the first time, were warmly applauded. The same compliment was paid to Mr. Perren. These Saturday night concerts are thoroughly enjoyable as well as popular, and they cannot fail to have a beneficial influence on the public taste for music.——THE concert at the Town Hall on Saturday evening, the 13th ult., was unusually good. The Madrigal and Motet Society occupied the orchestra with about 250 voices, the solo vocalists being Miss Janet Haydon and Mr. George Perren; and, in addition to Dr. Spark, whose organ performances are always looked for with pleasure at these concerts, Mdlle. Bertha Brousil had been engaged as violinist. Amongst the most effective choruses were "The many rend the skies," the Serenade "Awake, love," Handel's Nightingale chorus, and "Ye banks and braes," as harmonised by Macfarren. Miss Haydon and Mr. Perren were both in good voice, and each received a hearty welcome, and contributed largely to the success of the entertainment. Mdlle. Brousil's violin playing was also highly effective. Another feature in the programme was Dr. Spark's performance of Lefebure Wely's effective organ solo introducing "A concert on a lake interrupted by a storm." The same organist has frequently played this piece, but never with more acceptance. The concluding portion of the work was repeated in answer to a hearty encore. Mr. T. W. Dodds accompanied the vocalists, and took the organ-seat while Dr. Spark conducted the choruses of the Madrigal Society.

LEIGH.—A Christmas musical entertainment was given in the National School-room, Church Street, on the 28th December. The programme consisted of recitals upon the organ by Mr. J. Charlton, the organist of the Parish Church, carol singing, and the performances by the hand-bell ringers. The organ recitals were excellent. Bach's Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, was not at all appreciated as it deserved to be, but Beethoven's Larghetto was well received. The carols were very ably sung, perhaps the most effective being the well known "God rest you, merry gentlemen."

The hand-bell ringers performed remarkably well, and were encored in the second part. The piece given in reply to the applause of the audience was the old song, "In my cottage near a wood." The proceeds of the concert will be given to some object connected with the church.

LISKEARD.—The Church School-room was well filled on the 4th ult., when the Choral Society gave a concert. The programme was divided into two parts, sacred and secular. In the choruses the Society showed careful training and much skill. Cooper's carol, "There were whisperings in the heavens," was well rendered, and the three carols which followed—"Sing of Maiden Mary," "The first Nowell," and "In dulce jubilo"—were sung with commendable steadiness and precision. The other choruses, which were of a secular character, were much appreciated and loudly applauded. Mr. Mellor, an amateur, from Plymouth, gave "Comfort ye my people" and "Every valley" with good effect; also "Come into the garden, Maud," "England yet," in which the chorus took part, and a duet with Mr. Löhr, which received well-merited approbation. Mr. Löhr sang Gounod's "There is a green hill far away" so pleasingly as to lead to a repetition of it; and no less successful was he in the "Wreck of the Hesperus." Mr. Thomas evinced a good knowledge of the flute; and Mr. Faull, who presided alternately at the piano during the evening with Mr. Löhr, performed a solo, in which he displayed much skill and taste. The concert was very successful, and reflected credit upon the members of the Society, and also upon Mr. Löhr.

LIVERPOOL.—On the morning and evening of Christmas-day concerts were given at St. James's Hall with much success. The artists engaged were Miss Marie Arthur, Miss Jessie Bond, Mr. C. Wilson, Mr. M'Connell, and Mr. Smith; the excellent trio from Chester Cathedral, Messrs. Orme, Halliday, and Bell; and Miss Monkhouse. The programme included selections from Handel, Haydn, Mendelssohn, Mozart, Cherubini; Rossini, &c. The quartett "God is a Spirit," in which the Chester trio were assisted by Miss Monkhouse, was given with much religious feeling. Haydn's air, "With verdure clad," and "Lo! here the gentle lark," were rendered by Miss Marie Arthur with refined taste, and elicited an enthusiastic encore. "The Nightingale" was sung by Miss Monkhouse with good effect. Mr. C. Wilson, in "Sound an alarm," was well received, and Mr. M'Connell, in the song "Redemptor mundi Deus," gained much applause. Miss Jessie Bond was rewarded with an encore for her clever rendering of "Auld Robin Gray;" and "Why do the nations rage?" by Mr. Bell, from Chester, was also a most creditable performance. The judicious combination of harmonium and pianoforte accompaniments greatly enhanced the pleasure of the audience. Mr. Brinley Richards' quartett, "God Bless the Prince of Wales," which closed the first part, provoked a storm of enthusiasm which instantly spread to every part of the hall.——THE first subscription concert of the year was given on the 23rd December; principal artists—Madlle. Titiens, Signor Vizzani, and Signor Borella. The first part was almost entirely devoted to the works of Mendelssohn. The "Ave Maria" (solo and chorus), the "Vintagers' Chorus" and the grand Finale of Loreley, and the "Isles of Fingal" Overture, being the chief features of this portion of the programme. Mendelssohn's part-song, "For the new year," was also given in the second part. The Sinfonia was Gade's fresh and beautiful work in B flat, op. 20. It is to be hoped that the compositions of this excellent writer may hereafter be more frequently heard in this room. The Overtures first and last in the selection were Il Barbiere, and Kreutzer's Lodoiska. Signori Vizzani and Borella gave the Buffo duet from L'Elisir d'Amore, "Ardir na forse il cielo," with great effect, and Mdlle. Titiens and Signor Vizzani were encored in Paer's Dolce dell' anima.——THE second classical concert of the series, on the plan of the London Monday Popular Concerts, took place in the Philharmonic Hall on the 17th ult., to a crowded audience; executants—first violin, Madame Norman-Neruda; second violin, Herr L. Ries; violin, Mr. Zerbini; violoncello, Signor Piatti; solo pianoforte, Mr. Charles Hallé; vocalist, Mr. Maybrick; accompanist, Mr. Zerbini. The programme stood thus—Part I. Quartet in E flat, No. 4, for strings (Mozart); song, Mr. Maybrick, "The Valley" (Gounod); Sonata in E minor, op. 90, for pianoforte alone (Beethoven). Part II. Trio in G major, violin, viola, and violoncello (Beethoven) op. 9; song, "A life that lives for you" (A. Sullivan); Sonata in B flat major, op. 45, for pianoforte and violoncello (Mendelssohn). The performance of all these pieces was, as might be expected, exceedingly fine. The last movement of Beethoven's trio, especially, was played with such brilliancy as to elicit a vociferous encore. Gounod's thoughtful song was also redemanded. Mr. Charles Hallé's rendering of Beethoven's Sonata was in every respect thoroughly artistic. The closing Duet Sonata of Mendelssohn played to perfection by Mr. Charles Hallé and Signor Piatti, was, unquestionably, the gem of the evening.

LYMINGTON.—On the 17th and 18th ult., the members of the Lymington Philharmonic Society gave two miscellaneous concerts at the Assembly Rooms, with much success. The first part of the programme consisted of a selection from the Opera Martha, the principal parts in which were ably sustained by Miss M. Klitz, Misses A. and S. Marshall, Miss H. Short, Messrs. Prince, Bright, W. Scott, Light, and the Rev. Ernest William Freeman. A miscellaneous selection formed the second part, in which all the vocalists named took part, with the addition of Mrs. Warren Peacocke. Mr. R. Augustus Klitz conducted with much skill, Mr. Fletcher led the band, and Miss L. Klitz presided at the harmonium.

MALVERN.—The musical portion of the Christmas services at the various places of worship in this locality has been particularly good this season. On Christmas-day, at the Priory Church, the Anthems, "While all things were in quiet silence" (Macfarren), and "Nazareth" (Gounod), were rendered with good musical expression. The service concluded with Mozart's "Glorious is Thy Name." The voluntaries by the clever musician, Mr. Haynes, were appropriate and well played. Trinity and Cowleigh churches were exquisitely decorated, and the singing at each was exceedingly good. At Newland Church the services were most appropriate and seasonable.

MANCHESTER.—The First Subscription Concert took place in the Stretford Town Hall, on Friday evening, the 29th December. The vocalists were Miss Thorley, and a party of glee singers from the Manchester Cathedral Choir. The instrumental soloists were M. Brossa (flute), whose performances were much appreciated and applauded, and Mr. Horton C. Allison (pianoforte), who played Beethoven's Twelfth Sonata (Op. 26, with the Funeral March), as well as two other solos, entirely from memory, viz. his own Tarantella in A minor, and Liszt's Grand Concert Paraphrase on Mendelssohn's "Wedding March," all of which were enthusiastically received, the last being encored. The audience was numerous and fashionable.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—On Thursday, the 28th December, a farewell concert to the Rev. Charles Jupp, late senior curate of St. Nicholas Church, was given in the Mechanics' Hall. Mr. Jupp has made many friends during his curacy, not the least amongst them being the members of the choir of the church, who willingly gave their services on the occasion, under the able conductorship of their choir-master, Mr. W. J. Ions. The programme included a selection of glees and songs, the trio, "O Memory" (Leslie), sung by Miss A. Penman, Miss Leybourne, and Mr. Robson, being amongst the most effective. Several songs, duets, &c., were also given, all of which were enthusiastically applauded. The accompaniments to the vocal music were played by Mr. W. J. Ions with much taste, and the concert was in every respect a decided success.

PENZANCE.—On the 29th December Mendelssohn's Elijah was given by the Penzance Choral Society with marked success. The principal vocalists were Miss Vingoe, Mrs. Nunn, Mr. Sampson, and Mr. Robert Hilton. Miss Vingoe was highly effective in the soprano music, and Mrs. Nunn gave "O, rest in the Lord," with excellent expression, eliciting enthusiastic applause. Mr. Sampson sang the tenor solos with much ability, and Mr. Hilton gave a most intelligent reading of the part of the Prophet, the air, "It is enough," displaying his fine voice and style to the utmost advantage. In the duet with the Widow, too, his singing was admirable, and the applause of the audience amply testified that his efforts were thoroughly appreciated. The band was everything that could be desired; Mr. Nunn conducted with his accustomed skill and judgment, and Mr. R. White, jun., ably presided at the organ.

PLYMOUTH.—The Plymouth Vocal Association gave a Christmas concert at St. James's Hall on the 22nd December. "Sing of Maiden Mary," and "The first Nowell," were, perhaps, the best of the choruses in the first part. In the second division the music was livelier, and the singers acquitted themselves admirably in the tasks allotted to them, especially in their rendering of "The fisherman's good night." The soloists were Miss Blanche Cole, soprano; Mr. Rogers, tenor; and Mr. J. Lander, bass. The reception of Miss Cole was very flattering, and her "Let the bright Seraphim" fully aroused the enthusiasm of the audience. The trumpet obbligato was taken by Mr. Fly, who performed it in a masterly manner. In the second part Miss Cole's best solos were "Qui la voce" and "Far down a lonely valley." Mr. Rogers, who, as an amateur, has won golden opinions in Plymouth, fully sustained his popularity. Mr. Lander also deserves no small modicum of commendation. During the evening "God save the Queen" and "God bless the Prince of Wales" were sung by the choir, Miss Cole taking the solos. Mr. F. N. Löhr conducted, and also accompanied on the pianoforte, in which latter task he received valuable assistance from Mr. A. Faull.——THE second Subscription Concert of the Plymouth Amateur Vocal Association was given at St. James's Hall on the 24th ult. Spohr's Cantata, God. Thou art great, was excellently performed, the principal parts being admirably sustained by Madame Cora de Wilhorst, Miss Julia Elton, and Mr. H. St. George. Mr. Löhr's "Ave Maria" had also a highly effective rendering, Madame de Wilhorst singing the soprano solo with much success, and Mr. W. H. K. Wright giving the bass music with a thorough comprehension of the composer's meaning. The choruses were remarkably well sung; and Mr. Löhr was called on at the conclusion of the work to receive the congratulations of the listeners. A selection from the oratorios of Handel was afterwards given with thorough satisfaction to the audience. Mr. Löhr conducted the concert with his usual ability.

SALISBURY.—On Wednesday, the 10th ult., a large audience was attracted to the Assembly Rooms, the occasion being the performance of a well-chosen programme of vocal and instrumental music by several amateurs, in aid of the funds of the Shipwrecked Mariners' Society. All the pieces were well received, Miss Tyndale eliciting an encore for her rendering of an air by Donizetti, and Braga's Serenata, with viola obbligato by Mr. C. J. Read, being much and deservedly applauded. The concert was ably conducted by Mr. Aylward.

SCARBOROUGH.—A large audience was attracted to St. Mary's Church on Tuesday, the 26th December, by a very excellent Organ Recital, given by the organist, Mr. Naylor, Mus. Bac. The programme was highly interesting, and included Mendelssohn's Organ Sonata in F minor, Bach's Prelude and Fugue in B minor, the Andante from Mozart's Fifth Quintett, Bach's Concerto in A minor, a pastoral movement by Kullak, the Gloria from Mozart's Fifteenth Mass, Best's arrangement of the "Hallelujah," from the Mount of Olives, and several other pieces, all of which were played in masterly style, and thoroughly enjoyed by the listeners. Two hymns were also given by the choir, both of which were carefully sung.——At All Saints' Church, Falsgrave, on the 29th December, a Carol concert took place in the School-room, the performance being conducted and accompanied by Mr. Naylor, Mus. Bac., who was aided in the presidency of the occasion by the Rev. B. K. Woodd. After a few remarks by Mr. Naylor upon the nature of the compositions, a good selection of Carols was given, the solo verses being sung respectively by Master Hilton Turner, Mr. Wilkins, B.A., and Mr. James Bland.

Stockport.—On Monday evening, the 15th ult., a concert was given at the Mechanics' Institution. The artists were Miss Bamber, Miss Catherine Pickering, Mr. G. O. Warburton, Mr. T. Brockbank, Mr. C. T. Smith, and Mr. C. W. Whitmore. The programme included three duets for two pianofortes, played by Messrs. C. T. Smith and C. W. Whitmore, and a pianoforte solo, "The last Rose of Summer" (Thalberg), performed by Mr. C. W. Whitmore, which was enthusiastically encored, but not repeated. Miss Bamber gained an encore for her singing of the "Voice from the ocean." Miss Catherine Pickering was recalled after the ballad "Clochette," and Mr. Warburton's song, "The Diver," was redemanded. Mr. Brockbank was also encored in "Hearts of Oak," Mr. C. T. Smith displayed taste and judgment as an accompanist, as well as in the duets with Mr. C. W. Whitmore.

Torquay.—The first of Mr. William Vinning's Pianoforte Recitals took place at the Bath Saloon on Saturday afternoon, the 30th December, when an excellent programme was provided. The "Sonata Appassionata" of Beethoven was given with much clearness and intelligence. Mendelssohn's Third Book of "Lieder," which includes the celebrated duet in A flat, was next played, and each "Song" was rendered with great truth of expression. The performance of a Fantasia on airs from Faust, by a pupil of Mr. Vinning, elicited deserved applause. The recital concluded with Chopin's "Ballade" in A flat, which was most effectively given.

Wellingborough.—On the 3rd ult. the Philharmonic Society repeated Handel's Messiah at the Corn Exchange, with Miss Packwood as soprano; Mrs. Warren, of Manchester, contralto; Mr. Duxbury, tenor; and Mr. W. Packwood, bass; and a band and chorus of sixty performers. Mrs. Warren acquitted herself to the thorough satisfaction of the audience, and the other soloists rendered the music entrusted to them in a highly creditable manner. The band and chorus were all that could be desired. Mr. W. R. Harrington conducted with much ability.

West Melton.—A glee club, recently formed, consisting of the choir of Brampton Church and two or three young men of the neighbourhood, gave a concert in the Infant School-room, on Friday evening, the 5th ult. The vicar, the Rev. Chas. Hayes, took the chair, and the glees, songs, &c., were very correctly performed, reflecting great credit upon the youthful vocalists, as well as on their young conductor, Mr. Frank Wade, the organist. A dialogue duet, sung by Miss Hewitt and Master F. Thompson, was much applauded, and received an encore, as did also a song given by Mr. John Scholey, a pupil-teacher at the Brampton School. A song sung by Master F. Wade also deserves especial mention. Mr. W. W. Pearson, the composer, being in the neighbourhood, sang "The Village Blacksmith," and performed a fantasia on the harmonium. The National Anthem was sung at the conclusion by the choir, and joined in with hearty good will by those present.

Witham.—An evening concert was given on Tuesday, the 16th ult., at the Literary Institution, under the direction of Mr. Edwin Gray, assisted by Miss Adelaide Bliss, Miss Marienne Potter, and Mr. Farquharson. The concert was an entire success, and gave much pleasure to a crowded and appreciative audience. A song, written for the occasion by Mr. Gray, was most cordially received.

Wolverhampton.—On Monday, the 15th ult., the first concert of the St. Matthew's Choral Society was given in St. Matthew's School-room. The chair was taken by the Rev. J. E. Gladstone, B.A., vicar of the parish. The room was quite full, and the proceeds, after deducting expenses, which amounted to nearly £10, were handed over to the South Staffordshire Hospital. Great praise was due to the band for the efficient manner in which the pieces were performed, Mr. J. Morton being the leader, and Mr. William Beach conductor. Songs, glees, and duets were sung, and among the vocalists who added much to the pleasure of the evening were Miss Wootton, Miss Jeavons, Mrs. E. B. Beardmore, Mrs. Nicklass, Mr. A. Beards, Mr. C. Hodgkiss, &c. Recitations were given between the musical pieces. A vote of thanks was accorded unanimously to the vicar for his kindness in taking the chair on the occasion; and the vicar, in reply, thanked the performers and congratulated them upon their success. The concert concluded with the National Anthem.

Worcester.—The second concert of the St. Clement's Choir for the present season was given at the Old School-room on Monday evening, the 8th ult., when an excellent programme was performed in such a manner as to elicit much applause from a large audience. During the past two seasons this Society (under the able direction of Mr. H. Gummery) has given selections from Crotch's too much neglected Palestine, The Messiah, Creation, Elijah, St. Paul, The Hymn of Praise, with smaller portions of other oratorios, and also many secular concerts. On the 8th ult. the programme included the Operetta "The Merrie Men of Sherwood," which was very well performed. The encores were accorded to Miss Stockley in "Sweet pretty bird," (flute obbligato by Mr. Hadley); to Mr. Stoyle in the Bacchanalian song, "With a ho, hi, ho!" to Mr. Gummery for his very spirited delivery of the song "To arms," to the song and duet "Through weal and woe" by Mr. Gummery and Miss Stockley, and to the joyous Finale, "We'll trip it merrily." The choir was, as usual, assisted by the Misses Grainger, Mrs. Evans, Mr. Hadley, Mr. J. Baxter, and Mr. Haywood, organist of St. George's Church. Miss Doward presided at the pianoforte with her accustomed skill.

AN ENTIRELY NEW WORK FOR MUSICAL EDUCATION.

WALTER MAYNARD'S

CONTAIN A PROGRESSIVE COURSE OF INSTRUCTION IN MUSIC, UPON A SYSTEM DESIGNED BY HIM.

The exercises are set at the top of each page, and blank staves are left for the pupil to copy the examples given. It is intended that the pupils should fill up the first page by copying the exercises given, and write from memory on the second blank page. Every succeeding exercise includes all that has been taught in the preceding examples. The rudiments of music are explained as simply as possible. Diagrams of the pianoforte keyboard are provided, by means of which the notes can be more easily learnt than by any other method. The fundamental rules of harmony and thorough bass are practically illustrated, and a plan laid down by which singing at sight can be learnt without assistance. The Music Copy-Books will, it is believed, be equally useful to master and pupil, by relieving the former from the necessity of constantly repeating the same rules, and ensuring the gradual progress of the latter.

Parts I. and II. contain RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC.
Part III. contains INSTRUCTIONS FOR THE PIANOFORTE.
Parts IV. and V. contain THE RUDIMENTS OF HARMONY.
Part VI. contains INSTRUCTIONS IN VOCALISATION, PART-SINGING, AND SINGING AT SIGHT.

Price Sixpence each; postage free for 7 stamps.

A NEW WORK FOR THE ORGAN.

HANDEL'S CHORUSES

Arranged for the Organ, with PEDAL OBBLIGATO, EXPRESSLY for the use of AMATEURS, by DR. RIMBAULT. Price 3s. each. Nos. 1 to 12 are now ready:—

No. 1. ZADOK THE PRIEST.	No. 5. SING UNTO GOD.	No. 9. FOR UNTO US A CHILD IS BORN.

4. HE GAVE THEM HAILSTONES.	8. LET US BREAK THEIR BONDS ASUNDER.	12. THE HORSE AND HIS RIDER.

The present publication has been undertaken with a view to supply a musical want long felt by amateurs and lovers of the organ, i.e., an edition of HANDEL'S CELEBRATED CHORUSES arranged for the organ with pedal obbligato, that shall be effective, combining all the salient parts of the score, and yet at the same time be within the reach of those performers who have not made the instrument their entire study. We have, it is true, many arrangements; some for "Organ or Pianoforte," others by our most eminent organists. The first belong to a past age; the second, in all cases, are only fit for professional performers, and require an amount of skill for their proper execution rarely attained by amateurs. In the present edition, the notation has been carefully studied so as to simplify the reading, whilst the pedals, in all cases of difficulty, have the assistance of the left hand of the performer. Many other points have been considered so as to render the arrangement fitted to the object it has in view—to supply an edition of HANDEL'S CHORUSES for the Organ expressly for the amateur.

MASON AND HAMLIN'S CABINET ORGANS.

MESSRS. METZLER AND CO. have the pleasure to announce that they have made arrangements with the MASON AND HAMLIN ORGAN COMPANY for the SOLE AGENCY for the Sale of their Instruments in the United Kingdom. Messrs. METZLER AND Co. have shown these Instruments to a few of the most eminent professional men in London, and have received the following Testimonials in their favour :—

2, Manchester Square, Jan. 26, 1872.

Gentlemen,—I entertain the highest opinion of Mason and Hamlin's Cabinet Organs. The tone is mellow and free from reediness, the touch excellent; and altogether I believe these Instruments are destined to be very popular in this country.

Yours truly,

Messrs. Metzler and Co., Great Marlborough Street. JULIUS BENEDICT.

The Specimens of the American Organs which I have examined at Messrs. Metzler and Co.'s, are remarkably sweet and even-toned throughout the various registers, and are free from many of the objections I have hitherto entertained of Manual Reed Instruments. Moreover, they have a good touch, and are capable of some charming effects and pleasing combinations. The appearance of these Organs in solid walnut wood, and brightly gilt pipes in front, is greatly in their favour. Altogether, I can very strongly recommend these Instruments,

WM. SPARK, Mus. D.,
Organist of the Town Hall, Leeds.

Messrs. Metzler and Co. Sydenham, S.E., 23rd Jan., 1872.

Gentlemen,—I have played upon several of your "Mason and Hamlin's Cabinet Organs," and consider them to be very satisfactory Instruments. The tone is exceedingly sweet, the speech quick, and the manipulation easy.

Faithfully yours,
W. J. WESTBROOK.

I have just tried and examined several of Mason and Hamlin's Organs at Messrs. Metzler and Co.'s, and I find the tone to be unusually mellow, sweet and equal. The touch of the Instruments is also light, elastic, and free from lumpiness.

EDWARD J. HOPKINS,
Jan. 22, 1872. Organist to the Hon. Societies of the Inner and Middle Temple.

I have a very high opinion of the "Mason and Hamlin Cabinet Organ." Although the sounds are produced from reeds, the quality of tone is extremely rich and sympathetic, almost equal to that obtained from pipes. It is very easy to blow, and great effects are produced by the Automatic Swell. The octave-coupler and sub-bass add greatly to the richness of the Instrument, which is remarkable for purity of tone. For Sacred Music at home, the "Mason and Hamlin Cabinet Organ" is very desirable, and in many respects that could easily be pointed out, it possesses great advantages over the small priced pipe organs. EDWARD F. RIMBAULT.

At the request of Messrs. Metzler and Co., we have tried and examined several of Messrs. Mason and Hamlin's Cabinet Organs, and we find the tone of these Instruments to be full, powerful, and of agreeable quality, with an absence of reediness; the articulation is rapid, and the touch very good. They appear to us to be the best substitute for a pipe organ.

BRINLEY RICHARDS.
RICHARD REDHEAD.
HENRY W. GOODBAN.

13th Feb., 1872.

Gentlemen,—I have always entertained the opinion that Mason and Hamlin's Cabinet Organs are of the very best class of that description of Instrument. The tone is beautiful—the touch is light and very elastic. Those Instruments that are supplied with pedals give the amateur every opportunity of becoming acquainted with the grand music of old Sebastian Bach; and if they only persevere, they will be amply rewarded.

Believe me, Gentlemen, yours faithfully,
To Messrs. Metzler and Co., Great Marlborough Street. J. L. HATTON.

ORATORIOS IN CHURCH.

By G. A. Macfarren.

What is an oratorio? Originally, a musical composition to be performed in the oratory.

What is an oratory? A place set apart for prayer in a private dwelling; a portion of a church appropriated to special uses—such as that of the meetings instituted in Rome by S Filippo Neri, where oratorios were performed, which took their defining title from that of the place wherein they were heard.

What is a church? "The Lord's house;" a building dedicated to public worship and to religious edification.

Since some churches include an oratory, and since the oratory gave rise and definition to the oratorio, it is at least anomalous that certain well-meaning and thoughtful persons should publicly protest against the performance of oratorios in ecclesiastical buildings. The history of the development of this grand class of musical composition, and of its influence, furnishes argument against the protest; let me glance at the history and hint at the argument.

When the Christian world was convulsed by the Reformation, Neri sought, and not vainly, to effect reforms within the Roman Church, and meet thus some of the objections that were too truly urged against its administration. With this view, he instituted in Rome, in 1540, the oratory meetings which have given immortality to his name, and which won for him canonization. These were assemblies wherein the clergy intermixed with the laity, held free discussion with them on moral and religious subjects, and edified them with discourses that were as impressive as attractive. After these meetings had continued for sixteen years, their great founder deemed it expedient to employ some means of strengthening the inducement to public attendance, and of enforcing the effect of his teaching. He accordingly added music to his scheme, and engaged the most eminent composers of that brilliant epoch to write works, and the best-esteemed singers to perform them. These works were, at first, a series of hymns interspersed through a discourse or narration, and illustrating its chief incidents and arguments. Among the subjects so treated were Job and his friends, Gabriel and the Virgin, the Incarnation, and the Prodigal Son. Among the musicians who wrote these first oratorios were Animuccia, Nanino and Palestrina.

The popularity of the oratory meetings was always on the increase, when, in the last decade of the sixteenth century, Cavalieri gave a new form to the musical works that were composed for and presented at them. He produced an allegorical representation of the contest throughout life between the soul and the body, in which he employed the recently-invented style of recitative, that had proved itself capable of expressing words more deeply than could spoken declamation; and, further, the work was cast in a dramatic mould, the personages were dressed in appropriate costumes, and it had the accessories of scenery and action.

Here, then, was the origination of the two forms of oratorio, the didactic and the dramatic, the former comprising much of narration. Both have been largely extended, and the two have been in some sort combined; the theatrical element, which was at first, and in Italy at least, for a very long time found necessary for imprinting a distinct idea on popular perception, has of late dropped out of the scheme; but even in England, where there has always been repugnance to the association of the stage with scriptural subjects, the dramatic and the didactic or narrative oratorio are each familiar.

The definition, oratorio, seems not to have been employed until 1630, when Balducci, the Italian poet, applied it to two of his sacred works for ecclesiastical use, and recorded in it the practice of the oratory, which had then been more than seventy years established.

In course of long time, the oratorio in Italy assumed a more and more secular character than it had originally borne—nay, it became distinctly an opera upon a Biblical subject. On this account its performance was discontinued in the church, but permitted during Lent in the theatres, the solemn season when the presentation of ordinary dramas was not allowed. Among the best known specimens of the oratorio thus modified, in times approaching our own, are the "Sacrifizio d'Abramo" of Cimarosa, the "Mosé in Egitto" of Rossini, and the "Nabucodonosor" of Verdi.

In Germany the oratorio dates from the time of Luther. It was one of his great aims to conserve and perpetuate all that he deemed good and pure in Roman use; hence, many choral tunes of Roman origin are associated with his name; hence, too, the recital of the story of the Passion at Eastertide, with all possible earnestness, solemnity, and vitality of effect. How early in the Primitive Church the practice began of thus commemorating the main event in Christian story I cannot say; but there is certainty that it comes to us from a remote age, and that it is continued in the metropolitan church of the Roman see. The form of this recitation is, that the narrative portions of the Evangelist referring to Passiontide are allotted to one singer, and the speeches, short or long, of the several personages are allotted each to a particular singer, who interrupts the narrator at the points where such words occur, those of the multitude—whether disciples, populace, Jewish priests, or Roman soldiers—being in like manner assigned to the full choir. In Luther's time, it is true, this recital was given in his own country in a simpler form than it is and always has been in St. Peter's church, it being limited to two priests, one to fulfil the part of the Evangelist, the other to personify the several individuals; likely, too, it was given with even cruder music than the so-called Gregorian chant. The limited means at the disposal of the Reformer are a sufficient, as they are the only explanation of this extreme simplicity; it is well enough authenticated, that he deemed the periodical recitation of highest value, and he bequeathed special injunctions that its grandeur should from time to time be amplified as the musical art progressed, and as the Church obtained more command of executive efficiency. It was his desire to keep before the popular mind the identity of the new with the old form of Christianity, which would best be evidenced by the retention of such uses as were of true value in the teaching of sacred history and sacred doctrine.

According to the great Martin's injunction, age after age brought into being further and further elaborations of the setting of the Passion text as it stands in each of the four Gospels. In process of time, original poems came to be written on the same theme for the annual celebration, which had more or less merit as they departed less or more from the phraseology of Scripture. Of all the musicians who set these—and they are all famous in the art history of Germany—the name dearest to us is that of Handel. A distinguishing feature in them all is the copious inclusion of the choral tunes of the Lutheran Church, with always some verse of the hymn to which each belongs that refers to the incident or sentiment in illustration of which it is introduced, and thus they in some sort resemble in construction the musical works written for S. Filippo Neri's oratory.

The culmination of this gradual ascent in character and importance of the oratorio for Holy Week was in Bach's setting of two, if not three, of the Biblical versions of the Passion, those of St. Matthew and St. John, and perhaps, also, of St. Luke. These, like the works that preceded them, contain each a large selection of the choral tunes, and likewise some airs, duets, and choruses set to verses by a modern hand, which comment on the sacred text.

The immediate incentive to the composition of these remarkable works, of which the "Matthew Passion" is the author's masterpiece, was the great attraction to Dresden of the recently-instituted Romanist Service, supported by all the talent of the Italian opera company in the Saxon capital, then numbering many of the most renowned singers—all Italians—among its members. The Elector, when he accepted the crown of Poland, abjured the Lutheran Church for that of Rome, and invested the communion of his adoption with the utmost brilliancy within his royal reach. All the world, it is said, certainly all the German world, rushed to Dresden. In the apprehension that where they went to hear the singing they might remain to take part in the praying, Solomon Deyling, one of the most distinguished divines of the Lutheran Church, devised a counter attraction, to hold them within the embrace of that loving mother. Bach was engaged to set the Passion for performance on Good Friday, and the great works we have are the result. We may fear that the high purpose miscarried, for this is sadly implied by the non-performance of the marvellous setting of the Matthew Passion from the occasion of its first production, in Leipzig, in 1729, till that of its revival by Mendelssohn, in Berlin, in 1829. As wonderful as the beauty of the work is its sleep of a hundred years, since it needed but to be reproduced to be at once recognised as the greatest work of the greatest master, and men are now atoning in some degree for a century's neglect, by making themselves at one with the beauties of the composition and with the lessons it teaches.

Bach wrote other oratorios for other appointed Church festivals—Christmas and Whitsuntide for example—and these are coming into present knowledge.

Other musicians, from Graun to Mendelssohn, have treated other Scripture subjects in oratorios that are freely, perhaps, but obviously, framed upon the Bach model. Spohr, Schneider, and some others have written oratorios, didactic and dramatic, to Scriptural texts and modern, wherein they have rejected the ancient German form. The majority of these refer not to particular occasions, but, though they are not rarely given in concert rooms, they are performed also in churches at festivals and peculiar celebrations.

The above account refers to North or Reformed Germany. In the South, where the older communion still prevails, the oratorio is mainly represented by such works as the "Creation" and the "Seasons" of Haydn, and the "Mount of Olives" of Beethoven, which were, indeed, not written for Church use. They are more or less secular in character, sometimes in their subject, sometimes in the text which embodies this, sometimes in their musical structure. For the most part, then, though not inadmissible, they are not wholly desirable for church use, and their performance within the sacred precincts is the exception rather than the rule.

In England, the oratorio was introduced by Handel. This, truly, was in a somewhat secular form, and for the entirely secular purpose of diverting the company gathered in the magnificent mansion of the Duke of Chandos. Racine's tragedy of "Esther" was freely translated, with great abridgment, into English. This Handel set to music; and it was first performed privately at Cannons, there is reason to suppose with action, August 29, 1720. It was twice given, also privately, in London, in 1731. A public performance, in the chief concert room of the day, was announced in 1732, which the composer anticipated, though he could not prevent, by the advertisement of a performance of the work on his own account, at the King's Theatre, on the 2nd of May. Popular repugnance to the presentation of a Biblical story on the stage of a theatre was then so strong, that the advertisement in question bears the air of apology in every line. "By His Majesty's command," it begins—a justification which would silence if not overturn every objection, and which shows that George II. approved of the class of composition. Observe also the following most significant postscript:—"N.B. There will be no acting on the stage,"—a guarantee of the untheatrical nature of the exhibition—"but the house will be fitted up in a decent manner for the audience;" to describe this manner and certify its decency would be prolix, but what ensues is of consequence as referring to the serious, if not churchlike, appearance wherewith the theatre was invested: "The music to be disposed after the manner of the Coronation Service." Now, be it remembered, the story of "Esther" is considered sacred, because of the book in which it is found, but has nothing in its nature or incidents to warrant the consideration; and remember, too, that the poem on which this oratorio is founded has no pretension to be anything other than a drama. Mystified by the prevarications shown above, and sanctioned by the royal example the world went in vast numbers to witness the "Oratorio in English," and it had complete success.

Such was the first introduction of the Oratorio in England. To meet general dislike to the association of sacred themes with secular surroundings, the performance of such works was for the most part restricted to the Wednesdays and Fridays in Lent, when the law forbade all theatrical representations. There was then no large concert room in London, so Handel engaged Covent Garden Theatre for the Lenten Season of many successive years; and, though he occasionally gave performances elsewhere, it was there chiefly that his great works were produced and repeated. There, after it had been successfully given in Dublin, his "Messiah" was first heard in London, March 23, 1743. This oratorio has done and still does far more than any other, more even than any work of other arts, more I believe than any literary essays or spoken discourses, to popularise throughout England the Scriptural texts which most strongly bear upon the Christian story; and it has thus been of infinite consequence in the dissemination of Christian lore, in making familiar to every one, of every rank and station, of every sect, of every degree of education and ignorance, the revered words whereon is based the whole of the Church's teaching. Aversion was so strong, however, from the supposed profanation of this holiest of themes, that it was deemed indecorous to announce the work by the title to which it had been written, and under which it had been given in Ireland; and it was accordingly advertised as "A Sacred Oratorio," a name that Handel reserved for this one work alone. In spite of this evasion, the repugnance of the London world was so strong against the public presentation of the "Messiah," that though its name was withheld, its success was indifferent. It was heard but thrice, and that coldly, in the year of its production, and once in 1745; then it lay by for four years, and was brought forward again as the "Messiah," in 1749, but with no happier result. In 1750, when the composer opened the organ he had presented to the chapel of the Foundling Hospital, the "Messiah" was reproduced in that building, when, for the first time, it was felt to be in its natural and legitimate home. All prejudice against it was dispelled, crowds thronged to witness its performance, and from that notable 1st of May, all England has acknowledged the equal importance to Christianity and to art of this glorious monument to its author's genius. Now, when we hear the "Messiah" texts, as they occur incidentally in the Daily Service, they fall upon our ear as quotations from the oratorio; for all that is most significant has been so happily chosen and has been so effectively brought together in this work, that is is a complete epitome of the subject, and we hear the sacred words in association with the notes of Handel so frequently, that it is all but impossible to part either from other in our recollection or in the impression they make.

With the charitable purpose of assisting the widows and orphans of the clergy, the choirs of Worcester, Hereford, and Gloucester have gathered together annually for nearly 150 years, and of late have invited the co-operation of their fellow musicians from other districts, to give musical performances alternately in their three cathedrals. The original object of these meetings has been worthily fulfilled; but the world is a good world, much as it is sometimes scandalised, and the English people have been ever and are still eminently free-handed whenever a deserving claim excites their generosity; so, though charity was the original object, very far other, while not less important, results have sprung from these cathedral festivals. Thousands of persons are yearly brought together to witness the performance of the noblest works in sacred art, on a grander scale and with a nearer approach to perfection than is elsewhere to be heard, save under exceptional and somewhat analogous circumstances. The grandeur of the works themselves and of their presentation is enormously enhanced by the site where they take place; the gorgeous effect of sound within those superb buildings, the associations wherewith they are invested, and the scene they present, all swell the solemnity of the occasion and aid in the impression of the hour and its lasting influence. People receive thus the highest moral education in the refinement of their taste and the nurture of their intellect, and the highest religious education in the implanting in their hearts of the Church's principles with such healthful adjuncts that they may not easily be eradicated. I have met with devout men and trivial, learned and uninstructed, some who have sought edification and some mere amusement, who have all concurred in the admission that they have been far more deeply impressed by oratorios when they have heard them in these holy piles than on any other occasion, and a deep impression is the seed of an ever-green memory. See, then, what good has been wrought by these festivals upon their visitors. Folks could have practised the virtue of charity and benefitted their hearts thereby, as they have done and constantly do, without going to hear music in a country cathedral; but they could not have quickened their sense of the beautiful, could not have enlarged their understanding, could not have obtained so strong an insight into Scripture history and doctrine, by any other means as by hearing works of high art, and by experiencing their most powerful comment on the themes they illustrate, and hearing and experiencing these under the most favourable circumstances for strengthening their impression. The Three-Choir Festivals have been written against and preached against with vigour and talent that would have carried any other purpose than their suppression; but the will of the people has been firm in their support, will, springing from conviction of their value; and when a most corrupting power, the power of money, was recently brought into the field against the most effective means of moral and religious edification, the people arose, united, and expressed their goodwill and their strong will by meeting the enemy with his own weapon, and paid him out of his opposition.

Come nearer home. A Londoner may refer with better authority to events within his own experience than to those in remote counties. Not to dwell upon the Commemoration of Handel in Westminster Abbey, and its several repetitions, which in honouring the master expanded his influence; not upon the Westminster Festival of 1834, of which I well remember the effect, I will advert to the recent celebration of Maundy Thursday in that same holy edifice, and revert with an intense feeling of gratitude. What is dearest to an Englishman's veneration is concentred in Westminster Abbey. It would be redundant here to recapitulate history in order to remind a reader of the countless stimulants to this gravest frame of mind, in recollection of the progress of our religion, the development of our state, and the advancement of our arts, all of which belong to this locality above every other in the country. So stimulated, an immense multitude assembled to celebrate the solemnest of the Church's fast or festivals. The occasion was one for elevating the musical art to the highest dignity it can hold before mankind, the dignity of opening our best and strongest feelings and of satisfying them. The "Passion" of Sebastian Bach has no element of popular effect, makes no appeal to vulgar appreciation, but aims ever at the most exalted expression of the purest ideas, and aims not in vain. In that vast area, one felt by sympathy—and sympathy's language is the universal silent speech that can never be misinterpreted—that a single emotion conjoined the thousands of hearts which beat there as with one pulse, and that all were for the time translated out of their ordinary selves into a nobler state of being. The devout silence, the implicit attention, the earnest reverence, made the many as an individual, and prepared each member of that wide-extending unity for the reception of impressions that could come to him through no other means. I had heard the oratorio in secular buildings under less but under very advantageous circumstances; I had been penetrated—who could help it—by the prodigous technical beauties of the work; but I was till then a stranger to its enormous power upon the feelings, and this, I am certain, was made known to me by the time, the place, and the companionship. The sermon had its due share in the solemnity, expounding the event that was celebrated, its effect upon mankind, and the lofty nature of the work which in the most irresistible of art forms displayed this event for our contemplation. The priest's final benediction was received with such meekness of manner as proved devoutest spirit; and the mighty throng dispersed—mighty in the sum of good feeling with which the whole mass was infused—dispersed, as reverently as the most sanguine wishes could have desired, or the most vivid imagination could have pictured; not a word of levity was to be heard, not an expression but of wonder at the great scene which had closed.

Think not that this effect which I must call sublime, for no lesser word can describe it, was due alone to the number of the executants and of the audience. It has been my happy fortune to witness also the renowned service in St. Paul's, wherein the school children sustain the most prominent part. It was, indeed, a happy fortune to hear the beautiful and unique effect of those thousands of childrens' voices, but one would rather forget the surroundings of the occasion. Because I know not the reasons for its choice, I will not discuss the worthlessness of portions of the music performed, but will say only that there was little in the whole selection, and there was no work of sufficient extent to be greatly impressive, that could strengthen one's conviction or enlarge one's perception of any fact or doctrine. Well, there was charity in abundance, which was elicited with admirable tact by the plate-holders, as I have since heard one of them describe and boast. There was plenty of talking, which went on during, but was not pertinent to, the Service; there was profusion, too, of corporeal refreshment, which, in my simplicity, I fancied would have been better in place, together with the gossip that went on around me, outside than within the building; and, lastly, the exodus of the congregation was that of a host of people, who had come to a notable show, and had nothing to do but to get away from it and to discuss the pretty looks and quaint costumes of the youthful performers. Pretty much of the same irreverent spirit has been observed among persons who enter a cathedral as anthem time draws near, and exeunt directly this most attractive portion of the music is ended. It is hard to guess what may be the cause of such unfitness to the season and the place in the conduct of many who are present. The case was quite otherwise at Westminster, and I believe that this was because the solemn nature of the occasion had been previously made known to all who were to participate in it, and that thus prepared, they came, they heard, and they departed in a condition of mind to derive edification from all that they witnessed.

I rejoice to learn, and better churchmen than I should rejoice all the more, that the Special Service of Maundy Thursday, which, though last year it shocked some who, I fear regarded it askance, exalted and edified thousands, is to be repeated in the Abbey at the coming season. It is a like matter for rejoicing, that the same principle which prompts the Dean of Westminster is shared by others of the clergy, and that a similar celebration of Eastertide will also be held in a smaller arena and on a smaller scale, but with the same earnest desire which stimulates Dean Stanley thus to solemnise the occasion by placing it and the lessons it yields in the light of art before the public. This allusion is to a Special Service to be held on Easter Wednesday in the church of St. John the Evangelist, Waterloo Road, which is to include the portions of Handel's "Messiah" that refer to the Passion and its results, and these are to be executed by solo singers, chorus and orchestra. The neighbourhood is peopled by what are commonly called the lowest classes—men of bad education or none, and of debasing occupation, but often of bright intelligence which needs development; and the invitation of such a populace to the hearing of such a work, may be the first step in a course of instruction that may have most glorious results.

The history of the Western Church, in all its divisions and sections, warrants such most hearty rejoicing. It may be matter of regret that reform and dissent have split the one Catholic Church into so many distinctions as now separate men who call themselves Christians; but it makes some amends for this possible evil that there is one point whereupon all classes are of accord, or, at least, all have been. It has been shown above, that, under the authority of the Pope, there has been from time immemorial a yearly celebration of the Passion by a musical recitation of its Gospel record, and that the oratorio, as an art form, was invented for the use of the Church, and its performance for very long restricted to ecclesiastical buildings. It has been shown that in the Lutheran Church the musical presentation of the Passion story emanated from the founder, and that the oratorio in Germany is evolved from this germ. It has been shown that in the Church of England the strongest antipathy to the treatment of sacred subject in secular localities long prevailed among the people; that they first accepted the greatest work which has been written for them, and the one which best illustrates its subject, when it was given in a sacred edifice; that the performance of oratorios in churches has elsewhere worked good in the people's heart and that the last incident in the account—the Abbey service of 1871—is pregnant with important consequences. Lastly, let it be recollected, that though some members of the Calvinistic Church recoil from all kinds of music within the tabernacle, and all kinds of dramatic representations beyond its walls, Calvin himself most strongly urged the use of music in Divine Service, and the employment of the drama as an instrument of religious teaching, sanctioning especially the performance of a drama with this tendency in Geneva, that took place on Sunday evenings in 1546. It is matter more for marvel than for discussion that churchmen should now differ on a topic whereon Romanists, Lutherans, Anglicans and Calvinists have been of one mind and have given one example; let men profit by the example where they can, and hope that the unanimity which may result thence may be as manifest in time to come as it seems to have been in the past.

Every sect and denomination of Christians holds some tenet or right that is repulsive to members of other sects, who are excluded, therefore, from participating in, or even witnessing, its Service. There is no rite in the execution of an oratorio, and though a musical commentary on Scripture texts is the most forcible and penetrating of sermons, it involves no special tenet, nor can it present the subject under any aspect that can be less acceptable to one sect than to every other. Hence, all classes of men of every shade and degree of devoutness, who would shun another's place of worship on every other occasion, might meet in general brotherhood to hear and to draw edification from the works of art which broadly illustrate the universal creed. Great liberality of spirit has been evinced of late in the officiation of Anglican divines in Presbyterian churches, and this cannot be effectless in breaking down the barriers of rancorous feeling that, from Covenanting times, has parted one denomination from another; but here promises to be a ground whereon all may assemble, and where, finding themselves united with their fellows in one common purpose, they may forget distinction, free themselves from prejudice, and share in a general advantage.

In the days when England was "merrie," engagements were made and events were chronicled, not according to the almanac, but to the feasts and fasts of the Church; Englishmen leased their tenements from the feast of Christ, or of Our Lady, or of St. John the Baptist, or of St. Michael; they installed their Lords Mayor and hired their servants at Martinmas; and they recorded the grandest achievement of their darling hero, the battle of Agincourt, as having been won on St. Crispin's Day. Men have forgotten the names of half the saints in the calendar, and they know not the dates which are consecrated to the memory of half the others. Some of these may be lost, it is true, and we suffer no material injury; but it would surely be to the furtherance of Christianity were those occasions to be specially pointed which are designed to commemorate the chief features of our creed and the main actors in the history which is the basis of our religion. It is no original conceit of mine that a musical setting is a powerful exponent, nay, the most powerful, of a dramatic story, and of every word of the text in which such story is embodied. The hearing of great musical works, efficiently rendered, tends to elevate mens' minds; the mind, so elevated, is open to best impressions from the performance of such works, and would learn more thence than from spoken homilies, they would learn to image the situations which were depicted, to feel the sentiments that were expressed, and to understand in their utmost purport the words that were uttered; it would be then a glorious celebration of the Church festivals, were there to be given on each of them, or on as many as convenient circumstances would allow, the performance of an oratorio appropriate to the season in every one of our cathedrals, and in so many of our parochial churches as possessed the means of producing such or less ambitious works decently, if not in full perfection.

There exist compositions already, which the judgment of critics and the feeling of the populace have set apart as classical, to illustrate all the chief seasons of the English Church. Spohr's "Last Judgment," and Schumann's "Advent Hymn," are appropriate to the opening of the Church's year and Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," celebrating the lightening of our darkness, would also be as seasonable to Advent; Handel's "Messiah" is appropriate to Christmas, as are the five short oratorios of Bach that are designed for performance on the five days of that period; portions of Mendelssohn's fragment of "Christus" are apt to the feast of Epiphany; Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" befits the feast of that saint's Conversion; the "Dies Iræ," from Mozart's "Requiem," the concise setting of the same hymn from Cherubini's, the whole of the "German Requiem" of Brahms, are suitable for Lent, and, more than all, Handel's "Israel in Egypt" would gloriously symbolise this preparation for the Passover; the many settings, by Bach and others, of the several versions of the Passion, and Spohr's "Crucifixion," are expressly fitted for Holy Week; the typical representation of the Ascension is embodied in Mendelssohn's "Elijah"; Bach's "Whitsuntide Oratorio" has its own peculiar occasion; and it would be easy to swell such a list as this were there the least likelihood of its being required for selection.

I am aware of the objections to such performances on the score of the indecorous conduct of persons who meet to witness them. On the same score the Daily Service should be closed, for that is repeatedly, if not constantly, profaned by gross indecorum. I thoroughly believe that the unseemly behaviour against which complaint is made at our country festivals, is a result of the unfit preparation of the auditory, by those whose province it should be to show them better. There was no indecorum in the Abbey last Maundy Thursday, but there has been indecorum at the Morning Service assisted by the school-children in St. Paul's, whence we see that people will imbibe effervescent drinks and relax themselves in general chatter over their daily prayers for the want of better direction, but will give their whole hearts to the noble teaching of an oratorio when they come right-minded to receive its lesson.

Again it is argued that an orchestra for the executants and seats for the hearers cannot be erected without carpenters, whose presence is an abomination in the sight of the Dean and Chapter. Let then cathedrals fall to the ground, for it is of far less importance to keep them in habitable repair as homes of a dead Service, than to put them in order for the worthy solemnization of those festivals which should be the gathering occasion for whole counties, whereat men of all religious persuasions might meet.

Lastly, a point is to be raised, whereupon however deep and earnest my professional concern, it cannot probably affect the interest of musicians until a future generation. Not to enlarge upon the claims of Englishmen to the respect which they deny one another in all the departments of secular music, I am sure of general concurrence in the statement that our country has shone conspicuously in its composers for the Church. Turn to the Elizabethan era; to that of Gibbons and his contemporaries; to that great epoch of the Restoration, when Purcell was surrounded by a host of writers whose glory is only pale by reason of his excessive brightness; and even to the time of the House of Hanover's accession, when Croft, and Greene and others, resisted the blight which that dynasty and the Italian Opera cast upon secular art, and maintained the glory of our ecclesiastical school. I believe in a great future for English music; I think that the Church may be its field; and I know that, except the opportunities be greatly widened for oratorio performances, there can be no use for the grandest class of musical works, nor fair scope for the exercise of musical genius in their composition. It would be a mighty and a glorious task for those who are to come, were they to be called upon to supplement the repertory of masterpieces to which allusion has been made, and to be assured that kindred excellence to these would be a guarantee for the presentation of such newly created works on the occasions to which they were appropriate. These works would have a preference over productions of elder times in their being written in the technical idiom of the age in which they were produced, and in the expressing the feelings of that age and of the generation to which they were addressed. To men who love their art, to men who love their religion, to men who love their country, this should not be a trifling argument; let me hope at least that it may weigh with others which have been adduced in the consideration of persons who examine the important question as to the propriety of the presentation of Oratorios in Church.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

The Concert on the 10th ult. was in the highest degree interesting, for not only was Dr. Ferdinand Hiller the solo pianist, but the occasion was selected for the first performance in this country of his "Symphonische Phantasie," a work already well known in Germany. On a single hearing it would be impossible to do more than record the favourable impression produced upon us by listening to a composition of such pretension. The prevalence of the minor key is, we presume, intentional, for there can be little doubt that few Germans of the present day write without the definite idea of embodying in music a continuous chain of thought; and, therefore, in the absence of any published "argument," we can only imagine that the brilliant last movement is designed to express the final release from a train of vague and agitated feelings, the indications of which in the early part of the work are too vividly coloured to be doubtful. Although somewhat partaking of the form of a Symphony, there is no break between the movements, and this perhaps invests the composition with a certain heaviness which is slightly detrimental to the due enjoyment of the many beauties with which it abounds. The instrumentation is charming, the orchestra being handled with a mastery which commands the attention throughout, and the rich scoring of the Finale, in which the brass instruments are most judiciously used, elicited a storm of applause from the general audience, with which the composer, who conducted the Symphony, must assuredly have felt flattered. Dr. Hiller's performance of Mozart's Pianoforte Concerto in A was a marvel of delicacy and executive power, and his cadenza showed not only his perfect command of the instrument in every conceivable form of passage, but his reverence for the composer whose work he was interpreting, for throughout this brilliant improvisation Dr. Hiller was always secondary to Mozart. Two little pieces, written expressly for this Concert by Dr. Hiller, a Ghazel and Waltz—the former expressive of a form of verse found in Persian poetry—were afterwards played by the composer, and received with that applause which trifles so elegant and refined can scarcely fail to command. The vocalists were Madame Lemmens-Sherrington and Signor Agnesi.

On the 17th ult. the chief feature in the Concert was the exquisite performance of Beethoven's Concerto in G, by Madame Schumann. Rubinstein's "Don Quixote," called in the programme a "Humoreske," for orchestra, was a welcome novelty. It is a clever but, as its title implies, an eccentric work, and one, we think, that deserves a second hearing.

THE ORATORIO CONCERTS.

At the fifth Subscription Concert, on Tuesday, the 6th ult., Mendelssohn's "Lobgesang," and Rossini's "Stabat Mater," attracted a large audience. Unfortunately, both Madame Rudersdorff and Mr. Sims Reeves were indisposed, and the whole of the trying soprano music was undertaken by Miss Annie Sinclair, whilst the tenor parts were entrusted to Mr. Raynham. Much as we have always admired Miss Sinclair, we scarcely gave her the credit of being able so successfully to acquit herself of a duty so arduous as that which fell to her share on this occasion; but chances like these have sometimes made the fortune of young vocalists, and we are bound to say that her brilliant and thoroughly deserved success makes us entertain the most sanguine hopes that one more accomplished and conscientious artist is added to our list of Oratorio singers. In the "Lobgesang" her rendering of the soprano solo in the opening chorus, of the duet (with Miss Julia Sydney), "I waited for the Lord," and of the exquisite phrase, with the long sustained high A, leading into the chorus, "The night is departing," proved not only the possession of a pure and sympathetic voice, but of a true perception of the real meaning of the author; and in the "Stabat Mater" her singing of the duet, "Quis est homo" (with Madame Fernandez), and the air with chorus, "Inflammatus," elicited applause so loud and continuous as to leave no doubt of the marked effect she had created upon an audience already predisposed to receive any vocalists with apathy who had replaced two deservedly popular favourites. In the "Stabat Mater," too, a highly satisfactory impression was made by Madame Fernandez, who, both in the duet "Quis est homo," and the solo "Fac ut portem," displayed a fine and carefully-trained voice, and an irreproachable style. Mr. Raynham sang with much earnestness in both works, and although his task was indeed a hard one, he won the warmest marks of approbation, the air "He counteth all your sorrows," in the "Lobgesang," especially deserving commendation. Mr. Whitney's "Pro peccatis," in the "Stabat Mater," was a very effective performance of an exceedingly trying solo; and in the "Eia, Mater," his fine voice and musicianlike feeling were shown to great advantage. The singing of the Choir throughout the evening was uniformly excellent, the whole of the choruses in the "Lobgesang," more particularly, being given with a finer effect than we have ever yet heard; and invidious, therefore, as it may appear to name any one for special praise, we cannot help expressing our unqualified admiration of the perfect rendering both of the unaccompanied and accompanied parts of the chorale, "Let all men praise the Lord:" finer chorus singing than this we venture to say has never been heard in England." In the "Stabat Mater," too, the care with which all the choral portions of the "Eia, Mater," were sung, and the marvellous manner in which the varied gradations of tone were preserved, without the slightest variation in the pitch, cannot be too much praised. The orchestra played the instrumental movements of the "Lobgesang" with remarkable delicacy and precision, and the accompaniments were given with a generous reservation of power which we should be glad to find more generally observed.

On the 20th ult. the sixth Concert took place, when Bach's Passion Music (S. Matthew) was performed, the solo vocalists being Madame Cora de Wilhorst, Miss Julia Sydney, Miss Julia Elton, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Thurley Beale and Herr Stockhausen. The principal soprano solos received a most careful rendering from Madame de Wilhorst, the beautiful air, "Break and die," especially being sung with much devotional feeling, and the small portion assigned to Miss Sydney in the second part being also most satisfactorily given. Miss Julia Elton sang throughout the work with that earnest care which she uniformly bestows upon the music allotted to her; but her greatest effect was created in the pathetic air, "Have mercy upon me, O Lord" (with the excellent violin obbligato of Herr Pollitzer), into which she threw a depth of expression which spoke to the hearts of all. No praise can be too great for Mr. Lloyd; his advance during the short time he has been before the public is extraordinary. To sing the exacting tenor part in the Passion music even correctly shows no mean artistic power; but to enchain the attention of the audience by the fervour of his delivery of every passage whilst grappling with the obvious difficulties of the music, evinces the possession of a faculty which cannot fail to place him in the foremost rank of his profession. His singing elicited the warmest demonstrations of approval throughout; and, although all was so good, it would be impossible to pass over without special praise the Recitative, "Now Peter sat without in the palace," the last line of which—"And he went out and wept bitterly"—was a model of pathetic vocalisation. Herr Stockhausen gave the most intellectual reading to the fine bass solos which fell to his share, and helped materially the success of the work. His rendering of the air, "'Twas in the cool of eventide," was deservedly rewarded with enthusiastic applause. The choruses were given with a decision and a minute attention to the gradations of tone which can only be possible when familiarity with the work has ensured confidence. The chorales, especially, were simply perfect, the pianos being sung with such an equal balance in all the parts as to make the words as distinctly heard as if they were uttered by one voice. The chorus "Have lightnings and thunders," evoked a storm of applause which only subsided when all hope of its being repeated had been given over; and much as we and many others would have liked to hear this fine piece again, we cannot but applaud the conductor for his steady determination to resist encores. Mr. Joseph Barnby held his choir well under command the whole evening; Dr. Stainer acted as accompanist of several of the Recitatives at the pianoforte most judiciously, and Mr. F. A. W. Docker presided with his usual skill at the organ.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

At the Students' evening Concert, on the 15th ult., Dr. Ferdinand Hiller was present, and expressed himself in the highest terms of admiration upon the performance of the pupils. On the Doctor's entrance, accompanied by Sir Sterndale Bennett, he was warmly greeted, and a few appropriate and feeling words addressed to the young students by Sir Sterndale proved that he was glad of the opportunity of showing that the reception of so eminent an artist in this country could be as spontaneously enthusiastic as that which was accorded to himself, through Dr. Hiller, a few months ago at Bonn. Amongst the pianists who especially distinguished themselves during the evening may be mentioned Miss Conolly and Miss Troup, who performed Mendelssohn and Moscheles' duet for two pianofortes on "Preciosa" with so much brilliant executive power and refinement of touch as to elicit the most enthusiastic applause; Miss Baglehole, who played a prelude and air with variations by Handel, from memory, so excellently as fully to justify her claim to the silver medal which she wore; Miss Waite, who gave with much classical feeling Dussek's Sonata in E flat, for pianoforte and violin (with Mr. Parker); Miss Chapman, who performed with much fluency Bach's Prelude and Fugue in C sharp major; and Mr. Parker, whose rendering of two Studies showed much command of the instrument and facility of execution. The principal solo vocalists were Miss Goode, who displayed a pleasing and well trained voice in a showy song by Gounod; Mr. Guy, who is now rapidly making his way outside the Academy; Mr. Howells (the Potter Exhibitioner); Mr. Wadmore, a really good bass; and Miss Lyon, who gave with much musical feeling a charming song by Mr. T. M. Mudie. Favourable mention must be made of a part-song, "Autumn," by Mr. Eaton Faning (student), which was excellently sung and deservedly applauded. Mr. Walter Fitton accompanied the vocal music with much care and judgment.

MR. HENRY LESLIE'S CONCERTS.

On Friday, the 9th ult., Mr. Leslie commenced the season with a programme generally well selected to display the best qualities of his choir. Mr. Henry Holmes's Cantata, "Praise ye the Lord," we have already spoken of on its production at one of the Three-Choir Festivals, and although its execution on the present occasion was excellent, it failed to produce much effect. Wilbye's "Sweet honey-sucking bees," and Morley's "Fire, fire!" were exquisitely given; and amongst the best of the modern school were the concert-giver's Madrigal, "My love is fair," Mendelssohn's "Hunter's farewell," Sir Julius Benedict's "Rise, sleep no more," and Sir Sterndale Bennett's "Sweet stream." Miss Edith Wynne, Madame Patey and Mr. Mass gave several songs with their usual success; but solo vocalists can be heard anywhere, and we cannot but emphatically repeat our conviction that Mr. Leslie's choir should be the main attraction at these Concerts.

Mr. Henry Leslie delivered an interesting lecture on the "Social Influence of Music" at the Royal Institution, on Friday, the 23rd ult. After dwelling at length upon the excellent effects which have resulted from the establishment of the various musical societies both in the metropolis and the provinces, he said—"In the grants made by Parliament for the year ending March 31st, 1872, the total amount voted was £233,179. The following are items in the account:

Schools of Science of Art	£57,830
School of Mines and Geological Museum ...	10,403
College of Chemistry	680
Royal College of Science (Dublin)	6,913
Edinburgh Museum	8,824

In the face of the above figures, it may well be asked why music does not receive a like support? And why a system which works so well in other arts could not, with equally good results be applied to music? The principal demand of musicians is, that in the metropolis a national institution should be established, which should be the heart of musical England; which should enable all who desire to follow music as a profession, to obtain a thorough theoretical and practical education; and which should have, as its governing body, such an array of our best men, that a musical degree conferred by it would be the greatest honour a musician could obtain. With such a central institution, purely elementary musical education might be left to the local school boards, and to such academies as might be formed by municipal authorities or by individuals. But how is such a central institution to be formed? Without the slightest trouble. For one exists with complete organization, ready at a moment's notice to be utilized—and that institution is the Royal Academy of Music; established in 1822, it has done much to elevate the standard of music in this country. It continued in flourishing circumstances until 1847, when it possessed £10,000 in Government securities. From this prosperous condition it gradually declined until 1868, when, in March, the committee of noblemen and gentlemen who managed the institution, and who had done their best, willingly giving up their time in its interests, resigned their functions, all the investments having been absorbed in the general expenditure, and a balance on the wrong side being left as a legacy to the future directors. In this dire extremity, without a management and with a debt of £200 weighing heavily upon them, the professors of the Institution came to the rescue, Sir W. S. Bennett retaining the post of Principal, to which he had been appointed in 1866. They cleared off the debt, and closed the proceedings of 1869 with a balance of £650 in hand, and an increase of twenty-five pupils. But to do this, the professors took only 45 per cent. of their usual fees, thus virtually making the Academy a present of the remaining 55 per cent. In continuous prosperity have affairs progressed up to the present time, when the students number 144, and the balance in hand is some £2000. There is no intention of hoarding this balance, for the greater part of it will be immediately applied to the restoration of those scholarships which had become extinct under the former committee, in consequence of the application of the funds set apart for them to the general requirements. Comment is needless. An institution that has been restored by the energy and self-abnegation of its professors, when the working of it had failed in the hands of men of the highest social position, cannot but be deemed worthy of national support. To a limited extent the Academy has received that support, for a grant of £500 from Government was made to it in 1864, and was continued for 1865, '6, and '7. In 1868 it was withdrawn, but, thanks to Mr. Gladstone (and the earnest thanks of all musicians are due to him for that timely help), the grant was renewed in 1869, and has since then been continued. The Academy, having its certificated pupils in every town of any consideration, might be of considerable use to school boards in supplying examiners where musical education has been established. If Government would only assist the development of the Academy by help (which might be given on the principle of proportion to results) and active official recognition by the appointment of its representatives on the acting committee, a national institution might be established which would be of immense service to art, a great stimulus to musical education, and which would elevate the taste of the great body of the people through the length and breadth of the kingdom.

The Anniversary Festival of the Royal Society of Musicians will take place at Willis's Rooms, on Friday the 5th April, His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh in the chair. Several of the most eminent artists have already promised to assist in the musical department.

The Pianoforte Recitals of Miss Clara Gottschalk, the first of which was given on the 10th ult., at St. George's Hall, have an interest apart from most performances of the kind from the fact of her devoting the chief part of the programme to the works of her late brother, L. M. Gottschalk. Her playing thoroughly realised the many attractive qualities of these compositions, which we trust may shortly become better known in this country. The "Slumber Song" may especially be cited as an excellent piece. Miss Gottschalk also performed a duet for two pianofortes, with Mr. W. Carter, which was much applauded. The vocalists were Miss Katharine Poyntz and Mr. Maybrick.

The Monthly Popular Concerts at the Angell-Town Institution, Brixton, under the skilful direction of Mr. Ridley Prentice, have been progressing during the past month with great and deserved success. The programmes have been carefully selected; and Mr. Prentice's performance of some of the best classical pianoforte works has been thoroughly appreciated. These concerts have done much towards the musical education of the residents in this locality; and we sincerely trust that the spirited director may receive sufficient encouragement to enable him to renew his praiseworthy efforts in the future.

The six lectures on the Clavecin and Pianoforte given by Herr Pauer at the South Kensington Museum, are likely to prove highly interesting; for although in his remarks upon art and artists his foreign accent is somewhat an obstacle to the due appreciation of his discourse, he speaks with his fingers so eloquently in the universal language of music as amply to make amends for this defect. Selections from the works of Scarlatti, Couperin, Rameau, Johann Kuhnau, and Matheson were given at the first lecture on the 5th ult., and the following Monday was devoted to Handel and Bach.

We have received the following official notice of the arrangements respecting new musical publications for the International Exhibition of 1872:—Her Majesty's Commissioners will appoint a Committee to select for performance in the Royal Albert Hall new Compositions of merit which may have been published before the 1st March, 1872. Accordingly, Her Majesty's Commissioners are desirous of receiving from the Musical Academies and Schools of the

STEAM POWER WORKS:

1, 2, 3, AND 4, CHENIES STREET; 8, LITTLE TORRINGTON STREET; AND HERTFORD PLACE.

United Kingdom and of Foreign Countries the names of Musical Compositions of all kinds, which are considered by them of sufficient merit to be worthy of performance in the Royal Albert Hall during the International Exhibition of 1872. The works should be the productions of living composers, published before the 1st March, 1872, and may be of a vocal or instrumental character—such as Oratorios, Cantatas, Sonatas, Overtures, Glees, Songs, Dance Music, &c.—Henry Y. D. Scott, Major-General, Secretary.—Kensington Gore, Jan. 25th, 1872.

The Musical and Literary Entertainments held in the Pimlico Rooms every Monday evening, under the energetic management of Mr. J. Baucutt, have been very attractive during the past month. On the 12th ult., the vocalists were Miss Woodward and Mr. Levisohn. Their songs were much applauded, and the Misses Hardy and Giles played several solos on the pianoforte very creditably; the accompaniments were performed by Mr. W. D Sumner.

On Thursday the 8th ult., the Peckham Choral Society, in connection with the Mutual Improvement Society, gave a concert at the Collyer Memorial Rooms, to a large audience. The programme was in two parts, sacred and secular. The choruses, considering the class was established only in October last, were well rendered. Amongst the soloists may be mentioned Miss Statham and Miss Williams, both of whom received encores. A pianoforte solo by Mr. A. F. C. Duffelle (organist of St. Mary's Church, and Professor of Music to the Royal Naval School), was exceedingly well played and re-demanded. Mr. F. W. Fry accompanied in his usual able manner, and Mr. Harland conducted with much care and judgment.

Mr. R. Sutton Swaby (organist of the Pro Cathedral, Kensington) gave a Recital on the new organ for Trinity Church, Trinidad, at the factory of the builder, August Gern, Boundary Road, Notting Hill, on the 16th ult. The programme was varied and well selected, and the instrument was greatly admired.

Mr. Henry Lahee delivered a lecture on the Life of Schubert, at the Literary Institution, Chelsea, on the 2nd ult. Vocal and instrumental illustrations from the composer's works were given by Miss Sophie Ferrari, Miss Nott, Mr. Trelawney Cobham and Mr. Wallworth, and also by Mr. Lahee and one of his pupils. The lecture and the illustrations were received with much favour by a numerous and appreciative audience.

We are requested to state that Mr. Hamilton Clarke has resigned his office of organist to the New Parish Church at Kensington, on being appointed to S. Peter's, Onslow Gardens, to succeed Mr. Arthur Sullivan, who retires.

By a Boston paper we learn that a concert was given by the members of the Dolby company at Bridgeport, on Monday, the 15th January, and the next morning they were presented with the following address:—"In the name and on behalf of the English residents in the city of Bridgeport, Conn., U.S.A., I esteem it a privilege to tender you our hearty congratulations upon the artistic success you have achieved during your short sojourn in this country, a success which has engendered in our breasts feelings of real pleasure and national pride. In a musical sense we have much to thank you for; in the inimitable rendering of those gems of melody, those much-prized glees and madrigals, you have done much to elevate and improve the musical taste of this community. May favourable breezes waft you in safety to your much-loved native land, and may the good ship 'plough the deep' without encountering any 'storm,' and when, amid the endearments of home, reminiscences of your travels loom up in your minds, rest assured your presence in Bridgeport was an oasis in our pilgrimage on earth. That you, one and all, may continue to 'climb the mountain' of fame, is the earnest desire of yours very sincerely, William Tomlin, Director of Bridgeport Choral Association.—To Messrs. Santley, Patey and Cummings, and Miss E. Wynne and Madame Patey." January, 1872.

Miss Arabella Warren gave a concert at Ladbroke Hall, Notting Hill, on the 12th ult., which was well attended. The principal features in the programme (besides the singing of the concert-giver) were Handel's "Ruddier than the cherry," given with much success by Mr. T. Ainsworth; Mr. Frank Elmore's "Woodman's Son," sung by the composer; and Arthur Sullivan's "Looking back," by Miss Sydney. Miss Arabella Warren took part in the "Magic wove scarf" (with Messrs. Elmore and Ainsworth); in Rossini's duet, "Giorno d'orrore" (with Madame Angus Weldon), and in Garrett's "Good night"; and also sang Ferrari's "Vieni, vieni," the "Angels' whisper," and Molloy's Irish ballad, "Thady O'Flinn," the two last songs being encored. Mr. Frewer was the pianist of the evening, and, besides accompanying the vocalists, played with much effect a selection from "Oberon," a Rondo by Chopin, and Weber's "Rondo Brillant." Miss Warren may be congratulated on the complete success of the excellent programme she had provided for her friends.

The Annual Musical Festival at Brighton (the third of its kind projected and carried out by Mr. Kuhe) has been thoroughly and deservedly successful. The playing of Madame Schumann created a marked effect, and at the conclusion of her performance she was unanimously recalled and overwhelmed with applause. Amongst the solo instrumentalists we must also mention Mr. Carrodus (violin), Mr. H. Chipp and Mr. E. Howell (violoncello), Mr. R. Taylor (organ), Mr. Lockwood (harp), and Mr. Kuhe and Herr Ganz (pianoforte). The orchestral works included Beethoven's Symphony in C minor, Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony, Mozart's Symphony in G minor, &c. A selection from the works of M. Gounod, conducted by the composer, was an interesting feature, and this included his spirited Saltarello (which was vociferously encored) and his Messe Solennelle, which was well given throughout, the choruses being sung by the Brighton Sacred Harmonic Society. One of the important attractions of the Festival was Sir Julius Benedict's Oratorio, "St. Peter," the principal parts in which were admirably sustained by Madame Cora de Wilhorst, Miss Alice Fairman, Mr. Vernon Rigby and Herr Stockhausen. Madame de Wilhorst elicited an enthusiastic encore for her rendering of the air, "The Lord hath His way in the whirlwind," and Miss Alice Fairman received a similar compliment for her intelligent reading of the beautiful air, "O thou afflicted." The choruses were given with much energy and precision, and the work (which was conducted by Sir Julius Benedict) was evidently thoroughly appreciated. In addition to the vocalists already named, Mrs. Weldon, Miss Julia Elton, Miss Blanche Cole, Madlle. Angele, Madame Rudersdorff, Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Madlle. Natalie Carola, Messrs. Nelson Varley, G. Perren, Lewis Thomas, &c., have contributed their valuable services during the festival, all of whom have been warmly received. It would be impossible to give a list of all the works performed, but we may mention Gounod's "Lamentations of Jeremiah" ("Gallia"); Mendelssohn's "Lobgesang," Rossini's "Stabat Mater," and Mozart's Twelfth Mass, as amongst the most important. Messrs. Kingsbury and Taylor have rendered efficient aid both with the baton and at the organ.

Madame Schumann gave the first of two pianoforte recitals on the 22nd ult., at St. James's Hall, before a numerous and thoroughly appreciative audience. The programme opened with Schubert's excellent Sonata in A minor, every movement of which she played not only with finished executive power but with the truest conception of the composer's intention. In Beethoven's variations in C minor (Op. 35) she thoroughly enlisted the sympathies of her hearers, and received the warmest applause at the conclusion of her performance. Amongst the smaller compositions included in the selection, Brahms's arrangement of Gluck's "Gavotte" created quite a sensation, and was most enthusiastically redemanded. The delicacy of feeling Madame Schumann threw into this charming little piece delighted every listener; and we can scarcely doubt that the effect will be to make amateur pianists strive their utmost to re-produce so graceful a realisation of a graceful work. The selection of the "Kreisleriana" was also received with unqualified pleasure. The vocalist was Madlle. Anna Regan, who gave a most intellectual rendering of some of Schumann's songs, two of which were unanimously encored. Sir Julius Benedict accompaniedwith his usual care and judgment.

The decease of Mr. H. F. Chorley, which occurred on Friday, the 16th ult., removes from us a musical critic who, whatever might be thought of his opinions, at least wrote with an honest conviction of the truth of the principles he advocated, and endeavoured to uphold the dignity and independence of an office which, for thirty-five years, he worthily filled. The "Athenæum" certainly, under his musical guidance, obtained a character for consistent criticism of which it had a right to be proud; and his name will not be easily forgotten, even by those who differed from him in his earnestly expressed strictures upon art and artists. Mr. Chorley wrote the libretti of "St. Cecilia" and the "May Queen," the former for Sir Julius Benedict and the latter for Sir Sterndale Bennett; and he also selected the texts for Sir Julius Benedict's Oratorio "St. Peter," and furnished many other composers with words for music. Amongst his works on the art may be mentioned "Modern German Music," "Music and Manners in France and Germany," "Thirty years of Musical Recollections," &c., all of which have obtained a wide and deserved popularity.

The date of the Worcester Musical Festival is fixed for the 10th September and three following days, and amongst the works to be performed Bach's Passion Music (S. Matthew) will be included. The increasing popularity of this sublime composition is a hopeful sign of the progress of musical culture in this country.

We are authorized to state that, on Tuesday in Holy-week (March 26th), a special service will be held in Westminster Abbey, in which Bach's Passion (S. Matthew) will be included. The music will be sung by 250 choristers, and accompanied by a full orchestra, with organ. A sermon will be preached by the Dean.

The "Johannes-Passion," of Bach, will, we understand, be heard for the first time in this country, on Friday, March 22nd, at a morning concert, to be given at the Hanover Square Rooms, for the purpose of raising a fund for the restoration of the Church of St. Anne, Soho. The principal artists will be Madame Cora de Wilhorst, Madame Bentham-Fernandez and Herr Stockhausen. The important tenor music will be undertaken by Mr. Arthur Wade, whose vocal qualifications are well known to musical amateurs. The work will be produced under the direction of Mr. Joseph Barnby.

At the Beethoven Rooms, on Wednesday, the 14th ult., a complimentary concert was given to Mr. John Gill, at which the following distinguished artists gave their valuable aid:—Mdme. Florence Lancia, Mr. Trelawney Cobham, Signor Ciabatta, Mr. Wadmore, Mr. Henry Guy, and Herr Ganz. The late choir-boys of St. James's, Westmorland Street, also assisted. Between the parts of the concert a presentation of a very beautiful and massive silver tea service was made to Mr. Gill by Captain and Mrs. Coster, on the part of the congregation of that church. The teapot bore the following inscription:—"Presented to John Birch Gill, Esq., by members of the congregation of St. James's, Westmorland Street, on his retirement from the choir, as a mark of their esteem and regard." Mr. Gill returned thanks in an appropriate speech.

Miss Cooper, organist of Christ Church, Hampstead, has had a handsome and valuable gold chain and locket, with monogram engraved thereon, presented to her by the Vicar, Rev. E. H. Bickersteth, and members of the congregation, in token of their appreciation of her musical abilities. Miss Cooper is the eldest daughter of the well-known organist, Mr. J. T. Cooper.

We make the following interesting extract from Walcott's "Traditions and Customs of Cathedrals":—"The Committee appointed by the House of Lords (1643) acquaint us, in one of their captious exceptions with the first notice of what are technically called Services, alleging it to be an innovation in discipline, the 'singing the Te Deum in prose after a Cathedral church way in divers parochial churches, where the people have no skill in such music;' whilst they recommend that the 'musick used in God's holy service in Cathedral and collegiate churches be framed with less curiosity, that it may be more edifying and more intelligible, and that no hymns or anthems be used where ditties are framed by private persons, but such as are contained in the sacred canonical Scriptures, or in our Liturgy of prayers, or have publick allowance.' In the Synod of Westminster, 1562-3, the motion to remove 'strains of skill, musical performances, and playing on organs' out of Cathedrals was lost in the Lower house of Convocation by one vote only. Owing to the want of 'able ministers' in the reign of Elizabeth, it was, in 1584, seriously proposed to Parliament, 'that every dean and chapter of every Cathedral and collegiate church that did pay yearly wages to singing men and choristers and musicians in their churches, should pay the same in yearly pensions to such pastors as were resident on their benefices which should be found to want sufficient sustentation of living.' Yet in 1559 the royal Injunctions commanded that 'no alteration be made of such assignments of living as heretofore hath been appointed to the use of singing or music in the church, but that the same do remain.' Fuller says it was reported of the Puritan Bishop of Carlisle, Dr. Barnabas Potter, that 'organs would blow him out of the church.' There appears to have been great laxity in the choirmen who, at Canterbury absented themselves 'every third week,' and at Chichester were required to 'carry themselves in a respectful manner to the residentiaries,' who were reminded to maintain 'the meetings and hospitable invitations kept quarterly for the choir,' or give in lieu 'money by way of perdition' and as a 'benevolence.' The organ was silenced where it had not been destroyed during the Usurpation; and it is curious to read this entry in the diary of a man of middle age, November 4, 1660: 'To the Abbey, where the first time that ever I heard the organs in a Cathedral.'"

A Special service appropriate to the season will be held at the church of St. John the Evangelist, Waterloo Road, on Easter Wednesday, when the second and third parts of the "Messiah" will be performed by a band and chorus of more than 200. The principal singers will be Miss Harmon, Miss Forsey Brion, Miss Barnett, Mr. Wallace Wells and Mr. Walter Reeves; Mr. Walter Fitton will officiate at the organ, and the whole will be under the direction of the organist of the church, Mr. R. Forsey Brion. The service will be open to the public, and no tickets will be required for admission.

Mr. Willem Coenen announces "Three Chamber Concerts of Modern Music," at the Hanover Square Rooms, the programmes of which are, we perceive, limited to the works of German composers. Whether a more extended repertory would not be desirable is, we think, a question worth debating; but the experience of past seasons convinces us that the present series will be well worthy the attention of the lovers of chamber music. The instrumentalists are Messrs. Wiener and Amor (violin), Messrs. Zerbini and Hann (viola), Messrs. Daubert and Vieuxtemps (violoncello), and Messrs. Carl Reinecke and Willem Coenen (pianoforte); and the vocalists Miss Sophie Ferrari and M. Fontanier; conductor, Mr. J. B. Zerbini.

On the 21st ult., the Concordia Choral Society gave the sixth evening concert, at the Concert Hall, Store Street, under the able direction of Mr. J. C. Merrick, the conductor. The soloists were Miss Annie Edmonds (who was suffering from a severe cold, and consequently did not sustain the whole of the part assigned her), Miss Banks (vice Miss Edmonds), Miss Annie M. Lennox, Mr. Albert James, and Mr. G. J. Lachner. Miss R. E. Merrick and Miss Stevenson presided at the pianoforte, Mr. A. Merrick at the harmonium, Mr. S. R. Webb was solo violinist, and the chorus numbered about 100 voices. The first part consisted of selections from the works of Handel, Mendelssohn, and Gounod; and the second of part-songs, solos, &c., all of which were warmly received, several being encored. A duet, "Guillaume Tell," was exceedingly well rendered by Mr. S. R. Webb (violin) and Mr. J. C. Merrick (pianoforte). The concert commenced with "God bless the Prince of Wales," and concluded with Horsley's "National Thanksgiving Hymn" for the recovery of H. R. H. the Prince of Wales, the audience standing during the performance of both pieces.

Tannhäuser, and the Tournament of Song at Wartburg. Romantic Opera, in Three Acts. Composed by Richard Wagner. Edited and translated into English by Natalia Macfarren.

At length the public of this country is likely to become acquainted with the operatic works of a composer who, considering how little is here known of him, has certainly caused an amount of controversy almost unexampled in the history of art. The "music of the future" has been a convenient phrase by which to designate the compositions of a man who, refusing to be bound by the tacit laws which have regulated the productions of the creative artists who have preceded him, has devoted his life to the practical working of a theory in operatic art, the truth of which the result alone can prove. That this result has fully demonstrated, at least in the land of his birth, the falsity of the idea that his compositions, if worth anything, can only be appreciated by future generations, is now beyond a doubt, for his popularity at the present moment is such that not only are his operas played at all the principal lyrical establishments, but a theatre is about to be specially constructed in which his novel artistic theories shall be fairly and fully carried out. Whatever, therefore, may be thought of the peculiar tenets enunciated in his literary works, and gradually developed in his operas, Herr Wagner is a man whose power can no longer be ignored; and slow as the English people are to admit any notions which run counter to those in which they have been cradled, we are beginning already to feel our way in the "music of the future," and to recieve in infinitessimal doses the most palatable and presentable specimens of a style of art which, if we may credit reports, is rapidly revolutionising musical Germany. That the mind of a man, however, cannot be judged by the presentation of scraps from his works is too manifest a truth to be disputed; and here, then, as a sign of the times—or rather, perhaps, in anticipation of the times—is the entire opera of "Tannhäuser," not in an expensive form only accessible to the luxurious few, but in the cheap octavo edition which has already popularised the many immortal creations of the lyrical composers which, until recently, were comparatively unknown, save by the few favourite extracts constantly reproduced by public and private vocalists. No "skimming over" the music of "Tannhäuser" will give the slightest idea of the grandeur and completeness of the opera. It appeals to the student as a whole work, and as a whole work only can it be truly judged. It cannot be cut into fragments for the concert-room, for the parts are so linked together that they do not bear criticism when disunited; even the March, with which English audiences are now tolerably familiar, fine as it unquestionably is alone, has a wonderfully increased effect in the opera, where, opening the scene called the "Tournament of Song," it accompanies the procession of Guests, Pages, Knights, Nobles and Ladies, until, the stage being filled, it bursts into a grand chorus, the second subject being used for a choir of ladies, and the climax being wrought up with brilliant dramatic power. It would be impossible here to enter into a detailed analysis of this remarkable work—and indeed so thoroughly is the music written to the varied action of the drama, that it is only upon the stage that we have a right to criticise it—but we cannot help pointing to the scene between Venus and Tannhäuser, at the opening of the opera, into which the charming chorus of Sirens is so beautifully interwoven; the scene in which Tannhäuser first beholds Elisabeth after his release from the "Hill of Venus," the whole of the "Tournament of Song," and the concluding portion of the last act, especially where the funeral train of Elisabeth is first seen, as instances of that faculty of colouring by sound which, according to Herr Wagner, it should be the mission of the highest composers to cultivate. In the "Editor's note," at the beginning of the work, a list is given of the instruments required in the orchestra, and also of those on the stage; and we are glad to find that the English names of these, where English names exist, have invariably been used for the indications of the scoring. The edition has been collated with the full score, from which all directions, metronome marks, &c., have been inserted; and we need scarcely say that in every respect the translation from the original German is excellent. That this representative work of a composer, respecting whose place in the world of art such a division of opinion exists, will be most extensively circulated cannot admit of a doubt; and now that a publisher has been found with sufficient spirit to print the opera in this country, we may indulge a hope that a manager may be found with sufficient spirit to produce it.

Original Compositions for the Organ. By J. Baptiste Calkin.

This is the sixth book of a series that claims general attention. Its contents are a Festal March and a piece entitled "Hommage à Mendelssohn," which latter the author describes as a "Three-part Song without Words." The main merit of both pieces is their admirable fitness for the instrument to which they are appropriated; with moderate difficulty to the player, some of the best effects of the organ are herein to be produced; there is rich fulness in the distribution of the manual parts, and the problem of writing for the pedals is solved with the expertness of one who is thoroughly familiar with the materials at his command. Another matter for praise is the marked character and the tunefulness of each piece; and they may be confidently recommended to young players, and to those who wish to make a pleasant impression on a not very profound audience. The March is most spirited, the prominent bass passage, that introduces the key of F in a third strain, has an excellently fresh effect; the trio, in A minor, contrasts well with the principal matter. After the recommencement of the March, in its primal key of C, there is a digression to E flat, in substitution for a change to a more nearly related key which stands in the original March, that makes a good surprise, and the Da Capo is prolonged by a brilliant coda. The "Song without Words" fulfils the author's definition, by being a continuous melody harmonised in three parts within the compass of as many female voices, which is assigned to the oboe stop on the swell; while an accompaniment of quicker notes in arpeggio for another manual, with the detached notes for the pedals, lightens and relieves the sustained notes of this cantilena.

A rule of rhythm, little understood by some musicians and totally ignored by others, prompts a remark on the compositions under notice, which must be taken as it is meant—namely, in no captious spirit, but in the hope to elucidate, it may be, a matter that is of more importance than many writers suppose. A rythmical period should close on the first note of a bar, unless the penultimate harmony be superseded, when the final note is delayed till the second of the bar. There are a very few exceptions from this otherwise universal law, and they, rightly regarded, all tend to confirm, nay, to illustrate, the principle involved. The works of ancient and modern German, Italian, French, and English writers furnish abundant exemplification of what is here enunciated; there also are many instances, it must be admitted, of the disregard of the rule by the best writers; still, the shortcomings of a saint are no warrant for the peccadilloes of one who has not the screen of boundless charity for his sins, and a great man's error justifies not the wilful wandering of a writer who has less claim to critical deference. Now, as the close of a phrase is required by rule to fall on the beginning of a bar, the opening of the same phrase must be so placed as to accommodate the requirement, and this seems to compel that the division of the bars throughout the phrase be counted backwards from the final note, when the fragment of a bar which remains after such division must initiate the melody. According to this, both of Mr. Calkin's pieces should open on the third crotchet of a bar, in order that their principal closes might fall upon the first. Then, in the March, the first three phrases would close on the first instead of the third crotchet of the bar, the fourth phrase would need a prefix of two bars, and the entire of the second strain would have its cadences in agreement with natural accent; and in the other piece the first eight phrases would terminate on the first of a bar, and the expansion of a rhythm, which brings the strain to its lawful close on the strong accent, might be rendered more definite, and, therefore, satisfactory. The author seems to have had an indistinct notion that the final note should be the first of a bar, for thus he closes each piece; but the rule applies throughout a composition, and not merely to the concluding cadence, and the extension of some period by half a bar, in order to bring about the nominally correct termination, is the worst evil of an unclear perception of the law, since one cannot hear bar lines, nor tell, by listening, where they are drawn, but one may be fully aware of a half-bar too much or too little in a phrase. The subject needs a far longer disquisition to make it thoroughly intelligible than is here offered, and which goes as far as would here be seemly. It is one of sufficient importance, however, to deserve the attention of critics and composers, and if it has not been often advanced, there is the more reason for touching on it, though lightly, at present.

Gloria in Excelsis. Three Settings for Male Voices. By E. T. Chipp.

These pieces we may suppose to have been written during the deanship of Dr. Harvey Goodwin, at Ely, and will take the liberty to assume that the particular form in which they are cast may have been suggested to his intelligent and skilful organist by that accomplished divine. The ground for such supposition is the dedication of the series to this functionary in his present capacity of Bishop of Carlisle. The assumption implies no want of merit in the composer, who, if he had given technical embodiment to the conceptions of another man, has therein well proved his musicianship, and, no less, the pliability of his invention; while the idea he has rendered is that of one who is known to feel strongly the power of music in church service, and has written to excellent purpose on some points connected with its use. The treatment of the Communion Service is a task of extreme difficulty to the musician. Among the reasons for this are the imperative necessity for rendering it solemn to the utmost; the discrepancy, in some places, between the extreme joyousness of the words, which seems to prompt the loudest and grandest utterance of the song of glory, and the reverential spirit of the auditory, which demands the meekest, stillest, devoutest expression in whatever would enlist its sympathy; again, the objection entertained by many thoughtful persons to the participation in the office of anyone who has not received confirmation, which excludes boys' voices from the score; and, further, the ever present restriction to brevity, which, if not an obstacle, is a severe hindrance to the development of musical form in church composition. Dr. Chipp wears these fetters rather as ornaments than trammels, for they have guided him to the production of music that is pertinent to its situation and novel in its effect. Many passages are set for all the voices in unison, accompanied by the harmony of the organ; others are set in vocal harmony, which is sometimes, effectively, without any accompaniment; and others, again, are set in chanting form, with many syllables to an undivided note, to separate which, for declamation, rests with the singers or choir-master. Here are the elements of broad variety in the effect, and the three settings are well enough distinguished from each other. The first is in A flat; it aims little at melodious charm, depending more upon the impressiveness of its harmony; this, as in the other two compositions, is entirely modern in character, having none of the affectation of remote ages that disfigures some recent church music with antiquated chords and progressions, which are inopportune in association with peculiarities of the present time; but it has few of such chromatic discords as impart a secular air to church music, and are employed too freely, perhaps, by latest musicians. No. 2 is in D; this is the setting which has our preference, and it would not be difficult to give reasons for the predilection, but somewhat tiresome to readers who have not the music side by side with the remarks. No. 3 is in E; the supposition that has been ventured as to the date of the production screens this piece from the charge of having fallen on the track of another setting of the same hymn, wherein the rendering of one long passage is identical with that now before us. It is the entire course of deprecations, beginning with the words, "O Lord, the only begotten," and closing with the last time of "Have mercy upon us," which is set, sentence by sentence, to a monotone, each a semitone higher than the preceding, while the change of key upon each is rendered clear and emphatic by the harmony of the organ. A like very striking climax, set to the same portion of the text, is to be found in a Gloria by Mr. R. Forsey Brion, which came within our reach some time before Dr. Chipp's work, but was probably written since the dean became a bishop. The series is commended to any establishment in which the Communion office is celebrated with chorus.

Gavotte, by C. W. Gluck; arranged for the pianoforte, and dedicated to Madame Clara Schumann, by Johannes Brahms.

This Gavotte, which Madame Schumann has latterly made so popular by her exquisite playing, is likely to command an extensive sale; for, apart from its attractive character, it is by no means so difficult as it sounds, and indeed as it looks upon paper. The three lines which occasionally appear are only used for the sake of showing the parts more clearly; and amateur pianists will be glad to find that if they are not frightened by a few extensions, the piece is perfectly within their reach. The Gavotte occurs in Gluck's opera "Iphigenia in Aulis," and this very excellent arrangement by Brahms is the one always played by Madame Schumann.

Ave Maria for solo and chorus, by Frederic N. Löhr. Op. 17.

This is not—as are many vocal pieces that bear the same title—a composition to a secular poem, which, more or less sentimentally, more or less metaphorically, refers to the well known adjuration of the Roman Church, or to persons in the act of offering up the same; but it is a setting of the veritable Hymn to the Virgin, obviously designed for devotional use. True, the title-page states it to have been written for a vocal association which is conducted by the author; but we incline to look beyond the statement, and still suppose that the church was in the heart of the writer, and that his ambition will be satisfied only if his music be adopted in the service of some ecclesiastical establishment. It is unpretentious in respect of elaboration, but is for the most part melodious, and, consequently, pleasing in effect. We are sorry for some instances of careless writing, such as the two fifths, $\frac{A}{D}\ \frac{D}{G}$, between the soprano voice and the bass, in the 10th bar of page 6, and the worse 8ths, C D, between the same parts in the next bar. The composer's principles differ from our own, or he would never write the diminished triad of the leading note freely as a concord with this sensitive or leading note doubled in the extreme parts, as he does at the top of page 8; but these are days of novelty and daring, and we must condemn no man's principles. The hymn opens with an Andante wherein some phrases for mezzo-soprano solo are intermixed with some for the chorus. This movement recurs after another in a different key and measure, in which a solo bass has a prominent share, beginning at the words "Sancta Maria;" and the whole closes with a brief amplification of the Andante. The hymn is orchestrated with evident knowledge of the capabilities of the instruments to which it is assigned, for we will consider the low D for the double basses—a tone below the most desirable 4th string of German use—as an oversight, or as being written to be played an eighth higher; best composers have sometimes trusted in like manner to the discretion of double-bass players. The instrumentation is generally clear, and the voices will have a charming effect where they are sometimes left without accompaniment.

Maud. Romance for the Pianoforte.

Illusions. ("Where the Golden Corn is Bending"). Song. Words by Adelaide Anne Procter.

Composed by Frederic N. Löhr.

Mr. Löhr's Romance has but little pretension, and perhaps on that account may prove more acceptable to those unambitious pianists who desire to please rather than to astonish their listeners. A simple but extremely melodious theme, illustrative of Tennyson's words, beginning "She is singing in the meadow," is gracefully treated, the second part, in the subdominant, being played with the right hand, the left crossing it for the accompaniment. There is nothing novel in the piece, and no variety is attempted on the recurrence of the subject, but the melody is, perhaps, sufficiently interesting to re-appear without adornment. The song very fairly illustrates Miss Procter's words, and the accompaniment, running almost throughout with the voice, is written with commendable care. The effect of the short recitative before the final allegro is to us somewhat patchy, but every phrase in the song is vocal, and this is no small recommendation to singers who do not wish for pianoforte pieces with a voice accompaniment.

Lesbia on her Sparrow. Song. The Words by William Cartwright. The Music composed by Robert C. Edwards.

The words of this song would scarcely inspire any musical feeling with the most accomplished vocal writer, and we can hardly wonder, therefore, that Mr. Edwards, who is new to us, should have failed to produce any very satisfactory result with the materials entrusted to him. Apart from the want of a defined melody, however, there is an absolute crudeness about the harmonies, which is the more apparent from the obvious attempt which is made to imitate the style of the old song writers.

Esmeralda. Morceau caractéristique, pour Piano. Par Wilhelm Schulthes.

An animated little composition, which demands much command of the instrument from pianists who desire to execute it with the effect intended by the composer. The subjects are extremely elegant, and the passages lie well under a practised hand. There is much freshness in the change to the tonic major for the conclusion of the piece.

Hommage à Mendelssohn. Three-part Song, without Words; for two performers on the Pianoforte. By J. Baptiste Calkin.

This graceful trifle requires not any association with the name of Mendelssohn to recommend it to the notice of pianists who have acquired the difficult art of giving unaffected expression to a pure and elegant melody. It is strictly, as the title denotes, a three-part song, the secondo accompanying throughout in arpeggios. We have rarely met with a piece which more thoroughly proves our oft-repeated assertion that the small works of an accomplished musician are infinitely superior to the large works of a pretender. Harmonium players will be glad to learn that this duet is also published arranged for that instrument in conjunction with the pianoforte.

Cramer, Wood and Co.

The Land of the Setting Sun. Duettino, for Mezzo-Soprano and Tenor. Words by Frederick Enoch; Music by Henry Smart.

The title-page of this Duettino will sufficiently explain its character; and the name of its composer will be an ample guarantee of its intrinsic worth. The melody, in $\frac{6}{8}$ rhythm, flows throughout with the utmost grace and elegance, and the accompaniments are, as might be expected, those which only an accomplished musician could supply. The solos are pretty equally divided between the two singers; and where the voices unite, each part is, as it should be, a melody in itself.

The Young Mountaineer. Song. Written by J. Denis Coyne. Composed by Alberto Randegger.

Bass singers have so few good songs especially written for them in the present day that we are glad to be able to direct their attention to this excellent composition. A bold symphony, commencing with an effective pedal bass, leads to a highly characteristic subject, the pianoforte, with but few exceptions, moving with the voice throughout. The feeling of the words is well expressed; and an unexpected enharmonic change, on the words "Perfum'd by odours," gives much piquancy to the melody. There are no unnecessary difficulties, either in the voice part or the accompaniment, to prevent this song achieving the popularity it deserves.

This Rose. Song. Poetry by Lord Byron.
Perdita's Song.
Are other Eyes. Poetry by L. E. L.
Composed by Charles Salaman.

When we say that Mr. Salaman's vocal compositions appeal exclusively to cultivated artists—be they professional or amateur—we presume that we are paying him the highest compliment he can desire, for assuredly he knows more of the state of the musical market in this country than to imagine that the multitude of young ladies who worship Claribel will go into raptures over such refined and legitimate music as we find in the three songs before us. With the exception of Mr. Salaman's charming setting of Shelley's serenade, "I arise from dreams of thee" (which first drew our attention to his compositions) we are inclined to think that No. 1 of the group of vocal pieces forwarded to us for review—"This Rose," the poetry from Byron's "Bride of Abydos,"—is the best song he has yet written. Opening in E major with delicate staccato chords, ending on the dominant of C sharp minor, the voice commences with much effect in the original key, the symphony being now carried on as an accompaniment. To the words, "What! not receive my foolish flow'r!" we have an unexpected and most appropriate change from the major to the minor chord of B; and a beautiful and smooth chain of modulation—through F sharp minor, E minor, and G minor—conducts us eventually to a close in B major; the passionate phrase, in E minor, "Oh, Selim dear," afterwards bursting forth with much dramatic feeling. An effective point, too, is a return to the original placid melody, with the staccato quaver accompaniment, which is continued to the conclusion of the song. We need scarcely say that for the due expression of this poetical little vocal piece the pianist and singer must be thoroughly in sympathy. "Perdita's Song" has a melodious and appropriate theme in G minor, with a quiet and unobtrusive accompaniment throughout. The change to the tonic major is exceedingly happy, and gives additional effect to the recurrence of the minor for the expression of the final phrase. The varied shades of feeling are well reflected in the poetry of L. E. L., and we can conscientiously recommend the song "Are other eyes" to vocalists who can give the requisite meaning to the words. Here again good use is made of the alteration from major to minor; and there is sufficient point in the pianoforte part to keep the attention alive to the end. These three songs are an excellent addition to our stock of sterling modern vocal music.

Mandel's System of Music. Part 5.

The perusal of the fifth and concluding Part of this elaborate work gives us an opportunity of again bearing testimony to the zeal and earnestness of the author; and if, in reviewing the earlier portions of the book, we have felt it our duty to comment upon what appeared to us a want of arrangement in the materials, it is only because the materials are so good that we should wish them to be placed before the public in the best possible manner. The fifth Part treats of "Composition," and, as the "System," is intended chiefly for the use of military band-masters, this section is principally confined to an explanation of "the theory and practice of inventing a melody, together with its accompaniment, or in other words, to the composition of simple music." The rules for the construction of the various kinds of dances and marches are very clearly laid down, and several excellent examples of sections and periods are given, the whole subject, indeed, being handled with that skill which can only be acquired by many years of practical experience. The dedication of the book to His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge is extremely appropriate; and in the copy of the letter addressed to the Duke the author explains that the work is especially intended for the use of the students at Kneller Hall; but the title, "Mandel's System of Music," does not indicate this in the slightest degree; and as the fifth Part is said to treat of "composition," most persons would imagine that the System is designed for instruction in the higher branches of the art.

The Village Blacksmith. Weiss's Song, for the Piano.
Rigoletto. Quatuor, de l'Opéra de Verdi, pour Piano. By Wilhelm Kuhe.

Without stopping to enquire why one of these arrangements is "for" and the other "pour" piano, we may say that both do much credit to the skill of Herr Kuhe, who certainly has the art of adapting melodies and writing graceful music for the instrument which he professes. The "Village Blacksmith" makes a tolerably good pianoforte piece, and the popularity of the theme is certain to render it acceptable to an audience. The melodious Quatuor in "Rigoletto" is very elegantly treated. Pianists of even moderate acquirements may produce much effect with this composition, for the subjects, although pleasingly embellished, are never obscured by passages merely written for show.

Prière à la Madonne. Mélodie Sérieuse.
Floü-floü. Mazurka de Salon.
Perles et Diamants. Valse Brillante.
Glöckchen. Mazurka.
Pearls of Dew.
Le Papillon. Mazurka de Concert.
Composed by Gustav Lange (of Berlin).

Whatever copyright may exist in the materials of which modern "drawing-room music" is composed, it is certain that there can be no property in the titles, for "Perles et Diamants" and "Le Papillon," by other composers, are already to be found in the portfolios of innumerable young ladies "home for the holidays," to say nothing of many of the other names which Herr Gustav Lange has selected for his pieces. No. 1 on our list has a graceful but not very striking theme, the "Poco piu mosso," in the relative minor, being chiefly remarkable for an accompaniment in semiquavers on the holding notes of the melody, a device which is again resorted to, with no very great success, on the return to the first subject. No. 2 is an effective Mazurka, making no excessive demand upon the powers of a pianist, and No. 3 is a brilliant and well-written waltz, the theme being sufficiently elegant and melodious to make even the most enthusiastic dancers pause and listen. No. 4 is the most pleasing of all the dance pieces; the melody is extremely catching, and there is sufficient of the "Glöckchen" character to justify the title of the Mazurka. No. 5 (supposing that Pearls of Dew can be represented by sound) may be pronounced a success. A sparkling little subject, tripping along in demisemiquavers, is followed by a bold melody in the subdominant. After some brilliant triplet passages, the first theme re-appears with alterations, and an effective coda concludes the piece. No. 6 has scarcely as much originality as the Mazurkas already noticed, but it may be made attractive by a player who can command sufficient variety of touch and rhythmical feeling. Without laying claim to any higher object than successfully hitting the taste of the hour, these six pieces, by a composer who is new to us, sufficiently evidence the possession of a refined musical mind and a power of expressing graceful thoughts without affectation. We may perhaps at some future time welcome Herr Gustav Lange (who dates from the land of high and noble thought) in some works of more artistic importance.

William Morley.

The Dear Old Home. Ballad. Written by George Hodder.
Dew, when Night has passed away. Song. Poetry by W. P. Ross.
Composed by G. A. Macfarren.

The first of these compositions is as pure a specimen of an English ballad as can be desired by any vocalist. The melody is simple, and the accompaniments in thorough keeping with the feeling of the words, which, without laying any claim to high poetry, are exceedingly well adapted for music. The second is a charmingly plaintive little song in G minor, the delicate and sympathetic accompaniment to which will demand the touch of an artist to give it due expression. It is most carefully harmonised throughout; and amongst the many points of interest, we may mention the use of the minor second of the scale, which, especially in the sixth bar of the melody, gives much pathos to the phrase. We can conscientiously recommend both these songs to vocalists in search of novelty.

Original Correspondence.

ORGANISTS' SALARIES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—Your correspondent could scarcely have read with any great care the whole of my letter on the above subject. I distinctly said that I quite agree with you in your expression of regret and surprise that, in some cases, excellent musicians should be required to render so much service at so small a payment. But as "An Observer" had written an appeal to the Clergy on the subject, complaining that those who hold the position of organist should be obliged to make up their time by "teaching the pianoforte, or writing brilliant fantasias on popular airs," and that they were required to attend "three Services on Sunday, and in some cases"—not in all therefore—"daily Service, at eighty pounds a year," I really thought there was another side to the question. My reply was, in brief: 1. That when an organist is paid at the same rate for church duty as for secular work, he has no ground of complaint. 2. That my observation leads me to believe that the majority of organists do receive such a salary. 3. That, in very many instances, organists do not discharge their duties in such a manner as to induce their clergy to interest themselves in procuring for them higher stipends.

"A sometime Country Organist" endeavours to disprove my general statement that the majority of organists are paid at the same rate for church duty as for secular work by showing that he himself did not at one time receive such payment. On this point, therefore, I shall be obliged to remind him that he, being only one in number, does not constitute a majority. He disputes, however, the principle of payment I laid down, and seems to think that an organist should be paid at a similar rate to that which he would charge for a concert performance. Does he mean to assert that the pieces an organist plays in service cost him anything like the practice, study, and excitement that a concert performance would? May it not be said with too much truth, that, whereas, if a professor is to appear on the concert platform he will devote hours upon hours to the piece he is to perform; many of them will often enter upon their Sunday duties with little more than a passing thought as to what they are to play, and will go on from Sunday to Sunday with hardly any organ practice. Of course there are laudable exceptions; but I am sure that I have heard organists play voluntaries, anthems, and even hymn tunes in so slovenly, bungling, and meaningless a style, that had any honest criticism, such as would have followed a secular performance, been inserted in the papers, it must have gone far to ruin the professional prospects of the performer. At the same time I do not say that an organist need to practice so much for his Sunday duties as he would for a secular performance. There is a certain amount of routine in the work; moreover, a brilliant display of execution is not at all required: indeed it may be an objection in the Service of the Church. If a man has once mastered the difficulties of organ playing and has acquired a true organ spirit (by which I mean something very different from that thin, frivolous style one often hears), a very little special practice will enable him to discharge his duties in a manner worthy of the instrument and the occasion. But with respect to many organists, the fact is they have never been properly trained, have never, or only for a very brief period, been under competent organ instruction, have never gone through that process of organ practice which is essential to a mastery of the instrument. Consequently they may be heard pulling out and putting in their stops in just the wrong order and at just the wrong place; arranging their organs in a topsy-turvey manner, and playing on the king of instruments as if it were some light, frolicsome piece of goods—a clarionet, flute, violin, or piano,—to the confusion of all sober thought and reverence.

As to the question of position, I do think that most organists find it more than a little advantageous, and I shall require different proof from any which has as yet been brought forward before I withdraw my assertion; for there is much evidence that, as a rule, those professors of music who hold the position of organist are most successful, cæteris paribus, in obtaining a position in the profession. As to the test which your correspondent gives as a sample of what is usually required, I can only be guided by my own experience, and I beg to express my firm and deliberate opinion that a large proportion of organists would have failed to pass creditably even such a moderate standard. Did your space admit of it, I could give you a particular account of my experiences in this way; and could furnish you with instances of the lamest and vilest harmonic progressions, the silliest freaks of playing that it is possible to conceive, and could give you the names of the churches where I had from time to time to endure them. But even where these gross violations of musical rule do not take place—"deeds to make heaven weep"—one is often saddened by finding other faults almost as bad. Sometimes an able organist shows but too little regard for the sacredness of his work. His voluntaries are unsuitable if not secular, and his extemporaneous pieces are often conceived in an irreverent spirit; and these are faults which the most ordinary players may avoid, which exact no extra practice to shun, and for which not even the cleverest execution can make amends. What is wanted, I say, is not a clever performance, but a religious one; and this, I am persuaded, would be looked for in vain in very many cases.

"A sometime Country Organist" concludes with some fine specimens of the tu quoque style of argument, which I shall not waste your space by discussing, if only you will permit me to say, that if he is in the habit of defending himself in that manner, I should not be astonished to hear that his vicar thought him a "horrid man."

With a "Fellow of the College of Organists" I am in greater sympathy. But as I have laid down the principle upon which, I think, as a rule, organists' salaries might be reckoned, I think it is too bad of him to ask me to work his sum for him. If he will reckon the number of hours per week he is employed—call them so many one-hour pupils at a guinea a quarter—I think he will find it come to about £45 a year; and as I have no doubt he is a good organist, I should think he quite deserves it. But both your correspondents think that my complaint of the prevailing style of organ playing is but a reiteration of their complaint. Well, Sir, I have the impression that when any one wants his wages raised he feels it to be incumbent upon him first of all to discharge his duties in the best possible manner; and that if a clerk were to ask for an advance in his salary when his books were in disorder his master would tell him that he must first give greater proof of his worth. I am glad to see that "A Fellow of the College of Organists" gives his brother professionals a hint which, if they will take it, will go a great way towards remedying not only the evil of low stipends, but also that of incompetent organists. For my part I should like to see our Cathedrals taking their proper place as centres of knowledge in church music. Could it not be made the duty of the precentor, or organist of every Cathedral to give periodical lectures on church music in the larger towns of the diocese, to which the organist, choirmaster, &c., of the district should be invited? Let there be examinations in the Cathedral city with reasonable fees, and in different—say, three—grades of proficiency. Then let there be an Organists' List—as there are now Clergy Lists—in which it shall appear what examinations an organist has passed, so that an organist's merits may be more quickly and evidently seen than is at present the case. The position of organist is becoming a more and more responsible one as the church's work goes on, and I for one should be as earnest in assisting competent men as I am in censuring the incompetent.

I remain, your constant reader,

Clericus.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—Would Mr. Archer favour your readers by working out the proposition, incidentally stated in his letter, respecting the origin of the "Antiphon," and its identity with the "musical accents" of the Spanish and German Jews? Many believe that—not only the antiphonal method, but—some of the very melodies now used by the Church have been handed down from the Temple; but I suppose that positive proof of this is hardly attainable. If, however, there is really the identity suggested by your correspondent, it is at least an interesting and suggestive fact, both ritually and musically. These "musical accents," thus sung before and after each verse of a psalm, are new to me; and I should be particularly obliged by either further information on the subject, or reference to some work that I could procure and study for myself.

I am aware that a custom has prevailed, among the Hebrew post-biblical poets, of interweaving with their own stanzas the ipsissima verba of Scripture texts; somewhat after the fashion (if I rightly understand it) in which, in the ancient Church Services, at Matins the Venite exultemus is broken up, by the introduction of the "invitatory" antiphon. This, however, can hardly be what Mr. Archer refers to. And indeed the date of the earliest of these poets is, I imagine, long subsequent to the introduction into the Christian liturgy of the "antiphon"—say, the latter half of the eleventh century, during which period lived and sang Gabirol, the first, and perhaps the very best, of the Spanish Hebrew poets.

I am, Sir, yours obediently,

Lacy H. Rumsey.

Brent Pelham, Feb. 8, 1872.

Brief Summary of Country News.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

Bath.—The fourth concert of Mr. Bianchi Taylor's choir for the season took place on Tuesday evening, the 13th ult., when an admirable performance of Acis and Galatea was given. Miss Ida Brettelle sang Galatea's part very skilfully, the recitative "Ye verdant plains," and the airs "Hush, ye pretty warbling choir," and "Heart, the seat of soft delight," being beautifully rendered. Mr. J. Moody was Acis. His "Love sounds the alarm" was very good. Mr. A. Smith sang carefully and well the music allotted to Damon, particularly "Stay, shepherd, stay," and "Shepherd, what art thou pursuing?" Mr. Lewis Thomas (who was formerly a pupil of Mr. Taylor) was warmly received. The applause awarded to his recitative, "I rage, I melt, I burn," and "O, ruddier than the cherry" was unanimous, and he was compelled to repeat it. The choruses were sung with fine effect, more especially "Wretched lovers." The second part of the concert was made up of a well-chosen miscellaneous selection, which was commenced with a capital new part-song composed by Mr. Taylor, entitled "Yuletide." "God save the Queen" brought the very pleasant concert to a close, and Mr. Bianchi Taylor must have been pleased with the results of his assiduous efforts to bring the society to such a state of readiness that works of the character and difficulty of those performed this season could have been so successfully produced. The small and well-chosen band, under the direction of Mr. Owen, was highly effective. and Mr. Brownell at the pianoforte, performed his onerous duties with skill and tact.

Birkenhead.—On the 20th ult. the Birkenhead Cambrian Choral Society gave a performance of Haydn's Oratorio the Creation, at the Queen's (late Workman's) Hall, which was a decided success. The principal artists were Madame Billinie Porter, Mr. H. T. Bywater, and Mr. T. J. Hughes, with a band (led by Mr. H. Lawson) and chorus numbering about 90. Mrs. Porter sang the airs "With verdure clad" and "On mighty pens" with a power and expression that well merited the loud applause which she received. Mr. Bywater showed much intelligence in his singing, and Mr. Hughes interpreted all his music in a highly efficient manner. The choruses were given with great precision, and the band was thoroughly efficient. Several of the choruses were encored. Mr. W. Parry, as conductor, contributed in a large measure to the success of the performance.

Bodmin.—On the 26th January the Bodmin Philharmonic Society performed Handel's Messiah, at the Guildhall, with decided success. The principal vocalists were Miss A. Liddell, Miss Oliver, Miss A. Coom, the Rev. C. J. Dickenson, Messrs. J. Rowe and Stokes, who acquitted themselves with much credit, and were received with marked favour. The choruses, under the able direction of Mr. J. Heie, Mus. Bac., Oxon, were admirably rendered, and the band, led by Mr. Pardew, was thoroughly efficient.

Brixton.—The Somerleyton Opera Company gave four amateur performances of Rossini's Il Barbiere di Siviglia on the evenings of the 22nd, 24th, 25th, and 27th January, with satisfactory results, Mr. Kosmuth Hudson sustaining the character of Count Almaviva, and Miss Maas that of Rosina. Mr. M. Hall appeared as Figaro, and Miss Kitty Maas as Bertha. The other parts were well filled. The opera must have been excellently rehearsed; for, unlike most amateur theatrical displays, the arrangements were most perfect and satisfactory throughout.

Bursley.—The Staffordshire Potteries Tonic Sol-fa Choristers gave their second Oratorio concert of the season on the 5th ult., in the Town Hall. Hadyn's Creation was performed for the second time, assisted by the Liebhart party, with the usual complement of instrumentalists from Manchester; Mr. Seymour leading, Herr Sauvlet taking principal flute, and Mr. H. Walker presiding at the organ. The vocal solos were given throughout with excellent effect by Madame Liebhart, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Lander. The singing of the choir elicited frequent applause, and has since been spoken of in terms of warm commendation by the local press. Herr Sauvlet's playing of a flute solo, with orchestral accompaniments, was received with enthusiastic approbation, followed by an irresistible encore. Mr. Powell occupied his accustomed place as conductor. The hall was crowded.

Cheshunt.—The seventh annual concert of the Cheshunt Choral Association took place on Tuesday evening, the 30th January. The programme included several choruses from the Messiah and Judas Maccabæus, a selection of glees, &c. The singing showed an improvement which reflects much credit on the conductor, Mr. C. Archer. The vocalists were Miss Hensman and Mr. R. Morley; instrumentalists, Mrs. Emmett (piano) and Mr. Trotter (violin). Mr. Cecil Burch presided at the pianoforte, and played his own fantasia on the tune "Rockingham," which was re-demanded. The concert was a decided success.

Chester.—Mr. Chas. E. Horsley's Liverpool Ballad and Madrigal Company, consisting of Miss Marie Arthur, Miss Nicholls, Mr. C. Wilson, and Mr. T. J. Hughes (assisted by the band of the 14th Regiment), gave a concert on Saturday evening, the 17th ult. Miss Marie Arthur and Mr. T. J. Hughes were rewarded with enthusiastic encores, and Mr. Horsley's Thanksgiving Hymn, "God save the Prince of Wales" (the words of which were composed by a Liverpool gentleman, Mr. C. T. Wilkinson), was most loyally received by a very large audience.

Church Aston, Newport, Shropshire.—On the 6th ult. a concert was given by the choir, assisted by several ladies of the parish, to celebrate the opening of the new school-room. The principal vocalists were Mrs. Liddle, Mrs. Pooler, Mr. Taylor, and Mr. Tenby; the instrumental portion being well sustained by Mrs. Ventris and Miss L. Ashdowne. Several glees were creditably sung by the choir; and the solo singing of Mrs. Liddle, Mrs. Pooler, and Mr. Taylor, deserves special commendation. The concert was decidedly successful, and great credit is due to Mr. Taylor, the choirmaster, for his careful training.

Cobham, Surrey.—Mr. H. P. G. Brooke's choral class, consisting of 60 members, gave the first concert of the season on the 30th January. Several part-songs were included in the programme, the most admired being Mendelssonn's "For the New Year," and vocal solos by the Rev. Trotter, Miss Shepherd, Miss Cordelia Molesworth, Mrs. Rowland Smith, Messrs. G. Smith, T. Jones, and G. Jupp were favourably received. Mr. Brooke performed a pianoforte solo with much success, and also took part in two duets. The singing of the choir throughout the evening reflected the utmost credit upon the training of Mr. Brooke.

Devizes.—On Thursday evening, the 25th January, the Choral Society gave a miscellaneous concert at the Town Hall. The programme, consisting of glees, part-songs, &c., was received with much applause by a large audience. Balfe's trio, "I'm not the Queen," and Horn's "Cherry ripe," were among the encores. An efficient band performed the overture to Figaro and Paer's "Agnese." Miss Davies and Mr. Sly presided at the pianoforte, Mr. W. Price at the harmonium, and Mr. Shaul led the Band. Mr. J. T. Abraham conducted as usual.——A Concert was given by the members of the Choral Society on the following Wednesday, at the Workmen's Hall, Market Lavington, when the same programme, with a few exceptions, was provided.

Dudley.—On Tuesday evening, the 30th January, the Rev. W. Reyner Cosens, M.A., read, with much effect, selections from Shakespeare's tragedy Macbeth. Locke's music was ably rendered during the reading, by the Parish Church Choir, under the direction of Mr. G. H. Mainwaring, choirmaster, who also sang the part of Hecate. The entertainment was given in aid of the funds of the Mechanics' Institute. Mr. Blunden presided at the pianoforte.——On the 6th ult., Mr. Stephen Garland recited, with considerable success, Sir Walter Scott's poem "The Lady of the Lake." The vocal illustrations were admirably given by Miss Isabella Glennie, Miss Cozens, Mr. Stephen Garland, and Mr G. H. Mainwaring, the latter gentleman receiving an enthusiastic encore for his song, "Friend of the Brave."

Ealing.—The Ealing Church Choir Association gave a highly successful performance of Sullivan's Prodigal Son, on the 8th ult., at the handsome new School-room adjoining Christ Church. The principal vocalists were Mrs. Coleby, Miss Beddow, Messrs. Folkard, Lockyer, White, and Bridges. all of whom sang the music allotted to them with much effect, Miss Beddow eliciting an encore for the solo "O, that thou hadst hearkened to my commandments," and Mr. White receiving a similar compliment for his rendering of the air, "Come, ye children." The choruses were given with commendable precision and delicacy by a choir of sixty voices, under the careful direction of the Rev. J. Summerhayes. A miscellaneous selection followed, in which several part-songs were effectively sung; and in addition to solos by the vocalists already named, Benedict's "Rock me to sleep," by Mrs. South, and Levey's "Esmeralda," by Miss Hailey, were so well given as to be unanimously re-demanded. Mr. Vallack received warm and deserved applause for his performance of one of De Beriot's airs with variations on the violin; and a pianoforte trio by Czerny, on airs from Norma, was played by Miss Lunn and the Misses Bennett with so much decision and refined executive power as to evoke the most enthusiastic demonstrations of approval. Mr. F. Shepheard presided, with much ability, at the pianoforte. The concert, which was given on behalf of the Building Fund of the St. John's School, Ealing Dean, was extremely well attended.

Edinburgh.—The thirty-second Reid Commemoration Concert took place in the Music-hall on the 13th ult., which, as is invariably the case at these annual celebrations, was filled from floor to ceiling, the back seats of the orchestra being crowded with eager and attentive listeners. Since the appointment of Professor Oakeley to the Chair of Music, he has striven hard to rescue these concerts from the miserable state to which they had dwindled, and to render them worthy of the event they were designed to celebrate. For these exertions he deserves the thanks of every well-wisher to the cause of musical progress in Edinburgh. The artists engaged were Mdme. Louise Kapp, Mdlle. Sophie Loewe, and Herr Stockhausen, as vocalists; Mdme. Norman-Neruda, as solo violinist; Mr. Hallé officiating in the double capacity of solo pianist and conductor. After the introduction, pastorale, minuet, and march composed by the munificent founder of the Musi-

Chair, the overture to Der Freischütz was finely played. Mendelssohn's Concerto in G minor was charmingly performed by Mr. Hallé, who was enthusiastically recalled. The accompaniments of the orchestra, under the conducting of Mr. C. A. Seymour, were characterised by the usual refinement and delicacy. Herr Stockhausen gave Mozart's air from Le Nozze di Figaro in the most artistic manner, and Mdme. Louise Kapp sang the scena from Der Freischütz with much effect. Of the manner in which Beethoven's Symphony in F (No. 8), was played, it is only necessary to say that it was in every way worthy of the composition. Similar commendation will apply to the other performances of the band—more especially in the sparkling "Scherzo," by Glinka, and the overture to Tannhäuser. Mdlle. Loewe sang an air from Roberto very tastefully, and was recalled. The chief honours of the evening were, however, heaped on Mdme. Norman-Neruda. Her appearance was greeted with the most enthusiastic applause; and on the conclusion of her performance of Spohr's "Adagio," she was overwhelmed with bravos. Professor Oakeley may justly be congratulated on the complete success which has attended his labours.

Gawthorpe.—On Shrove Tuesday, a tea party and concert took place in the National School. The solo vocalists were Mrs. Barras, Mr. Hargreaves, Mr. Baines, Mr. Overend, and Mr. Geo. Jubb. The encores were accorded to Mrs. Barras and Mr. Baines for their songs, and also for the duet, "When a little farm we keep." A pianoforte duet by Mr. Oxley and his pupil, Miss Asquith, was played with much taste and executive facility, and Mr. J. W. Oxley (organist of the Parish Church) displayed great delicacy of touch in a pianoforte solo, which was re-demanded. Mr. Oxley officiated as accompanist.

Golcar.—On the 20th ult. the members of the Golcar Choral Society gave a musical festival in the Baptist Chapel. The orchestra was full and effective, numbering about 120 performers, vocal and instrumental, selected from the numerous choral societies in the neighbourhood. Mr. Hy. Pearson most ably conducted, and Mr. J. E. Pearson presided at the organ. The band was led by Mr. Alfred Pearson. The first part consisted of selections from Judas Maccabæus, the principal soloists being Mrs. Stockdale, who sang "From mighty kings" in a highly satisfactory manner, and Miss Veevers and Mrs. Dyson were equally successful in their duet, "O lovely peace." Mr. Bramley was much applauded in "Sound an alarm," and the trio, "Disdainful of danger," by Messrs. H. Taylor, W. Mellor and G. Mellor, was admirably executed. The whole of the choruses were sung with the utmost precision, especially "Welcome," "Hail Judea," and "Sing unto God." Mr. J. E. Pearson, in Mendelssohn's Sonata, No. 4, B flat major, showed himself a perfect master of the organ. In the selections from the Creation, which formed the second part, Miss Kaye, Miss M'Gowan and Mr. Bramley sustained the solos with much effect. Only £17 13s. was collected, a very small sum, considering that nearly 2,000 persons were present.

Huddersfield.—On Tuesday, the 6th ult., the members of the surpliced choir in connexion with St. Paul's Church gave a very excellent concert of miscellaneous music in the School-room in aid of their annual excursion to the sea-side. Between the parts of the programme, two testimonials were presented to Mr. Joseph Taylor, head-master of the school. One consisted of a very handsome timepiece (subscribed for by the managers of the school), and the other of a purse of money (subscribed for by past and present scholars and teachers). Mr. Taylor thanked the subscribers in suitable terms.——On Friday, the 9th ult. a concert (under distinguished patronage) in aid of the enlargement of the Huddersfield Infirmary, was given in the Assembly Rooms. The principal vocalists were Miss Deansfield, Miss Nuseley, Mr. H. B. Kaye, Mr. T. W. Hanson, and Mr. Garner, assisted by an efficient chorus of select voices from the various choirs of the town. Mr. H. Hartley was the accompanist, and Mr. Garner conducted. The programme was varied and well selected. The glees given by the choir were rendered in a highly satisfactory manner. The National Anthem brought the proceedings to a close.——The Huddersfield Choral Society gave the 145th concert (being the 3rd for this season) at the Assembly Rooms, on Friday evening, the 16th ult., before a large audience. Judas Maccabæus was the work chosen for performance. The solo vocalists were Miss Emsall, Miss Hargreaves (of Leeds), Mr. Sutcliffe (of York), and Mr. Garner. The band and chorus comprised about 120 performers, excellently led by Mr. R. S. Burton. Mr. Hartley presided at the pianoforte. The performance was thoroughly successful.

Kenilworth.—On Tuesday evening, the 13th ult., the members of the Kenilworth Musical Society gave their second concert. The part-songs were sung with great care, and reflected considerable credit upon the conductor, Mr. Trickett, as well as upon the performers. Mr. Sutton sang "I'm a Roamer" and "Hear me, gentle Maritana," with much taste, and Mr. Mason's rendering of Blumenthal's "Requital" was also exceedingly good. Miss Sutton met with her usual reception, her second song, "I'll follow thee," being encored. The duet, 'The Bells of St. Mary," was very well given by Miss Blackwell and Miss Emery. The solos (pianoforte) by Mr. Trickett were greatly admired. The room was filled by a fashionable audience, and the concert was a complete success.

Knaresborough.—On Tuesday evening, the 6th ult., a bazaar and concert took place in the Town-hall, before a crowded audience, the proceeds, which amounted to nearly £100, being handed over to the Parish Church Restoration Fund. The vocal portion consisted of part-songs, glees, &c., which were very well rendered by the Parish Church Choir. The National Anthem was sung at the conclusion, and joined in by all present. Mr. J. W. Oxley (organist and instructor of the Parish Church Choir), presided at the piano and harmonium with his accustomed skill.

Leeds.—Miss Hargreaves's concert was given on the 7th ult., at the Victoria Hall, under distinguished patronage, and attracted a large audience. "Lo, here the gentle lark" (Bishop), was well sung by Mdlle. Rita (with flute obbligato by M. de Jong), and had a recall; "Tom Bowling" and "Come into the garden, Maud," were given by Mr. G. Perren with much effect (the latter being encored), and Mendelssohn's "May Bells" was excellently rendered by Mdlle. Rita and Miss Hargreaves. The first part ended with a trio, for piano, flute, and violoncello, by Mr. T. W. Dodds, M. de Jong, and Herr Brousil. Certainly the gem of the evening was the masterly flute playing of M. de Jong. Mr. T. W. Dodds, the pianist, conducted with great taste and judgment.

Leek.—The members of the Leek Amateur Musical Society, conducted by Mr. Powell, gave their fifteenth concert on the 12th ult., in the Temperance Hall. Mr. W. H. Birch's Operetta, Eveleen, the Rose of the Vale, occupied the first part of the programme; Miss Shute, Mr. Disbley, and Mr. Beckett, of the Society, singing the solo music, and the accompaniments being played by Miss A. Milner, at the pianoforte and a small band, led by Mr. Lockett. The Operetta was sung in good style throughout, and was received with warm applause, and frequent encores. The second part was miscellaneous, and included vocal solos by Mr. G. C. Warburton, of Manchester, and some part-songs.

Liverpool.—The Second Subscription Concert of the Philharmonic Society took place on the 6th ult.; principal artists—Madame Lemmens and Herr Jules Stockhausen; solo pianoforte, Dr. Ferdinand Hiller. The overtures were that to Gustave, by Auber, and that to Schiller's Demetrius, by Dr. F. Hiller, the latter an interesting and characteristic work, conducted by its composer. The Sinfonia was Beethoven's in B flat, No. 4. Dr. F. Hiller played with the utmost delicacy and artistic expression Mozart's Pianoforte Concerto in D minor, and three charming short pieces of his own. "Schummerlied," "Zur Guitarre," and "Walzer" (MS.). Madame Lemmens sang with her usual brilliancy; and Herr Stockhausen gave with great refinement two songs by Schumann and Schubert, and the scena, "Wo berg' ich mich," from Euryanthe. The choral members sang with much effect the "Hunting Chorus," from Haydn's Seasons; "O the pleasures of the plains," from Acis and Galatea, and a part-song by Henry Smart, "Wind thy horn." The concert concluded with Mendelssohn's Wedding March.——The third concert, on the plan of the London Monday Popular Concerts, was given in the Philharmonic Society's Hall, on the 7th ult.: executants—Madame Arabella Goddard, Herr Straus, MM. Ries, Zerbini, Percival, Jennings, Paquis, Kleigl and Piatti; vocalist, Miss Eleanor Armstrong; accompanist, Mr. Zerbini. The programme consisted of Spohr's Quartet, in D minor (Op. 74, No. 3), for strings; Mozart's "Dove sono;" Dussek's Pianoforte Sonata, in C minor (No. 3, Op. 35); Haydn's Quartet for Strings, in C major (No. 3, Op. 33)—the last movement vehemently encored; Pacini's cavatina, "Il soave e bel contento;" and Hummel's Grand Septett. The concert was a perfect success, but the septett was the finest performance of the whole.——Miss Lawson's third promenade concert was given in St. George's Hall, on the 8th ult. The band was complete, and attracted a large audience. The instrumental department was confided to the band of the 8th (King's) Regiment of the Line, which, although not quite equal to those of some of the regiments of the Guards, plays well; its execution of the operatic selections, dance music, &c., being such as to completely satisfy the audience. The vocal music was on the whole satisfactory; that contributed by Madame Billinie Porter being particularly so. Her voice completely filled the spacious hall, but we should have preferred to hear her in something more worthy of her talents than Bishop's "Ray of hope," which has been needlessly resuscitated from oblivion. Mr. Alfred Brown, a local artist, who is rapidly gaining favour with the public, sang some pleasing baritone songs in an intelligent, though as yet not absolutely finished, style.

Manchester.—Mr. Horton C. Allison gave a pianoforte recital in the Memorial Hall on Tuesday evening, the 6th ult., before a numerous audience, with very decided success. Mr. Allison played Beethoven's sonata (No. 12, op. 26), a prelude and scherzo by Mendelssohn, and selections from the pianoforte works of Bach, Schubert, Liszt, Chopin, Henselt, and Wollenhaupt, all of which were performed entirely from memory. Mr. Allison's own compositions formed an interesting feature in the programme, and included several novelties, viz., a new song, "Lovely flowers," five of his "Melodious Studies," "The sea song;" and two of his well-known piano pieces, viz., "La fleur de lis" and "Tarantella," in A minor, and the song "Again the woods." The vocal music was ably rendered by Miss Jessie Bond, who produced a most favourable impression.——On the 7th ult. Dr. Ferdinand Hiller gave a pianoforte recital, at the Town Hall, before a large and highly appreciative audience. The whole of the compositions performed, with the exception of a Rondo by Mozart, were by Dr. Hiller, and included a Sonata, the "Operetta without words" (in which he was ably assisted by Mr. Hecht), besides several smaller pieces, the concert concluding with an improvisation, in which the theme of a song which had just been given was taken as a subject. That Dr. Hiller's performance was masterly throughout the evening need scarcely be told, and the warm applause with which his efforts were greeted must have convinced him how thoroughly his eminent artistic qualities are recognised in this country.——The interest of Mr. Hallé's concert, on the 8th ult., was materially increased by the presence of Dr. Ferdinand Hiller, who remained in Manchester expressly to conduct his own overture, Demetrius, and Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto, in A minor, which latter work was finely played by Mr. Hallé, and received with marked favour. Dr. Hiller's new overture is strikingly picturesque, the subjects being extremely exciting, and the instrumentation, as might be expected, masterly throughout. The symphony was Beethoven's, in A (No. 7), which was magnificently performed, and Mendelssohn's overture, Ruy Blas, was also included in the programme. Signor Agnesi was the vocalist.

Market Drayton.—The members of the Market Drayton Musical Union gave their second concert this season on the 25th January, to a fashionable and thoroughly appreciative audience. The part-songs and glees, "O, hush thee, my babie" (Sullivan), "By Celia's Arbour" (Horsley), "The Sands o' Dee" (Macfarren), the ballad dialogue, in ten parts, "Sir Patrick Spens" (Pearsall), and "Sweet and low" (Barnby), by their precision and light and shade, reflected great credit on the efficient and careful training of the conductor, Sidney H. Williams, Mus. Bac., Oxon. Mozart's trio for piano, clarionet, and violin (by Miss Smith, the Rev. J. Robinson, and Mr. J. P. Collett), his sonata, allegro, tema, and variations, for piano and violin (by Messrs. S. H. Williams and J. P. Collett), and Sainton's solo for violin, "Souvenir de la Fille du Regiment" (by Mr. J. P. Collett), elicited rapturous applause. The concert terminated with the chorus, "To Rome's immortal leader" (Mozart).

Melbourne.—The Melbourne Philharmonic Society gave an excellent performance of Handel's Israel in Egypt on Tuesday, the 28th November. Macfarren's wind-parts were used, and the effect, in conjunction with a good orchestra, was such as to rouse a large assemblage in the Town-hall to great enthusiasm. By this concert, the Philharmonic Society has materially advanced itself in popular esteem. The best known of the double choruses were encored, and the audience was profoundly impressed with the sublimity of the music. The orchestra and chorus numbered about 300 performers, and was conducted by Mr. David Lee.

Nottingham.—The first musical festival in this town, organised by Mr. Pyatt, was given on the morning and evening of the 2nd ult., with a success which justifies the hope that it may be the forerunner of a series of annual or triennial festivals such as those which are held in Birmingham. Sir Michael Costa's Oratorio Eli (conducted by the composer), was the work selected for performance in the morning, the principal parts being sustained by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Mdlle. D'Alton, Mr. Vernon Rigby (in place of Mr. Sims Reeves, who was unfortunately indisposed), Mr. H. Pyatt, and Mr. Lewis Thomas, all of whom were thoroughly effective in the music allotted to them. The choruses were remarkably well given throughout. The Orchestra, led by Mr. H. Farmer, was everything that could be desired (the "March of the Israelites" being unanimously encored, and the organ part was most artistically played by Mr. George Essex. Much credit is due to Mr. F. M. Ward for the manner in which he has conducted the choral rehearsals for this work. In the evening a miscellaneous concert took place, in which all the above-mentioned vocalists appeared.

Oxford.—On the occasion of the marriage of Mr. W. H. Allchin, Mus. Bac., organist of St. Mary-the-Virgin, that gentleman was presented with a testimonial by the congregation and the choir. On Sunday, the 11th ult., at the conclusion of the morning service, several of the parishioners and others withdrew into the chancel, when the Vicar, in their names, presented Mr. Allchin with a velvet purse containing twenty-five sovereigns, accompanying the gift with a letter. The Rev. J. W. Burgon explained that the amount was not to be regarded as the measure of the appreciation entertained of Mr. Allchin's professional ability and service, but only as a token of the esteem and good will of the contributors. No pains had been taken to make up a large sum. The little purse of gold had been a spontaneous offering. Mr. Allchin was requested to purchase for himself out of the money some small object which might be a permanent memorial of the present occasion. Mr. E. Ryman Hall, in the name of the choir (the boys being drawn up in two ranks to witness the presentation), next presented to Mr. Allchin a handsomely-bound Bible containing an appropriate inscription. Mr. Hall in a short speech paid a graceful tribute to the zeal and ability with which Mr. Allchin had out of rough material constructed a very efficient parish choir. Mr. and Mrs. Allchin received the congratulations of all present, and the ceremony was over.

Parkstone, Dorset.—An amateur concert, in aid of the funds of the Working Men's Institute, was given on Shrove Tuesday, at St. Peter's School-room. The overtures to Egmont and William Tell, and a trio by Corelli, were amongst the instrumental pieces performed by Messrs. T. R. Saunders, W. W. Aldridge, G. Conway, Mrs. Wheeler Aldridge, and Miss Aldridge, all of which were played with very fair precision. The vocal portion was well sustained by Miss Aldridge, Mrs. Gosham, Mr. W. Aldridge, and the Rev. E. Coombes. Bishop's duet, "As it fell," by Miss Aldridge and Mrs. Gosham, deservedly received an encore, as did also one by Mrs. Gosham and Mr. Aldridge. The concert was well attended.

Pendleton.—Handel's Oratorio, the Messiah, was performed in the Town-hall on the 19th ult., before a numerous audience. The principal parts were sustained by the members of the London Vocal Quartette, viz. Madame Gilardoni, Madame Poole, Mr. C. Phillips, and Mr. George Mellor. The chorus consisted of about 120 voices, and there was a highly efficient band. The solos were excellently given throughout. The Oratorio was under the conductorship of M. De Pini.

Sheffield.—On Wednesday, the 7th ult., a miscellaneous concert was given by Dr. Spark, of Leeds, in the Music Hall, Surrey-street, which was but thinly attended, although the audience appeared to appreciate the excellent manner in which the programme, which included several of our best national songs, was rendered. The artists were Mdlle. Bertha Brousil (violin), Miss Emma Kennedy (soprano), Miss Annie Anyon (contralto), and Mr. Dodds (bass). Dr. Spark accompanied all the songs with his usual ability.——On the 12th ult. the members of the Sheffield Tonic Sol-fa Choral Society gave a concert in the Music Hall, Surrey-street. The solo vocalists were Miss Twigg, Mr. A. Kenningham (tenor, of St. Andrew's, Wells-street, London), and Mr. J. Thurley Beale (bass, St. Andrew's, London, and pupil of Mr. Joseph Barnby). The programme was opened by the choir with the part-song entitled "The Lass of Richmond Hill," which was received with prolonged applause. Amongst the pieces which called forth the greatest marks of approval were "I'm a roamer," by Mr. J. T. Beale, and "The Maid of Cashmere," and "Why are you wandering here, I pray?" by Miss Twigg. Mr. Robinson gave a trumpet solo, and Mr. George Mellor, who also fulfilled the duties of accompanist, a pianoforte solo, both of which were well received. "The soldiers' chorus" (from Faust) was rendered in a manner which called forth a most enthusiastic encore. The choir was under the conductorship of Mr. Samuel Hadfield, to whom great credit is due for the satisfactory manner in which the various choruses were sung, and under whose tuition the society is making very favourable progress.

Southampton.—The congregation of St. Deny's Church has recently purchased an organ, built by T. S. Jones, of Brompton: and on the 28th January, opening services were held. The choir (surpliced) numbered about 30. At the morning service the Rev. Basil Wilberforce (son of the Bishop of Winchester) preached an eloquent sermon from the subject of Mary Magdalen's anointing of Our Saviour, and His reproof of those who cavilled at her offering,—"Let her alone, she hath done what she could." At evensong the Rev. Dr. Cary, Rural Dean of Southampton, preached a practical sermon on ecclesiastical music. The offertories (for the organ fund) amounted to £10 2s. 9d. The honorary organist of this church, Mr. Frank Sellwood, has recently received a testimonial, consisting of a handsome morocco purse, bearing an appropriate inscription in gilt letters, and containing £17, as a slight acknowledgment from the congregation of his diligence and zeal in the discharge of his self-imposed duties. According to the local newspapers, the services at this church are models of rubrical propriety without extreme in either direction, and the choir is spoken of as having attained to a high degree of efficiency.

Wakefield.—An entertainment, consisting of music and readings, took place in the large dining-hall of the West Riding Asylum on Monday evening, the 12th ult., when upwards of 800 patients, of both sexes, were present, and appeared thoroughly to enjoy the performance provided for them. The vocalists were Miss Scott, Messrs. Bracey, Cairns, Smith, Smithies, and Moore, all of whom were highly successful. The readings were most ably supported by Mrs. Tattersall, Messrs. Norbury and Pigott. "God bless the Prince of Wales" was given at the commencement, and was joined in by the patients, and the National Anthem concluded the evening. Mr. Brook was an able accompanist.

Walsall.—On Tuesday evening, the 30th January, the members of the Philharmonic Society held their annual meeting at the George Hotel, Mr. Edward Russell in the chair. The secretary's report proved that the society is in a flourishing condition, the number of members showing a considerable increase upon that of former years. The financial position of the association is also highly satisfactory. Mr. George Gill, who retires from the office of secretary, was warmly thanked by the members for the zeal he had always manifested in fulfilling the duties of his office.

Watlington, Norfolk.—On Friday, the 9th ult., a miscellaneous concert was given in aid of the church fund, under the direction of Mr. S. G. Street, of Lynn, assisted by a select party of vocalists. The principal features of the evening were the songs "O, fair dove! O, fond dove!" sung by Mrs. Walters, "Esmeralda," by Miss Dennis, "The white squall," by Mr. Rutter, "The pilgrim of love," by Mr. C. Smith, and two pianoforte duets by Beethoven, played by Miss R. G. and Mr. S. G. Street. Several part-songs by the church choir were effectively rendered and well received. Miss Street, organist of the parish church, accompanied throughout the evening, and Mr. S. G. Street conducted.

Winchester.—On Wednesday evening, the 7th ult., St. John's Room was crammed with an audience to hear Mr. Ellis Roberts, the Welsh harpist. He was ably assisted by Miss Ellen Glanville, whose well-trained voice was admirably suited for the ballads chosen, and she frequently received the honour of an enthusiastic encore.

Wolverhampton.—On Tuesday evening, the 13th ult., a concert of sacred song was given in the lower lecture-room of Queen Street Congregational Chapel, in aid of the harmonium fund. The solo singers were the Misses Aldred, Saunders, and Grainger, and Messrs. Hodgetts and Reynolds, who were highly successful. Several anthems were pleasingly rendered by the school children, among which we may mention "By cool Siloam," which was specially composed for the occasion by Mr. C. Terry, jun., organist of the chapel. The concert proved highly attractive, a large room being crowded by an appreciative audience. The concert was under the direction of Mr. Terry, who presided with his usual ability at the harmonium.

Worcester.—The opening concert for the season of the Worcester Vocal and Instrumental Union was given on the 1st ult., in the Natural History Room. Mrs. Sutton was highly successful in all her vocal solos, being encored both in Weber's Scena, "Softly sighs," and Guglielmo's song, "The lover and the bird." The same compliment was paid to Messrs. Smith and Price, and Mr. Pugh was also most favourably received. Several glees and choruses were sung with much effect, and a clarionet solo by Mr. J. O. Brooke was an attractive item in the selection. Two overtures, and Mendelssohn's "Cornelius" March, were excellently played by the band. The room was well filled.—— The third concert of the St. Clement's Choir for the present season was given at the old School-room, on the 5th ult., to one of the largest audiences ever assembled at these pleasant musical gatherings. Mrs. Severn Walker was highly successful in her rendering of Wallace's "Sweet and low," and Mrs. Haywood, Miss Rea, the Misses Lugard, the Misses Binns and the Misses Cock were also warmly and deservedly applauded. Mr. H. Binns was encored in "The village blacksmith," and Mr. Baxter received a similar compliment for his singing of "The wooden walls of Albion." Miss Doward played with much effect a selection from one of Beethoven's Sonatas, and accompanied with skill and judgment the vocal music.——The second concert of the Worcester Musical Society for the present season was given at the Music Hall on Friday, the 16th ult., before a large audience. The principal portion of the programme was devoted to Mr. Arthur Sullivan's Cantata, On shore and sea, which was performed at the opening of the International Exhibition, 1871. The solo parts were excellently sung by Mrs. A. J. Caldicott and Mr. H. Gummery, and the work was well received throughout. The miscellaneous portion of the concert was ably supported by Miss Binns, the Misses Lugard, Miss Powell, Mrs. A. J. Caldicott, Mrs. Severn Walker, Messrs. Smart and H. Caldicott. Part-music was also effectively rendered by the choir, and Messrs. Whinfield, Quarterman and Caldicott played a trio for violoncello, harmonium and pianoforte with much success. Mr Caldicott conducted, and Mr. Quarterman presided at the harmonium, and also played pianoforte accompaniments to some of the songs.

YEADON, NEAR LEEDS.—A concert was given on Monday evening, the 12th ult., at the Church School-room, in aid of the Choir Fund connected with St. John's Church. The vocalists were Miss Thompson, a lady amateur from the neighbourhood, Mr. W. Rayfield, Mr. Samuel Whitaker, Mr. Jos. Brown, and a chorus composed of the choir of St. John's Church and part of the choirs of Horsforth and Kirkstall churches. The performance of the glees, part-songs, &c., deserves a word of praise, Webbe's glee, "When winds breathe soft," being especially well given. The musical arrangements were under the management of Mr. W. Stables, of Kirkstall, who acted as pianist and conductor.

CONTAIN A PROGRESSIVE COURSE OF INSTRUCTION IN MUSIC, UPON A SYSTEM DESIGNED BY HIM.

The exercises are set at the top of each page, and blank staves are left for the pupil to copy the examples given. It is intended that the pupils should fill up the first page by copying the exercises given, and write from memory on the second blank page. Every succeeding exercise includes all that has been taught in the preceding examples. The rudiments of music are explained as simply as possible. Diagrams of the pianoforte keyboard are provided, by means of which the notes can be more easily learnt than by any other method. The fundamental rules of harmony and thorough bass are practically illustrated, and a plan laid down by which singing at sight can be learnt without assistance. The Music Copy-Books will, it is believed, be equally useful to master and pupil, by relieving the former from the necessity of constantly repeating the same rules, and ensuring the gradual progress of the latter.

Parts I. and II. contain RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC.
Part III. contains INSTRUCTIONS FOR THE PIANOFORTE.
Parts IV. and V. contain THE RUDIMENTS OF HARMONY.
Part VI. contains INSTRUCTIONS IN VOCALISATION, PART-SINGING, AND SINGING AT SIGHT.

The present publication has been undertaken with a view to supply a musical want long felt by amateurs and lovers of the organ, i.e., an edition of HANDEL'S CELEBRATED CHORUSES arranged for the organ with pedal obbligato, that shall be effective, combining all the salient parts of the score, and yet at the same time be within the reach of those performers who have not made the instrument their entire study. We have, it is true, many arrangements; some for "Organ or Pianoforte," others by our most eminent organists. The first belong to a past age; the second, in all cases, are only fit for professional performers, and require an amount of skill for their proper execution rarely attained by amateurs. In the present edition, the notation has been carefully studied so as to simplify the reading, whilst the pedals, in all cases of difficulty, have the assistance of the left hand of the performer. Many other points have been considered so as to render the arrangement fitted to the object it has in view—to supply an edition of HANDEL'S CHORUSES for the Organ expressly for the amateur.

MASON AND HAMLIN'S CABINET ORGANS.

MESSRS. METZLER AND CO. have the pleasure to announce that they have made arrangements with the MASON AND HAMLIN ORGAN COMPANY for the SOLE AGENCY for the Sale of their Instruments in the United Kingdom. Messrs. METZLER AND CO. have shown these Instruments to a few of the most eminent professional men in London, and have received the following Testimonials in their favour :—

2, Manchester Square, Jan. 26, 1872.

Gentlemen,—I entertain the highest opinion of Mason and Hamlin's Cabinet Organs. The tone is mellow and free from reediness, the touch excellent; and altogether I believe these Instruments are destined to be very popular in this country.

Yours truly,

Messrs. Metzler and Co., Great Marlborough Street. JULIUS BENEDICT.

The Specimens of the American Organs which I have examined at Messrs. Metzler and Co.'s, are remarkably sweet and even-toned throughout the various registers, and are free from many of the objections I have hitherto entertained of Manual Reed Instruments. Moreover, they have a good touch, and are capable of some charming effects and pleasing combinations. The appearance of these Organs in solid walnut wood, and brightly gilt pipes in front, is greatly in their favour. Altogether, I can very strongly recommend these Instruments,

WM. SPARK, Mus. D.,

Messrs. Metzler and Co. Sydenham, S.E., 23rd Jan., 1872.

Gentlemen,—I have played upon several of your "Mason and Hamlin's Cabinet Organs," and consider them to be very satisfactory Instruments. The tone is exceedingly sweet, the speech quick, and the manipulation easy.

Faithfully yours,
W. J. WESTBROOK.

I have just tried and examined several of Mason and Hamlin's Organs at Messrs. Metzler and Co.'s, and I find the tone to be unusually mellow, sweet and equal. The touch of the Instruments is also light, elastic, and free from lumpiness.

EDWARD J. HOPKINS,
Jan. 22, 1872. Organist to the Hon. Societies of the Inner and Middle Temple.

I have a very high opinion of the "Mason and Hamlin Cabinet Organ." Although the sounds are produced from reeds, the quality of tone is extremely rich and sympathetic, almost equal to that obtained from pipes. It is very easy to blow, and great effects are produced by the Automatic Swell. The octave-coupler and sub-bass add greatly to the richness of the Instrument, which is remarkable for purity of tone. For Sacred Music at home, the "Mason and Hamlin Cabinet Organ" is very desirable, and in many respects that could easily be pointed out, it possesses great advantages over the small-priced pipe organs. EDWARD F. RIMBAULT.

At the request of Messrs. Metzler and Co., we have tried and examined several of Messrs. Mason and Hamlin's Cabinet Organs, and we find the tone of these Instruments to be full, powerful, and of agreeable quality, with an absence of reediness; the articulation is rapid, and the touch very good. They appear to us to be the best substitute for a pipe organ.

BRINLEY RICHARDS.
RICHARD REDHEAD.
HENRY W. GOODBAN.

13th Feb., 1872.

Gentlemen,—I have always entertained the opinion that Mason and Hamlin's Cabinet Organs are of the very best class of that description of Instrument. The tone is beautiful—the touch is light and very elastic. Those Instruments that are supplied with pedals give the amateur every opportunity of becoming acquainted with the grand music of old Sebastian Bach; and if they only persevere, they will be amply rewarded.

Believe me, Gentlemen, yours faithfully,
To Messrs. Metzler and Co., Great Marlborough Street. J. L. HATTON.

DISTANT MUSIC.

By Henry C. Lunn.

The genial Elia, in his paper on "Distant Correspondents," speaks so many truths which we all have felt that we cannot but turn to it with renèwed pleasure when a letter or newspaper comes to hand at our breakfast-table which for months perhaps has been travelling thousands of miles over the ocean. "Indeed," he says, addressing a friend in Sydney, "it is no easy effort to set about a correspondence at our distance. The weary world of waters between us oppresses the imagination. It is difficult to conceive how a scrawl of mine should ever stretch across it. It is a sort of presumption to expect that one's thoughts should live so far. It is like writing for posterity; and reminds me of one of Mrs. Rowe's superscriptions, 'Alcander to Strephon in the shades.'" If these ideas will steal upon us in writing or receiving a friendly letter from a distance, how much more are we open to their influence when such communication merely contains news. Elia speaks amusingly of the "now" when the word is written and the "now" when it is read as so widely separated in time that he can have no security that what a person states as a truth shall not before the letter reaches his friend turn into a falsehood; "and not only," he continues, "does truth, in these long intervals, un-essence herself, but (what is harder) one cannot venture a crude fiction, for the fear that it may ripen into a truth upon the voyage." The electric telegraph has of course done much for us in conveying from many distant parts of the world mere records of important events in a space of time which would astonish Charles Lamb could he once more visit the earth; but news that will keep is still wrapped up in letters and newspapers, and sent across the sea to reach us so long after the occurrences narrated have taken place that it is often difficult to share the enthusiasm of a writer who, very probably, at the time we read his remarks has almost forgotten that he ever penned them.

Perhaps on no subject is this feeling more called forth than in that of music. A newspaper, let us say, comes to us from New Zealand, with a passage carefully marked for extract; "Last night," we are told, "an interesting performance of the 'Messiah' was given. The inclemency of the weather deterred many from coming, but those who were present were amply rewarded." Where is this "last night," when we print this; the weather has been fine and wet a dozen times since this concert; and Handel's strains, which the next morning lingered in the ears of the many who composed the audience on the occasion, have now become a thing of the past. Only a short time ago we received an account of a concert in Sydney, which was duly inserted in our journal. By the next mail came a letter, written "in great haste," correcting the name of a singer who had appeared in the performance. The "haste" with which this correction was made and despatched contrasted strangely with the cold and methodical manner in which it was packed up with hundreds of other letters in the mail-bag, conveyed over what Charles Lamb calls "the world of waters," and after being duly sorted by the post-office officials, dropped quietly into our letter-box long after any of our readers could have remembered that the concert to which the communication referred had ever been noticed. How strange, too, does it appear to read in a newspaper sent from the antipodes, that an opera troupe is about to commence a short season; to have the whole of the arrangements detailed in a prospectus, and to be perfectly aware that when this meets our eye, the season has long been over, and some other musical event is the real "news" of the place, the record of which will probably come here when it has become history there. It is like suddenly lighting upon a letter in the handwriting of a deceased friend, the well-known characters in which seem to speak to us once more with all the warmth of life.

In spite, however, of the length of time which must necessarily elapse before distant musical events can become chronicled here, it is always a real pleasure to find that the works which are loved and honoured in this country are slowly, but surely, enlisting the sympathies of those who, although separated from us by a wide expanse of ocean, are in reality a part of ourselves—sprung from the same stock, and speaking the same language. Since music has ceased to be a luxury, and the greatest compositions of the greatest masters have been placed within the reach of all, musical Societies have been formed in the remotest lands, the object being to foster a love for the highest works, the demand for which is so rapidly increasing that a statement of the amount of their sale in English-speaking countries, would astonish even the most sanguine enthusiast in the cause of artistic progress. "Distant Music," therefore, it will be seen has now become of such importance that it is in reality as necessary to insert accounts of the performance of Oratorios, Cantatas, and Operas, which have taken place many thousands of miles from our shores as to record similar events in our own Island; and if New Zealand, Australia, and America progress as they have done within the last few years, our country correspondents must not be surprised if our "Brief Summary" should become still more remarkable for its brevity when noticing their musical doings, in order to make room for the new press of matter. Meanwhile it may be interesting to glance at what our distant friends have been doing in the art within the last few years. Turning to accounts from Otago, in New Zealand, we find that the Dunedin Philharmonic Society has been for many years giving Oratorios and other works with much success. On Christmas Eve, 1863, under the direction of Mr. George R. West, the founder of the Society, the first concert took place, when Handel's "Messiah" was performed, and in 1865 the same composer's "Samson," "the work being listened to," we are informed, "with the utmost interest by the audience." At Auckland, too, we hear of a Harmonic Society giving a highly creditable presentation of Haydn's "Creation," before it had been established a twelvemonth. In Australia high-class music is making rapid progress, the visit of Mr. C. E. Horsley having no doubt tended much to further the good cause. As early as 1863 the Melbourne Philharmonic Society produced Mr. Horsley's Oratorio, "David;" and we afterwards hear of the performance of "Judas Maccabæus," the "Messiah," and several other standard works. Some idea, too, may be formed of Colonial liberality in matters musical by the following paragraph from a Melbourne paper:—"It is intended to inaugurate the Music-hall now building with a grand Inter-Colonial Musical Festival, when a new Oratorio by Mr. Charles Edward Horsley will be produced. A commission has been sent to England for a grand organ for the above hall, the sum voted by the Corporation being £4,000." We do not know whether all these intentions have been carried out, as no record has reached us giving a detailed account of the opening of the hall; but we quote the passage to show the spirit by which these artistic enterprises are animated in Australia. As an earnest of the future, we may also mention that in the prospectus of the Melbourne Philharmonic Society for the present season the works promised are Mendelssohn's "Elijah" and "Hymn of Praise," Haydn's "Seasons," Spohr's "Last Judgment," and Handel's "Messiah" and "Israel in Egypt." The Adelaide and Sydney Philharmonic Societies are likewise in a highly flourishing condition; and we constantly read of miscellaneous concerts being given in the Colony at which good music receives a very fair share of attention. New works also appear to be produced here, for in addition to the one by Mr. Horsley, mentioned above, we hear of a composition by Mr. J. Summers, Mus. Bac., Oxon, written for the inauguration of the Music-hall; and our readers will remember that Mr. Tolhurst's Oratorio, "Ruth," was performed for the first time at Prahran, a suburb of Australia. The local papers were extravagant in their praise of this latter work; and although, on its production in this country, we took leave to differ from them as to its merits, we found that the few lines we wrote, based on the announcement of its success in the journals which were forwarded to us, and of course before we could have heard a note of the composition, were re-printed as an opinion of the Musical Times. All this may be forgiven, perhaps, when we consider how difficult it is for a man to become a prophet in his own country, and how natural it is, therefore, for him to endeavour to influence a new public by bringing certificates from an old one; but composers should be cautious of allowing themselves to be influenced by the adulations of local papers. The criticisms of the provincial press in our own country are rarely written by persons at all acquainted with the art, in proof of which we may mention that in a newspaper which lately reached us, after a panegyric upon all the performers, vocal and instrumental, who took part in a concert, the writer metaphorically pats Beethoven on the back by saying that his song "Adelaida" is a composition "containing many pleasant surprises."

Pursuing our researches into the state of "Distant Music," we learn that at Adelaide, a Philharmonic Society is in a prosperous condition, and at Ballarat some of the best Oratorios have been given by the "Harmonic Society" with much success. In Tasmania we also hear of excellent concerts; and, incidentally it may be mentioned (although out of the scope of our present musical survey) that at Hankow, in China, on Easter Sunday, 1869, the "Hallelujah Chorus" was sung as an anthem by three sopranos, one alto, two tenors, and two basses, and that "it went exceedingly well." At Madras, a Philharmonic Society had been some time in existence in the year 1865, and Sir Hope Grant has given 100 rupees to the "Instrument Fund." Then we have satisfactory news of the progress of the art from Natal; and at Cape Town, the "Good Hope Choral Union" is constantly performing such works as the "Messiah," "St. Paul," the "Mount of Olives," &c., a concert of the "Intermediate Tonic Sol-fa Class," under the direction of Mr. J. H. Ashley, being also spoken of in terms of much favour by a Cape Town paper. At Port Elizabeth, too, we get reports of several musical entertainments, a "Monster concert," given in the Town-hall by Mr. Edward Newbatt, having been very largely attended, and highly successful. In the West Indies we are also informed that music is zealously cultivated, as an earnest of which it may be mentioned that the Barbados Philharmonic Society has it in contemplation to found vocal and instrumental schools. From Quebec we also receive interesting musical news; and at Montreal a series of vocal and instrumental concerts was given at Nordheimer's Hall, in 1867, followed, no doubt, by many others of an equally interesting character.

The musical events at Boston are constantly before our readers; the "Handel and Haydn Society," organized in the year 1815, chiefly for the practice of psalm tunes during the summer months, having advanced to a point of perfection in the presentation of the most classical works which renders a record of the proceedings of the Association highly interesting. The "Thomas Concerts," too, as they are called, are of such a high character as almost to put us to shame in England, where the announcement of unfamiliar works by an enthusiastic concert-giver is quite sufficient to keep our so-called music-lovers from the room. The Boston papers speak of the compositions of Wagner, Liszt, and many other modern writers as if their readers were thoroughly conversant with their merits; and in "Dwight's Journal of Music" (one of the most able critical musical periodicals ever published), in mentioning the performance of the Introduction and Finale to Wagner's "Tristan und Isolde," the writer very wisely says that, not being able to comprehend it on a single hearing, he "suspends his judgment." In New York although the love for good music is evidently steadily on the increase, it is obvious that inferior compositions have a very large sale. We are told, for instance, that the song "Don't be angry with me, darling," as "sung by the minstrels, played by the bands, and whistled by the boys," is the "great popular melody of the United States." Then we have constantly advertised a large collection of "Temperance Songs," the mere titles of which preach a whole sermon in aid of the cause. "Don't marry a man if he drinks," "I'll marry no man if he drinks," "Father's a drunkard, and Mother is dead," "Pure cold water," "Beautiful sparkling water," "Girls, wait for a Temperance man," "Brother, don't go out to-night," if sung with sufficient depth of feeling, would convert a man given to strong liquors, we should imagine, on the spot; but as "Mr. and Mrs. Brown" (comic duet) is included in the selection, it is obvious that our Temperance friends are not averse to having a little fun over their water. Another popular song in New York is called "Make me a jacket of Pa's old coat," and the "Aint I pretty" polka, with a "splendid lithographic title, printed in colours, of a young lady arranging her toilet before a looking-glass," is quite the rage, the whole first edition having been exhausted in a few days. Sensational dance music includes directions for its use; for after advertisements of the "Golden Robin Polka," "Pet Robin Polka," "Swinging Polka," "New Anvil Polka," and "Partridge Polka," we have this sentence:—"The Robin Polkas have sweet bird calls in them, the Swinging Polka has a swinging movement, the Anvil Polka sounds best with hammer accompaniment, and the Partridge Polka brings in the whistle of the Quail." The lists of the "most popular" instrumental music contain a strange mixture of good, bad, and indifferent; and that there exists an extraordinary confusion of tongues in the titles of some of the modern compositions may be imagined when we say that one piece is advertised as the "Cascade de Dew-drops." Energetic endeavours are made in New York to create a love for the highest order of church music; but a review in our columns a short time ago upon a collection of Hymns and Tunes for public worship, recently published in that city, will sufficiently show that the compilers of the work have been more desirous of writing down to the taste of the multitude than of attempting to raise it. We must also remark that a book called "Zion's refreshing showers," which we find extensively advertised, can scarcely appeal to people in search of healthy sacred music; and that a slight want of classification in publishers' catalogues may be too frequently seen, can be proved by the following quotation of the titles of three pieces, which occur precisely in this succession: "Cling to the crucified," "Cock a doodle doo," "Cod liver oil."

There can be no question, however, that high-class music is rapidly making its way in New York, and little doubt can exist of its ultimate triumph. The success of the "Parepa-Rosa Opera Company" has, we believe, done very much towards popularising the best lyrical works; for Mr. Carl Rosa is an artist with a real love for the task he has undertaken, and not a mere speculative caterer for the multitude. Those excellent vocalists, Miss E. Wynne, Madame Patey, Messrs. Santley, Patey, and Cummings—known as the "Dolby Company"—have also had much effect in deepening the love for Oratorio music; and Mr. Santley, who remains, we believe, for some time in America, will materially strengthen the cast of all the Operas produced by Carl Rosa. We have undoubted proof, too, that the standard sacred works are gradually obtaining a very large sale; and a knowledge of the good will speedily displace the bad. America has a magnificent musical future before it, if it can only learn to blot out the word "sensational" in those grand demonstrations which the people are so eminently suited to organise. It is well-known that the "Boston Peace Musical Festival," which took place in 1869, was a mild affair compared with that announced for the present year; and yet, when we find that it took place in a building 500 feet long, and 300 feet wide, and constructed to hold between 40,000 and 50,000 persons, it is difficult indeed to conceive how all these figures can be materially multiplied without setting the laws of acoustics at defiance. In the account of the Festival furnished to us at the time by a correspondent, we have some curious information respecting various portions of the performance. Gounod's "Ave Maria," we are told (based upon Bach's Prelude in C major), was exquisitely sung by Madame Parepa, but it was scarcely a desirable solo to select for a début in so colossal a building. The same vocalist also gave the solo part of the "Inflammatus," from Rossini's "Stabat Mater," but when the composition was repeated on the fourth day, the Festival had set in with all its fury, and the "solo was sung by about ten young ladies, with the utmost correctness of intonation and precision." Then the Overture to "Fra Diavolo" was given, the principal trumpet part being performed by fifty trumpeters; and also Meyerbeer's "Coronation March," with an orchestra of 1,000 musicians, although it is said of the latter work that it was "not perfect, and indeed proved nearly a failure." But the grand triumph of the Festival was reserved, as might have been expected, for the pieces especially suited to the "colossal" nature of the building. "The Star-spangled Banner," we are informed, "proved a genuine success, and displayed to the greatest advantage the gigantic power of the grand orchestra, military bands, drum corps, organ, artillery, and chiming of bells. The firing of the cannons, by electricity from the conductor's stand, had really a fine effect, as the instantaneous discharge upon the first beat of each measure in the chorus, may well be compared to the striking of a large drum. The 'Anvil chorus,' from 'Il Trovatore,' by chorus, full orchestra, and artillery (outside) accompaniment, the anvil part performed upon 100 anvils by the Boston Fire-brigade, was excellent, and it was re-demanded with acclamations."

Here, then, we have undoubted proof that where the building is not adapted to the music, the music must be adapted to the building; and that if we are to have an almost unlimited number of listeners, we must have an almost unlimited number of performers. Not only, therefore, must solos for a soprano voice be sung by "about ten young ladies," but every part, vocal and instrumental, must be multiplied in proportion; and anvils, sledge-hammers, and artillery, will be the "additional instruments," with which the feeble scores of Beethoven, Mendelssohn, and other modern composers must be enriched for Festival use. We hope and believe that America will see how destructive is this idea to the furtherance of pure art, and that a healthy reaction will take place when renewed experiments clearly demonstrate that the real enjoyment of music is dependent upon the power of hearing the minutest details of the compositions performed. If good and healthy music is to have the prominent place in their artistic gatherings, we sincerely wish the Americans every success; but if it is to be mixed up with bells, guns, and anvils, we fervently pray that it may for ever remain "distant music," and heartily bless the "world of waters" that lies between us.

The recent Knighthood of two members of the musical profession renews our hope that the art is gradually advancing in the estimation of those whose patronage and power can effect so much towards its progress in this country. The claims of Sir John Goss to the title conferred upon him need not here be enumerated. Both personally and artistically he has so thoroughly won the esteem and admiration of the musical world, that no mark of distinction was necessary, even in his retirement, to recall to mind the many services he has rendered to art and artists during a long and laborious professional life. As a State recognition of these services, however, it cannot fail to be in the highest degree gratifying, both to the recipient and his musical brethren; and we have now only to express an earnest hope that he may live for very many years to enjoy the honour which he has so worthily earned. Sir Robert Prescott Stewart, Mus. Doc., who has been knighted in Dublin, holds a reputation which fully entitles him to the position he has attained. He has long been known as one of the most accomplished musicians of the day; and in Dublin he not only takes high rank as a composer, but since his appointment as University Professor, his public lectures have amply attested his deep study of the art to which he has devoted his life. Several prizes for composition have been won by him in competition at various times: and it is understood that he has been chosen as the representative of Irish Music at the Festival to be held at Boston during the present year. In the active pursuit of his profession, therefore, there can be little doubt that time will but deepen our sense of his worthiness to hold the distinctive title with which he has been invested.

BACH'S JOHANNES PASSION.

A performance of this most interesting Oratorio—the first that has ever been given in England—took place at the Hanover Square Rooms, on Friday morning, the 22nd ult., in aid of the restoration fund of St. Anne's Church, Soho. The work derives interest from the great success that has of late attended its companion composition, the Passion according to St. Matthew, set by the same greatest of masters, and its introduction to our public was an occasion that must be regarded as important in musical history. An analytical comparison of Bach's settings of the two Gospel narratives would far exceed the space at present command, so these remarks must be limited to the performance, which, as a whole, merits high praise, although it was attended with most unfortunate circumstances. From illness and from other causes, two of the principal singers who had been announced were unable to appear; these were Miss Julia Elton and Herr Stockhausen, whose places were filled at the briefest notice by Miss Dones and Mr. Thurley Beale. It was indeed an arduous task to undertake, without such length of study as would give perfect familiarity, music of the complication, the total unlikeness to what we are accustomed to hear, and the embarrassing nature that belongs to this work—the embarrassment lying in the fragmentary structure of the recitative, wherein the part of Jesus enters often with a single ejaculation; difficult as was their duty, however, the two vocalists acquitted themselves with remarkable credit. In the air, "It is finished," Miss Dones proved her musicianship, and made so pleasant an impression that her name will no longer be unknown. Mr. Beale, it must be owned, was not always quite correct, which is matter of little wonder in one who had received his difficult part on the very morning, and who sang without a rehearsal; but, on the other hand, he read the part with great intelligence, and declaimed many of its very significant passages so as to convey, and even to enforce their deep meaning. To notice now those who were prepared for the performance; Miss Banks warbled sweetly the single piece for soprano, "I follow thee also," an air that derived peculiar effect from its organ accompaniment, which has many melodic features of interest and divides attention with the voice part. The Rev. Charles Harvey and Mr. Charles Wade were blameless in the recitatives belonging to the parts of the officer Pilate and Peter; and to Mr. Arthur Wade (son of the rector of St. Anne's parish) belongs very high praise for the distinct enunciation and the highly dramatic manner with which he declaimed the very long and most difficult part of the Evangelist, giving to it great variety of colouring. It is not enough to class this gentleman's performance with those of the other vocalists, for, as it was more trying, his success in it merits more consideration; the close of the recitative which tells how Peter "went forth and wept bitterly," was sung with true pathos, and that which describes the rending of the Temple veil, with energy as appropriate. Mr. Wade was not so successful in the songs, but it would be wanton to complain where there was so much of merit. Mr. W. S. Hoyte (organist of All Saints, Margaret Street) sustained the organ part most admirably; this is not the mere filling up of the orchestral score which is all that is for the organ to perform in some other works of the class; it is often conspicuous and sometimes has the sole accompaniment in the rhythmical pieces, and in the recitative it is left alone with the voice, discharging the duty assigned usually to the pianoforte in the presentation of the Matthew Passion, and to the violoncello and double bass in the works of Handel; its effect was an improvement on both of these, even on the former, but this might have been still better had the chords been less constantly sustained in the recitative; high praise is due to Mr. Hoyte, and is freely awarded. The choir proved careful training on the part of their excellent choirmaster, and some zeal on the part of the vocalists. With Mr. Joseph Barnby lay the main responsibility of the entire performance, and to him belongs the main honour; it is only they who know the practical difficulty and the technical peculiarities of the music that can do justice to the conductor of this work in their esteem, but they must have observed his worth and be ready to accord him its full credit. It is to be regretted that the great length of the composition necessitated the omission of several pieces, but yet this was judicious, for the effect would have been damaged of what was given, had there been more than could be understood on a first hearing of music so grave, and in a manner so little known as that in the present oratorio.

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC AT WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

On Tuesday the 26th ult. Bach's sublime setting of the "Passion" (S. Matthew) was for the second time introduced into the Service at Westminster Abbey. Upon the vast congregation assembled this solemn and deeply religious music created a feeling of reverence for the sacred nature of the subject which it illustrates, beyond the power of words, however eloquently uttered, to produce. The choruses throughout were rendered not only with unerring precision, but with a true appreciation of the text, the Chorales especially, creating an effect which can never be realised in a secular building. It may be mentioned, too, that the fine chorus, "O man, thy heavy sin lament," which immediately precedes the sermon, was sung, and thus the intention of Bach was perhaps more thoroughly carried out than on any former occasion. The whole of the bass music was excellently given by Mr. Thurley Beale; and the tenor part was sustained by Mr. W. H. Cummings in that careful and conscientious manner for which this vocalist has so long been celebrated. As on previous occasions, he made a profound impression by his rendering of the words "Peter went out and wept bitterly" and the subsequent recitative "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me." The alto solo "Alas, now is my Saviour" was sung by Master Smith, and the pathetic air, "Have mercy upon me, O Lord" (the violin obbligato exquisitely played by Mr. Pollitzer) by Master Self, both with remarkable precision and justness of intonation. These young gentlemen are choristers in Norwich Cathedral, and testify to the admirable training the boys of this choir receive at the hands of their master, Dr. Buck. The orchestra was complete in every department. Mr. C. S. Jekyll presided at the organ, and Dr. Stainer at the harmonium (again kindly lent by Messrs. Cramer and Co.). Mr. Barnby under whose able direction the music was placed, conducted with much skill and judgment. An eloquent sermon highly appropriate to the occasion, was preached by the very Reverend the Dean, who took for his text portions of the 38th, 39th and 42nd verses of the 26th chapter of S. Matthew's Gospel.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

Herr Brahms's pianoforte Concerto, which was given at the Saturday afternoon concerts, on the 9th ult., as usual, caused a divided opinion on the merits of this exponent of the music of "Young Germany." The "Adagio" is unquestionably the most popular movement; but there is much excellent and effective writing throughout the work, the appreciation of which, we think, will grow with a more intimate knowledge of the school to which the composer adheres. Miss Baglehole (a young student of the Royal Academy of Music, and pupil of Mr. W. H. Holmes) attacked the enormous difficulties of this concerto with a confidence extraordinary in one who can have had but limited experience in playing before the public, and displayed a firm touch and executive power which augurs well for her future career. An interesting item in the programme of the 16th ult. was J. S. Bach's "Suite" for orchestra, in D, which was excellently played; and at the same concert Herr Joachim's "Hungarian Concerto" was performed by the composer with extraordinary success. Some good vocal music has been given during the month; but the orchestral works continue to be the real attraction of these concerts.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The sixtieth season of this Society commenced at St. James's Hall on the 20th ult., with, we are glad to find, an increased subscription, consequent no doubt upon the removal to a locality where a popular as well as an aristocratic audience can be appealed to. The Symphony in D, of the late Mr. Cipriani Potter, was welcome as a thoroughly artistic work and as a complimentary tribute to one of England's most accomplished composers. The instrumentation of this Symphony is masterly in the extreme, and may be profitably studied by those who delude themselves into the belief that effect is gained by redundancy of scoring. The other orchestral works were Mendelssohn's Scotch Symphony, Beethoven's Overture to "Leonore" (No. 1), and Weber's Overture to "Der Freischütz," all of which went well, under the steady baton of Mr. W. G. Cusins. Herr Bagheer made a highly favourable first appearance as a violinist, the more creditable seeing that Herr Joachim played at the same concert. He is a brilliant and confident performer, and both in Tartini's "Trillo del Diavolo" and the "Duo concertante," of Spohr (with Herr Joachim) elicited warm and deserved applause. Madame Peschka-Leutner (from Leipsic) displayed a fine voice and dashing style of execution in Spohr's Scena, "Tu m' abbandoni," but we should like to hear her again before pronouncing upon her capabilities. Madame Patey was the other vocalist, and created a marked effect in Gounod's popular sacred song, "There is a green hill far away."

THE ORATORIO CONCERTS.

At the seventh concert, on the 5th ult., Handel's "Israel in Egypt" was performed with the excellent additional accompaniments of Mr. G. A. Macfarren. Unfortunately a sudden attack of hoarseness prevented Mr. Sims Reeves from appearing, and his place was effectively supplied, under the circumstances, by Mr. Kerr Gedge, who sang "The enemy said" with much earnestness and care, but with an obvious nervousness which the audience had the good taste to sympathise with. The other parts were ably filled by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Emily Spiller, Miss Helen D'Alton, Mr. Whitney and Herr Stockhausen. In the air "Thou didst blow," Madame Sherrington elicited well deserved applause; and "The Lord is a man of war" was given by Herr Stockhausen and Mr. Whitney so admirably as to create a genuine enthusiasm with the audience: indeed we have never heard so perfect a rendering of this duet, and there can be no question that a repetition of it would have been insisted upon had the conductor for a moment wavered in his resolution to abolish encores at these concerts. The choruses severely taxed the powers of the choir; and the utmost credit is due to Mr. Barnby for achieving such results, considering the short time he can have for preparation between the performances. The "Hailstone," "He led them through the deep," "Moses and the children of Israel," and "I will sing unto the Lord," were sung throughout with the utmost precision and intelligence; and in the fine chorus "But as for His people," the various gradations of tone were admirably preserved. The eighth concert took place on the 19th ult., when a very fine performance of the "Messiah" was given, the principal vocalists being Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Annie Sinclair, Madame Laura Baxter (in place of Miss Julia Elton, who was indisposed), Mr. Sims Reeves and Mr. Whitney. The excellent singing of Madame Sherrington and Mr. Reeves in this Oratorio is too well known to need more than a record that we never heard either vocalist in better voice; but it is due to Madame Baxter to say that, called upon at a short notice, she acquitted herself on the whole with much credit; nor can we pass over the finished rendering of "Why do the nations" and "The trumpet shall sound" by Mr. Whitney (the latter having the powerful aid of Mr. T. Harper's trumpet obbligato) without according unqualified praise to an artist who is rapidly taking foremost rank as an exponent of sacred music. A good word must also be said for Miss Sinclair, who gave the air "How beautiful are the feet" with so much purity of style and unaffected expression as to elicit the warmest applause. It is needless to say that the utmost justice was done to all the choruses; for it was evident at the first performance of the work this season, that great attention had been paid by the choir to the choral effects intended by the composer, even at the expense of disregarding the many conventionalisms which are so often repeated without question. The "Hallelujah," "For unto us," "All we like sheep," and "Glory to God" were particularly worthy of commendation. At both these concerts Mr. Barnby conducted, and Mr. F. A. W. Docker presided at the organ.

MR. HENRY LESLIE'S CONCERTS.

At the second concert, on the 15th ult., the production of Carissimi's Oratorio "Jonah" was an event of the utmost interest. Everybody who knows anything of the history of music is thoroughly acquainted with the name of Carissimi; but few persons, we imagine, had ever thought that, but for the absence of modern orchestral colouring, one of his works would in the present day almost pass for a modern sacred composition. The secret of this is that Carissimi was an innovator, who, instead of copying old forms, relied upon his own genius for the mode in which his ideas should be expressed; and thus he has served as a model for the many great men who have followed him. Handel, and even Bach, must have been well aware of the incalculable services rendered to sacred art by their predecessor, for it was impossible to listen to the noble double chorus, "And there was a mighty tempest," without being reminded of the gigantic creations of the same type in "Israel in Egypt;" and our recent familiarity with Bach's Matthew "Passion" music proves to us how many of his short choral pieces are moulded on the plan set by Carissimi. Beautiful, too, and thoroughly modern, are the narrative recitatives connecting the principal pieces; and the pathetic air for the tenor, "Just art Thou, O Lord," (finely sung by Mr. Maas), is a model of pure sacred writing. We sincerely hope that we have not heard the last of "Jonah." It is good we should be occasionally reminded that when the grand old composers wrote for voices, they wished those voices to be heard. A glance at the scores even of Handel will show us how much our "additional instruments" have obscured the effect originally intended; and although it may be possible that modern ears may require modern orchestration, it is desirable that we should occasionally "try back" to see whether we are not departing too widely from the works which delighted our ancestors. Mr. Leslie deserves the utmost credit for presenting us with this valuable specimen of old art; and we sincerely hope that its reception will stimulate him to proceed still further in the same path; for when we consider the many treasures still lying unheeded, it is strange indeed that we should content ourselves with modern imitations of them, simply because they are modern. The choruses in "Jonah" were admirably sung; and Miss Ellen Horne, Madame Poole, Mr. Maas (of whom we have already spoken), Mr. Henry Regaldi and Mr. Chaplin Henry, did the utmost justice to the solos. Mr. J. C. Ward presided at the organ, and Mr. J. G. Calcott at the pianoforte, both with a true appreciation of the duties allotted to them. The choral pieces in the miscellaneous part comprised an excellent performance of Sir John Goss's "Thanksgiving Anthem," Bach's Motett, "The Spirit also helpeth us," Schubert's 23rd Psalm, for female voices (remarkably well sung), and a selection of Madrigals. The solo vocalists were Mr. Sims Reeves (who gave "Deeper, and deeper still," and "In native worth" with his usual effect), Misses D'Alton and Sophie Ferrari; and Herr Joachim played in masterly style the two Romances of Beethoven, the second in response to an enthusiastic encore, and Spohr's "Andante," from the 9th concerto.

THE PAREPA-ROSA OPERA COMPANY IN AMERICA.

FROM A CORRESPONDENT.

That very shallow truism, "nothing succeeds like success," is in everybody's mouth. To make money, no matter how, seems to be the fundamental principle of commercial life, and in the "model republic" every man or woman, and consequently, alas! every artist must be governed to a certain extent by a trading spirit to be able to "get on,"—nay, even to make the gifts of nature or the results of culture properly appreciated and rewarded. A felicitous combination of artistic sentiment with pecuniary sharpness is a phenomenon which contradicts the doctrine of affinity; but the really astonishing career of Mr. Carl Rosa as operatic manager and musical director in America, sufficiently proves the existence of such a phenomenon. A genuine artist by instinct, no less than by education, Mr. Rosa venerates the works of the great masters; and, I am sure that the production of such operas as "The Marriage of Figaro," "Oberon," "Don Giovanni," "Der Freischütz," "La Gazza Ladra," and "Der Wasserträger," most of which were first introduced by him to the American public in a complete form and in the English language, has afforded him pleasure of a higher and purer kind than any derived from mere monetary profit. But while exhibiting an ardent desire to raise the standard of public taste, diplomatic skill of the readiest and surest kind has never for one moment been wanting. In a word, Mr. Rosa's administration, regarded as that of a man having at heart the interest of the true artist, dealing with a people still very inexperienced with respect to good music, and under the necessity of making certain concessions even for the sake of art, has up to the present been the most energetic and prudent I know of. His present season of English opera, which commenced last October in New York, has been from the first brilliantly successful. Equally fortunate has been German opera, with Herr Wachtel as the "star" under Mr. Rosa's management, and at this very moment the New York Academy of Music is crowded nightly from pit to dome for the performances of England's greatest baritone, Mr. Charles Santley, whose services our enterprising director was "smart" enough to secure in spite of many competitors. Nor is this all, for no sooner was Mr. Santley made fast by contract, than Mr. Rosa announced a season of Italian opera (to follow the English opera) with a "star combination," including Madame Parepa-Rosa, Miss Adelaide Phillips (a famous contralto here), Herr Wachtel, and Mr. Santley. The Italian season does not begin until April next, and yet fourteen hundred dollars worth of tickets "went off," as subscription, at the box-office directly after the first advertisement appeared. "Nothing succeeds like success" certainly, but Mr. Rosa's managerial career is dignified by a genuine artistic purpose, which raises it far above that of the ordinary dealer in music.

Madame Eugène Oswald, a pianist of whom we have often expressed our favourable opinion, gave a concert at St. George's Hall, on the 1st ult., with unqualified success. Madame Oswald's powers were severely tested in compositions by Beethoven, Schumann, Liszt, &c., and she also performed Weber's duet for pianoforte and clarionet, with Mr. Lazarus, which proved a highly attractive item in the programme. The concert-giver was assisted in the instrumental department by Herr Pollitzer (violin), and Mr. Paque (violoncello), and the vocalists were Miss Blanche Reives, Miss Estelle Emrick and Mr. H. Griffiths.

The Brixton Choral Society gave an excellent performance of Haydn's "Creation," at the Angell Town Institution, on the 4th ult. The principal vocalists were Miss Katharine Poyntz, Mr. Montem Smith (who created a marked effect in the air "In native worth"), and Mr. Lawler. The choruses (under the able direction of Mr. Lemare) were on the whole satisfactorily rendered; and Mr. John Harrison presided at the organ with much care and judgment.

The North London Vocal Union gave a performance of Haydn's "Creation" on the 12th ult., in the Theatre of the Islington Literary and Scientific Society. Miss Susannah Cole, Mr. Thurley Beale, and Mr. Horatio Perry were the soloists, all of whom were highly effective. The energy and precision with which the choruses were rendered left nothing to be desired, and great credit is due to the members of the Society and their talented conductor Mr. Glenn Wesley. The pianoforte playing of Mr. Alfred Newton, the accompanist to the Society, was one of the principal features of the concert. The performance elicited frequent applause from a numerous and appreciative audience. The Vocal Union, although only established about six months, already gives indications that it will soon take a prominent position amongst the principal choral Societies.

Mr. Kingham, the blind pianist, gave his first concert in the Westbourne Hall, Bayswater, on Tuesday evening, the 12th ult., assisted by Miss Ellen Glanville, Mdlle. Leonè, Miss Ashton, Signor Rocca, Mr. Frank Elmore, &c. Madame Dryden was highly successful in two harp solos; and Miss Glanville being encored in Macfarren's song, "The beating of my own heart," gave in answer Bishop's ballad, "Love has eyes." Mr. Kingham played both his pieces in admirable style. The concert was well attended.

We are requested to state that Mr. J. E. Naylor has resigned the appointment of Organist and Choirmaster to St. Paul's Church, Great Portland Street.

A performance was given at Brunswick Chapel, Dorset Square, on the 15th ult., in connexion with the opening of a new organ, built by Mr. Thos. A. Jennings, of Hackney Road. Miss Ellen Glanville, Miss Julia Derby, Miss Smith, Mr. Thos. Morgan, Mr. Travers and Mr. Corbett sang several solos and concerted pieces. Mr. Geo. Amphlett Morgan accompanied on the organ, and also played a selection of compositions, displaying to great advantage the fine tone of the instrument.

Mr. W. R. Bourke gave a lecture, entitled, "An Evening with Mendelssohn," to the members of the St. Barnabas Mutual Improvement Society, in the School-room, Harvest Road, Holloway, on Monday the 18th ult. After giving a general outline of Mendelssohn's life, as gathered from his letters, the "Recollections" of Devrient, the "Reminiscences" of E. Polko, and a tract by Sir Julius Benedict; the lecturer traced his musical career, and by the favour of some lady and gentlemen amateurs, and Mr. R. Stokoe, organist of St. Barnabas, introduced a great number of illustrations, comprising selections from his instrumental works, vocal pieces from "St. Paul" and "Elijah," and part-songs. Miss Baillie, Miss Chadwick and Mr. Stokoe were the pianists. Mr. Bliss and Mr. Baillie respectively performed on the violin and violoncello, and Miss Norman and Mr. Pakeman were the principal vocalists. The audience, a large one, by its hearty and frequent applause, testified its approbation both of the lecture and the musical illustrations.

The North London Choral Association gave a concert on the 27th February, at the Town Hall, Shoreditch, before a crowded audience. The Oratorio was Mendelssohn's "Elijah," which was thoroughly successful. The principal vocalists were Miss Matilda Scott, Miss Julia Derby, Miss E. Rycroft, Miss Le Martaine, Mr. G. Carter (Westminster Abbey), and Mr. R. De Lacy (St. Paul's Cathedral), all of whom gave much effect to the solo music, "Hear ye Israel," by Miss Scott, "If with all your hearts," by Mr. Carter, and "It is enough," by Mr. R. De Lacy, being especially worthy of mention. The chorus and band numbered nearly 400 performers. All the choruses were given with commendable firmness and precision. Mr. Bassett conducted with his usual ability.

The very excellent Chamber-Music Concerts, under the direction of Mr. Henry Holmes, are progressing with much success at the Hanover Square Rooms. At the first concert, on the 21st February, Mr. Walter Macfarren's performance of the pianoforte Sonata in F, of Paradies, was an interesting item in the programme. Although the "music of the future" may be steadily progressing, it is good that the "music of the past" should not be forgotten; and we shall be always glad to find the resuscitation of these works placed in such able hands. The reception of the Sonata proved that Mr. Macfarren had not miscalculated the taste of his audience. During the five concerts of this series we are promised some of the best specimens of the chamber-music by Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Spohr, Mozart, Schumann, &c.; and amongst the works of living composers, we are glad to find the name of E. Silas.

The Prospectus of the Royal Italian Opera for the present season (which commenced on the 26th ult.) has an interest apart from the promises of well-known works, to be supported by well-known artists, for Wagner's "Lohengrin" is the opera placed first in the list, as if indeed it were anticipated by the spirited lessee that the trial of this remarkable composer by an English jury would prove the most important event of the session. Lovers of musical progress will unite in thanking Mr. Gye for thus boldly challenging the opinion of his subscribers and the public on the "music of the future;" and although, as a mere commercial speculation, it may be a question whether it would not have been more politic to produce "Tannhäuser" first, it is certain that at least an intellectual minority will prefer to sit in judgment upon the later development of the composer's style. The principal characters in this work will be entrusted to Madlle. Marianne Brandt, Herr Koehler, and Madlle. Emmy Zimmermann, all fresh comers to this country. An entirely new opera, called "Gelmina," composed by the Prince Giuseppe Poniatowski, in which Madame Adelina Patti will sustain the principal part, and "Il Guarany," an opera by Carlo Gomes, a young and comparatively unknown musician, produced with much success the year before last at Milan, are also promised. Amongst the works to be given during the season, one of the most attractive will undoubtedly be Auber's "Les Diamants de la Couronne," the part of Catarina by Madame Adelina Patti, and we are also glad to find that Cimarosa's sparkling little opera. "Le Astuzie Femminili," which was so well received last year, is included in the list. In addition to the names already mentioned the vocalists who will make their first appearance in England are Madlle. Albani (from the Pergola Theatre, Florence), Madame Saar (from La Scala, Milan), Signor Cæsari (also from La Scala), Signor Dodoni (from the Imperial Opera, St. Petersburg), and Herr Verenrath (from Copenhagen). The services of Madame Patti, Madame Pauline Lucca, Madlle. Mathilde Sessi, Madame Miolan-Carvalho, Madlle Scalchi, Madame Monbelli, Signori Nicolini, Graziani, Naudin, Bagagiolo, Cotogni, and Monsieur Faure have also been secured; and the stage management will be, as usual, under the experienced direction of Mr. A. Harris. Signor Vianesi and Signor Bevignani divide the post of conductor; and so, unfortunately, this department will be the weak point in one of the strongest programmes of arrangements yet issued from this establishment.——The Prospectus of Her Majesty's Opera, Drury Lane, promises us two works which will certainly be welcome to the subscribers, although we cannot agree with Mr. Mapleson in calling them "novelties." Cherubini's "Les Deux Journées" (which is to be produced under the title of "I Due Giornati") has never before been heard in this country, but Auber's "Les Diamants de la Couronne" is well-known here, although the libretto has not yet been forced into the Italian language; and we much regret that at both Opera houses (where the work is announced for this season) such a desecration of the composer's intention should be compulsory. The new comers at Drury Lane are Madlle. Carlotta Grossi (from Berlin) Madlle. Marie Roze (from the Opéra-comique, Paris), Signor Rota (from the Imperial Opera, St. Petersburg), and Signor Meo (from the Imperial Opera, Moscow). The company also includes Mesdlles. Christine Nilsson, Marie Marimon, Titiens, Colombo, and Baurmeister, Madame Trebelli-Bettini, Signori Fancelli, Vizzani, Rinaldini, Sinigaglia, Mendioroz and M. Capoul, Signori Agnesi, Borella, Zoboli, Casaboni and Foli. Sir Michael Costa retains his post of conductor and director of the music, the principal violin being in the able hands of M. Sainton. The season is announced to commence on Saturday the 6th inst. * * * Second editions of Prospectuses, with additions, are novelties, but this year we have had one from each house. In these we are informed that Mr. Mapleson has engaged the great tenor, Signor Italo Campanini, Miss Kellogg (who is already well known here) and Madlle. Victoria Bundsen (from Stockholm); and that Mr. Gye has added Madlle. Alvine Ohm and Madlle. Caroline Smeroschi to the list of singers mentioned in his former announcement.

Mr. Cusins's Oratorio, "Gideon," was performed for the first time before a London audience at St. James's Hall on the 14th ult., the principal parts being ably filled by Miss Edith Wynne, Madame Patey, Mr. W. H. Cummings, Mr. Hilton and Mr. Lewis Thomas, and the choruses being rendered with commendable precision by the St. Thomas's Choral Society and other Metropolitan Societies. We have already expressed our favourable opinion of this work on its production at the last Gloucester Festival; and have now only to record its complete success on the present occasion. Madame Patey gave the song, "The eyes of the Lord," with so much real pathos as to secure a demand for its repetition, a compliment which was likewise awarded to the clever Battle Chorus, "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon," Miss Bertha Griffiths and Madlle. Arnim rendered important service in the music assigned to the two Angels; the harp part was admirably played by Mr. John Thomas, and Mr. Hamilton Clarke presided with much judgment at the organ. The orchestra, under the leadership of Herr Straus, was everything that could be desired. Two MS. Part-songs for female voices by Dr. Ferdinand Hiller were excellently given in the miscellaneous part by some pupils of the Royal Academy of Music, the second of which, "May Bells," a charmingly fresh composition, was encored. An interesting "Festlied," by Meyerbeer, was also performed for the first time in this country, the solos being sung by Miss Edith Wynne, Mr. Cummings, and Mr. Hilton, and a highly artistic performance of Weber's Concertstück, by Mr. Cusins, elicited the warmest applause. Signor Randegger accompanied the trios on the pianoforte, and conducted the Concertstück.

A private concert was given on the 24th February, at 202, Camden Road, by Miss Maclean and Miss Tranent, two young artists, who before entering on their professional career, were desirous of gathering around them a circle of friends upon whose opinion they could rely. That the verdict of this somewhat critical jury was favourable may be confidently inferred from the demonstrations of approval with which the efforts of the concert-givers were greeted throughout the evening. Miss Maclean (who has, we understand, studied under Sir Sterndale Bennett) is a pianist with a firm touch, a rapid finger, and a delicacy of expression which cannot fail to be appreciated in a public concert-room. Her performance of Sir Sterndale Bennett's Sketches, "The Lake," "Millstream" and "Fountain," elicited much applause, the last being re-demanded; and in three of Handel's pieces, and Dussek's Sonata in B flat, for pianoforte and violin (in which she was joined by Herr Louis Ries) she was also highly successful. Miss Tranent has a pleasing voice, and sings with expression and refined feeling. Bishop's "Tell me, my heart," and Gounod's "Quando a te lieta" were well selected as a contrast of style; but we should have been glad to hear her in some vocal pieces of more importance. Herr Ries played Beethoven's Romance in F with his usual skill; and some songs by Mr. Lewis Thomas completed a very enjoyable little concert.

The Birmingham Amateur Harmonic Association announces three concerts, commencing on the 14th May, the programmes of which will include Beethoven's "Mount of Olives," Handel's "Esther," Hummel's Third Mass, and Sullivan's Cantata, "On Shore and Sea." As last year the Association produced Handel's "Jephtha," for the first time in Birmingham, and the forthcoming performances will comprise many works but little known, it will be seen that these concerts are deserving of the highest patronage.

The 157th Annual Festival Dinner of "The Most Honourable and Loyal Society of Ancient Britons," was celebrated on St. David's Day at Willis's Rooms, St. James's, under the presidency of the Right Hon. Lord Justice James. The object of the festival is to promote the interests of the Welsh Charity School, situated at Ashford, Middlesex. During dinner a selection of music was played by the band of the Royal Artillery, including "The Carmarthen March," the "Glamorgan March," "March of the Men of Harlech," &c. The grace after dinner "Clod i Dduw a fyddo byth, am ei vaeth vendithion 'oll," arranged to an ancient Welsh air by Mr. Brinley Richards, was sung with great effect by the choir, conducted by Mr. William Davis (Mynorydd). After the chairman had given the health of the Queen, "God save the Queen" was sung by Miss Edith Wynne, Miss Severn, and choir. The next toast, "The Prince and Princess of Wales and the rest of the Royal Family," was followed by "God bless the Prince of Wales," by Miss Edith Wynne and choir. During the evening Miss Edith Wynne sang two Welsh songs and, with Miss Severn, a new duet, "Home" (Brinley Richards). The children of the Welsh School marched round the room, preceded by the Stewards wearing hats with the plume of the Prince of Wales, and sang with much simplicity and expression "the Ode," written expressly for the occasion by Sir Francis Doyle, and adapted to an ancient Welsh melody, "Llwyn On," by Mr. Brinley Richards. A list of subscriptions, amounting to over £800, was read by the Secretary. At the request of Mr. Brinley Richards, three Welsh harpers had been commissioned by Lady Llanover to take part in the musical programme. The performance of Gruffydd, Harper Extraordinary to the Prince of Wales, was greeted enthusiastically by the representatives of the Principality. The scene of three Welsh harpers playing melodies of their country upon the National Triple-stringed Harp was the "sensation" of the evening—such a thing as three Welsh harps playing together never having been witnessed at such a meeting, and it will be long remembered by all present. The list of music contained "St. David's Day," sung by Mr. John Evans, and the "March of the Men of Harlech" (chorus) arranged by Mr. John Thomas. The musical performances were under the direction of Mr. Brinley Richards, who (with all the ladies and gentlemen mentioned) gave his gratuitous services in aid of the Charity.

We are glad to find that Dr. John Stainer has been appointed Examiner in Music for the Oxford Local Examinations of this year.

At Mr. J. Baucutt's Musical and Literary Entertainment, given in the Pimlico Rooms on the 11th ult., Miss Emily Hardy created a marked effect by her excellent playing of two solos on the violin, both of which were unanimously redemanded. Mr. E. Foot, who has a good tenor voice, was also encored in the song, "Let me like a soldier fall." The Misses Hardy acquitted themselves creditably in a pianoforte duet, "The Men of Harlech," and Miss Bullock's song, "The lover and the bird," was rendered with much expression. The other performers were Messrs. Baucutt, Stein, Turck and Linging. Messrs. W. D. Sumner and Brownlow Baker were the accompanists. The entertainments will be given every Monday till the end of this month.

The members of the Christ Church, Newgate Street, Voluntary Choir gave their third annual concert on the 5th ult., at the Literary Institution, Aldersgate Street. Several part-songs and choruses were well sung, especially Mendelssohn's "Three love scenes," from the well-known "Open Air Music." Solos were given by Misses Butterworth, Hadow, Harding, Parker, White and Tetlow, Messrs. Salmon, Grew and Robinson. The Quaver Glee Union also contributed some highly effective concerted pieces. Mr. J. T. Cooper conducted very ably, and Miss Cooper accompanied in a musicianly manner. A duet concert-overture, "The Merry Wives of Windsor" (composed by Mr. Cooper, and performed by him and Miss Cooper), was rendered in excellent style, and warmly applauded. Miss Davis played a pianoforte piece by Blumenthal, with much brilliancy; and altogether the concert was a great success. We must not forget to mention Mr. Gordon's clever rendering of Rossini's buffo song, "Largo al factotum," which obtained an enthusiastic encore; and that a new sacred song, by Mr. Cooper, entitled "Saved" (composed for the recovery of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales), was also greatly appreciated.

Two of Mr. Willem Coenen's "Three Chamber Concerts of Modern Music," announced in our last number, have been given at the Hanover Square Rooms during the past month. The work which undoubtedly created the greatest interest at the first concert was Brahms's pianoforte Quartet in G minor, op. 25, certainly one of the best specimens of the modern German school that could have been selected. There can be little doubt that this composer is rapidly making his way in this country; and the thanks of all lovers of musical progress are due to Mr. Coenen for affording us the means of fairly judging his merits. The quartet was played to perfection by Messrs. Coenen, Wiener, Zerbini, and Daubert. The "Novelletten," for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, by Niels W. Gade, are exceedingly favourable examples of a writer whose compositions appear to have been strangely neglected. They were all received with much pleasure by the audience, especially the second number. The vocalist was Miss Sophie Ferrari, who was highly successful both in Schubert's "Adina," and Henry Smart's "White and Red." A composition of Brahms was again the principal feature at the second concert—a Trio in B, op. 8, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello—which was excellently performed by Messrs. Coenen, Wiener, and Daubert, and received with decided favour. With much of the mysticism of the modern German school, there is real, solid and effective writing in this work, the "Scherzo," especially, being exceedingly attractive, even to a thoroughly popular audience, and the Finale, starting with a melodious and well-marked subject, showing much constructive power and knowledge of the capabilities of the instruments. Schumann's Quartet, op. 41, No. 3 (well played by Messrs. Wiener, Amor, Zerbini, and Daubert) is a good example of a style which scarcely yet has won the sympathy of an English audience. The "Adagio" contains some really beautiful points, and the "Finale" is vivacious and effectively written for all the instruments; but a feeling of weariness creeps over the listeners during the progress of some of the movements; and, as a whole, the work is disappointing. Chopin's Sonata in G minor, op. 65, for pianoforte and violoncello, is a composition which, despite much merit, we care not to hear again. The "Scherzo" and "Finale" are perhaps the best movements; but we know many works by English composers which would have been much more welcome; and, unless indeed Mr. Coenen has strictly limited himself to the presentation of modern German compositions, it seems strange that some opportunity for contrast should not be afforded. The duet was played con amore by Messrs. Coenen and Daubert. Miss Sophie Ferrari was unavoidably prevented from appearing, and her place was supplied by Madame Emmeline Cole, who sang "Nobil Signor" and "My mother bids me bind my hair" with much success. At both concerts Mr. J. B. Zerbini was an excellent accompanist.

The members of the St. Pancras Choral Society gave their annual concert on the 20th ult., under the direction of their able conductor, Mr. George Heins. The principal vocalists were Miss Kirby, Miss Burrows, Miss H. L. Yeo, the Misses Hunt, Messrs. Blaby, May and F. Champneys, all of whom were highly effective in the solo music allotted to them. The vocal concerted pieces were exceedingly well given by the choir; and a pianoforte duet, by Miss Hancock and Mr. R. T. Heins, and a pianoforte and violoncello duet, by Miss E. Scadding and Mr. Scadding, received much applause.

At the series of concerts given by the St. John's Wood Society of Musicians, under the direction of Mr. Lansdowne Cottell, Sir Julius Benedict's "Hymn to Faith," Macfarren's Cantata "May-Day," and several other standard works have been given with much success. We hear highly favourable accounts of the solo singing of Miss Alexandrina Dwight and Mr. W. Charles Bell, both of whom are said to possess excellent voices. At these performances Mr. Cottell is assisted in the pianoforte accompaniments by Mr. Carl Weber.

It is with much regret that we record the death, on Sunday, the 17th ult., at his residence, Foregate Street, of Dr. Philip Henry Williams, at a comparatively early age. The late lamented gentleman was the son of Sir John Bickerton Williams, who practised for many years as an eminent lawyer in Shrewsbury, and was the author of the "Life of Sir Matthew Hale," and other valuable works. Dr. Williams has long been physician to the Worcester Infirmary, and, on his resignation, owing to severe indisposition, the governors, at their annual meeting on the 1st ult., adopted a resolution expressing great regret for the loss of his valuable services, conveying their thanks to him for the same, and also electing him one of their consulting physicians. In addition to the benefits he conferred upon this institution, Dr. Williams has been eminently useful to the cause of the Clergy Charity by the able manner in which he filled the office of honorary secretary to the Worcester Musical Festival; and it is mainly owing to him that the two last festivals have been so brilliant and successful, his untiring courtesy, discretion, and musical knowledge rendering his services in this capacity really invaluable.

On Friday, the 15th ult., the members of the Greville Choral Society met to rehearse Handel's Oratorio "Samson," after which they presented their hon. conductor, Mr. E. Sharp, with a very handsome timepiece, as an acknowledgment of his valuable services.

The concert of Mr. Walter Bache, which took place at the Hanover Square Rooms on the 21st ult., was remarkable as an illustration of the sincerity with which a real artist can sacrifice what the world would call a "good position" for the sake of promulgating the principles in which he has faith. Mr. Bache is an excellent pianist; but we do not think that either his playing or that of the fine orchestra engaged on the occasion will convert England to a belief in the real worth of Liszt's music, of which perhaps his "Fest-Klänge," No. 7 of the "Poèms Symphoniques," and "Les Préludes" (both of which were performed at this concert), are fair specimens. Mr. Bache has, however, a right to a hearing; and we are bound to say that he spares neither exertion nor expense in the presentation of the Abbé's works.

The 149th Festival of the three choirs of Worcester, Hereford, and Gloucester will be held in Worcester on Sept. 10th, and three following days. The services of Mdlle. Titiens, Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Madame Patey, Mr. Santley and Mr. Lewis Thomas, have been secured, and other important engagements are pending. The band and chorus will be in every respect thoroughly efficient. A specially interesting feature of the festival will be the production of Bach's "Passion Music" (S. Matthew); the "Messiah" and "Elijah" will, of course, occupy their usual prominent places in the programme; and on Thursday morning a selection will be given. There are eighty-four stewards, comprising the nobility and gentry of the county. The sermon will be preached by the Rev. Canon Barry. The members of Mr. Done's Festival Choral Society have commenced their rehearsals, under Mr. Done's personal superintendence. For some time before his decease, Dr. Williams had been compelled, on account of failing health, to resign the post of Secretary, the duties of which he has for many years ably and zealously discharged, and the Rev. T. L. Wheeler, senr., has been appointed to that office. From his long connection with the city, his practical knowledge in respect of all matters incident to the Festival, and his well-known business tact and ability, the Rev. Mr. Wheeler is specially qualified to occupy this important and onerous position, and the committee are fortunate in having obtained so worthy a successor to the lamented Dr. Williams.

Sir John Goss.—At a meeting of professional and amateur musicians, recently held at the College of Organists, it was determined to invite the new Knight to a public banquet at the Albion on the 17th inst., on which occasion Mr. W. H. Gladstone, M.P., will take the chair. In consideration of the long and useful service rendered by the veteran composer to musical art, it has been proposed to raise a fund for the purpose of endowing a musical scholarship, or presenting some suitable testimonial to him on his official retirement from St. Paul's Cathedral. Gentlemen desirous of assisting should communicate with Mr. R. Limpus, hon. secretary, 41, Queen-square, Bloomsbury.

Te Deum. Composed for Her Majesty's Thanksgiving at St. Paul's Cathedral, by John Goss.

It is but seldom that it falls to the lot of any composer to have such an opportunity of making his art prove herself the handmaid of all that is sacred and devotional, as was offered to the author of this work. At any time, the gratitude of a mother for the mercies vouchsafed to her son, must touch the heart; how then can words describe the feelings of those who were present at the impressive ceremony when a mighty nation like one family, joined its royal head, in thankfulness. When the first notes of this Te Deum rang through the fine dome of St. Paul's, thirteen thousand hearts were longing to answer to their echo. But on the other hand, it must not be forgotten that the Muse which inspires musical genius is not always obedient to a sudden call, and may even show a petty perverseness in wilfully absenting herself when hurriedly invoked, and the means of performance may not be adequate to the conceptions of the author. Mr. Goss had but a short notice that he was required to compose this Hymn and an Anthem, and his resources were limited to two hundred voices, accompanied by an unfinished organ, and he was also required to keep its length within small bounds. But we are glad to say that this setting of the great catholic hymn needs no apology. The opening is bold and broad in effect, the modulations being simple but well contrasted. The Ter Sanctus is given in the relative minor (B minor), passing at once to a chord of G major, thence to a most effective chord of E flat fortissimo at the words "Heaven and earth are full of the majesty of Thy glory," by the end of which sentence the original key D has again asserted itself. The succeeding words are given out on a subject for imitation, and the parts are interweaved and added to each other in the excellent manner which characterizes so many of Mr. Goss's church compositions. A charming contrast to the previous [illegible] of music is given at the words, "Also the Holy Ghost the Comforter." Some cleverly handled discords at the words "the sharpness of death" lead into the key of B major at the words "Thou didst open the kingdom of heaven." The return to the key of D from that of B, at "Thou sittest at the right hand of God," is one of the finest effects in the work. From the entry of the words "We believe that Thou shalt come to be our judge," a continuous flow of thoroughly sweet melodies leads to the bolder rendering of "day by day." The prayer "Vouchsafe, O Lord," leads by a crescendo to a forte passage, "O Lord, in Thee have I trusted," the remaining few words bring the Te Deum to a close—piano. As a whole this setting must be pronounced well worthy of its author's reputation; as in his other works, the vocal part-writing is of the smoothest kind, the use of the Antiphonal singing well chosen, and the modulations are carefully contrasted. It must be a matter of regret to all church musicians, first—that Mr. Goss was limited to a length of 12 or 13 minutes; next, that a full orchestra was not placed at his disposal. Under such circumstances, no doubt a more important work would have come from Mr. Goss's pen; but with all the disadvantages which surrounded the author, he has produced a composition which will doubtless for many centuries be used not only as a special, but ordinary, embodiment of the thanks of devout worshippers.

"The Lord is my strength and my song." Anthem, composed for Her Majesty's Thanksgiving at St. Paul's, by John Goss.

This work, the fellow-production of the one above reviewed, is full of bright and cheerful themes, many of which are given out by the voices in unison, some being afterwards used as foils to other equally pleasing counter-melodies. Short solo passages are given to a bass voice from time to time. The re-entry of the main theme is preceded by a most effective, though not strikingly novel use of the chord of the diminished seventh; and the imitation towards the close of the first movement to the words "Open me the gates of righteousness," is beautifully written. After this, a short Largo, of the choral-recitative type, leads to the tune "Gotha," with an organ-bass moving in counterpoint, to which a few bars are attached as a coda to the words, "Hallelujah. Amen." This Anthem, as a whole, is more noticeable for its brightness than its depth; and if it does not add largely to its writer's fame, it will at least show that his pen has not forgotten its power and need not cease its labours, although its master is about to retire from the more fatiguing physical work of his profession, laden with the good-wishes and respect of all his brother labourers.

I cried unto the Lord. Anthem, for five voices, by C. Swinnerton Heap, Mus. Doc., Cantab.

This is a charming piece of music in which the effects are divided between the voices, the organ, and the combination of both. The harmony is fresh and pure, and the voice parts are all melodious. There are some admirable instances of the use of the augmented 5th on the 3rd of the minor key, sometimes accompanied with the 3rd only, sometimes with the 7th also—the inversion of the suspended 9th—a combination as unhackneyed as it is beautiful. The unexpected introduction of the chord of D♭ at page 8 on the word "heard," gives it appropriate force in the sentence "and He heard me," and by the simplest means, induces a bold and very striking modulation into the key of A♭. In more than one place, the voices are left without accompaniment, in some of which the organ gradually enters, first with the pedals only, then with the duplication of an inner part in a higher octave, and in others the organ has alternate phrases with the singers. It might be wished that the figure of arpeggios, that accompanies the opening strain for tenors only, had been alluded to in the course of the piece, since it would have formed a pleasant relief to the uniformity of the motion, and would have seemed to embrace the whole in one prevalent idea; the figure is resumed however towards the end, and happily reminds us there of its good effect at the beginning. The anthem is dedicated to Dr. Monk of York, of whom, it is said the young Cambridge doctor was once a pupil, and it reflects equal credit on master and scholar.

Praise the Lord, and call upon His Name. An Anthem, composed by Sir George Elvey, Mus. Doc., Oxon.

Here is a broad, bold, brilliant, and dashing specimen of vocal writing, to which the organ part gives support, and, in some felicitous places, contrasts, the latter especially, in the setting of the word "Hallelujah" towards the end. Its fresh frank effect springs mainly from its generally diatonic character, a style fromwhich the youngest writers of the day are too prone to wander, and the consequence in their writing is—where indecision and confusion of key are escaped—sentimentalism in feeling and technical weakness. The beginning and end of the piece are in 3-4 time, and are separated by an episodical verse or semi-chorus in common time; seemingly the same quickness should prevail throughout, and the variation of measure and even of idea makes not truly a change of movement. An oversight of the talented composer is the similar motion to 8th—E A in the top part with G♯ A in the bass—page 6, bar 4 from end, which has as bald an effect as that ancient worthy must have felt who made the law against the progression. Again, there is a little inadroitness in the use of the chord of D, the tonic, after that of E minor, the supertonic, at page 9, score 2, bar 4, where the effect would have been clearer, had the chord of E been retained with D, and perhaps F♯ also, as passing notes. The organ part is written, so to speak, for the pianoforte, having notes below the range of the organ key-board, and having full chords (after the manner of old pianoforte arrangements), so low that the goodness of their effect on the pianoforte is questionable, but on the organ cannot be believed in for a moment; doubtless the author intends that the organist should alter, at his discretion, passages wherein such impracticable notes occur, so as, at least, to have the true bass notes at the bottom; but an author should be thankful to have the notes played that he does write, and is injudicious to rely on the discretion of anyone but himself to fit his music for his means. The free and frequent use of the high G and F for the sopranos, and their iteration with syllables, almost restricts the use of this very telling anthem to cathedral choirs, or to those where trained ladies' voices are engaged; for these extreme notes can scarcely be sung, and certainly not with good effect, by ordinary boys; it is to be wished that it may often be heard where it can be heard to best advantage.

The Organist's Journal. Nos. 13 and 14. Arranged by Frederic Archer.

Mr. Archer is doing organists a kindness by producing in a form suitable for voluntaries, in these two numbers, four movements from the Symphonies of A. Hesse. Those in No. 13 are from the second and third Symphonies. The first of these is an Andante con moto, in G, of a somewhat light character, but very pleasing and graceful; the second a Larghetto, in G, of a style more likely to be generally acceptable to church organists than that of its predecessor. Those in No. 14 are arrangements of Hesse's fifth and sixth Symphonies. The first is a very beautiful Larghetto in A flat, the themes of which are treated most tastefully; the second, an Andante in C, which is simple but very effective. The whole of these exhibit Hesse's well-known powers of smooth part-writing and sweetness of melody. It is to be hoped that Mr. Archer will not be tempted (as so many arrangers are) to overload his arrangements with difficulties in an attempt to include simultaneously too large a number of orchestral effects. These numbers are generally free from this fault, and easy; but on p. 176, while the feet are engaged, and the left hand is holding a chord in the centre of the swell manual, a melody is given to the great organ, accompanied by scales on the choir. Organists who do not possess very carefully constructed manuals or very long fingers will be at a loss here, unless indeed Mr. Archer intends a very long nose to come to the rescue.

Sonata in D minor. Originally written as an Organ Duet by Gustav Merkel. Arranged as a Solo by Frederic Archer.

A very excellent composition has here been saved from the oblivion which now deservedly shrouds those rumbling concatenations of sounds called organ-duets. The first movement, Allegro moderato, is thoroughly classical in style, although relieved, by frequent introduction of arpeggio passages, from a classical stiffness. The feet are by no means allowed to lie idle, frequent batches of semi-quavers rousing their energies. The second movement, Adagio, is remarkably sweet, and will doubtless be a most useful excerpt for general purposes. The finale, Allegro con fuoco is a short introduction, and a very brilliant Fugue, well worthy of careful study. The whole Sonata is in Merkel's best style, and will form an admirable work for either church or concert-room use.

Original Compositions for the Organ. By Frederic Archer. No. 4.

This work consists of an Introduction, Air with Variations, and Finale Fugato. The Introduction is well conceived and impressive, and the Air is very melodious, although not of an uncommon type. In the Variations will be found some excellent part-writing, and every opportunity of displaying the various pleasing combinations or contrasts of registers, of which an organ is capable. The effect produced by giving out the Fugue subject in the relative minor of the key of the Air is fresh and good, and the whole work may be pronounced quite equal to any of the previous numbers.

Si vous n'ouvrez votre fenêtre. Chanson. Paroles d'Alex. Dumas (fils).

Perchè piangi? Cantilene. Words by Corrado Marchese Pavesi.

La Fauvette. Chanson. Paroles de Millevoye.

Composed by Ch. Gounod.

Had M. Gounod a reputation to make, instead of to support, there can be little doubt that these songs would have brought him into notice, even without the kindly aid of any vocalist to introduce them in a public concert-room; for simple as they are, there is an almost indescribable charm about them which cannot fail to render them popular, both with musical and non-musical listeners. The first song commences with an appropriate little symphony, the words being wedded to a bright theme, so delicately and artistically handled, and so thoroughly in sympathy with the refined verses of Dumas, that the music seems almost to have grown spontaneously with the poetry. We can scarcely imagine a more perfect union of words and notes than the concluding two lines:

"Si vous n'ouvrez votre fenêtre
Au dernier mot de ma chanson."

In the Cantilene, "Perchè piangi?" the accompaniment asserts itself somewhat more, but only to aid and heighten the effect of the melody, for M. Gounod loves the voice, and uses the instrument, not as its enemy, but as its loving and tender friend. A placid subject expresses the verses with remarkable fidelity, the pathos of the phrase, "Perchè piangi?" and the repetition of the name, Ella, first on the dominant of C minor, and then on the dominant of B flat minor, being points of interest which (as we have remarked in the first song) seem to be naturally evolved from the words. "La Fauvette" is a highly characteristic song, the subject, commencing with an effective pedal bass, being so thoroughly tuneful as to ensure its popularity, even with those who are not keenly alive to the many beauties both of harmony and accompaniment, which would render it additionally attractive to an artistic ear. The effect of this little chanson is gained by the simplest means, but simplicity is the power of genius. The title-pages inform us that the first two songs on our list are also published with English words. This will be a real boon to many vocalists; but the music so thoroughly reflects the original poetry that we should counsel all who can do so to sing them in the untranslated form.

Six Songs. Written by the Rev. Richard Wilton, M.A. Composed by the Rev. Sir Fredk. A. Gore Ouseley, Bart.

1. Oh where.
2. Under the snow.
3. Home.
4. The Sparrow.
5. The Resting-place.
6. Apple blossoms.

On the title-page of these songs it is stated that they are "adapted for Sunday use"; and certainly, although not specially applicable to that day, it is impossible to imagine verses more thoroughly in consonance with a purely devotional feeling. As might be expected from the well-earned reputation of the composer, the music appeals more to educated musicians than to that motley assembly of listeners known by the name of a "mixed audience," for it is replete with grace and elegance throughout. That in parts the voice is too much in subjection to the pianoforte is a fact which can scarcely be doubted; and it remains therefore a matter for earnest consideration whether this growing practice of modern composers should or should not be encouraged. In this place, however, we shall not attempt to debate the question, but content ourselves with saying that the six songs before us are highly favourable specimens of this school of composition. No. 1 has a melodious theme, with a flowing arpeggio accompaniment, which is so purely written as never to interfere in any part with the voice. No. 2, commencing in A minor, is in our opinion the best of the set. The music throughout is in true sympathy with the words. The change into the tonic major is extremely effective, and the final phrase, "Under the snow," finishing on the low A, followed by the plagal cadence in the accompaniment, are points of extreme beauty. Vocalists who have acquired the difficult art of throwing true expression into their words may ensure a success for this song. No. 3 is excellently written, and contains some bold modulations, but is somewhat overladen in the accompaniment, and seems scarcely as spontaneous as No. 4, which has a flute obbligato effectively woven in with the pianoforte part, and is indeed a highly meritorious composition. Commencing with a passage for the flute, in E minor, the imitative points are so well sustained that, instead of a song with accompaniments, it may in truth be called a Trio for voice, flute, and pianoforte. The introduction of the major key on the words "What tho' my life with wintry cares be vext," is extremely happy. No. 5 is a good contralto song (again in the minor and major), the accompaniment to which is appropriately subdued; and No. 6 has an effective theme with a more important pianoforte part, which will require careful playing to realise the intended effect. We can scarcely doubt that this collection of songs will command an extensive sale; but for vocalists who may be led by our cursory notice to prefer any particular one, we may say that they are all published separately.

Now eve upon the hill descendeth. Barcarolle, for two voices. The English words by H. W. Dulcken, Ph.D. Composed by Camille Saint-Saëns.

There is perhaps no particular reason, from the derivation of the word, that a Barcarolle should be in $\frac{6}{8}$ rhythm, but at all events we are so much accustomed to see them thus written, that we feel almost surprised when we find the one before us moving throughout in four crotchets in the bar. The composition is said to have been expressly intended for Madame Viardot Garcia and Signor Gardoni, and opens with a long tenor solo, followed by one for the contralto, both of which are extremely attractive. The voices afterwards move chiefly together in melodious phrases, the continuous triplet accompaniment against the even voice parts having an excellent effect. The original words, commencing "Le soir descend sur la colline," have been sympathetically translated by Dr. Dulcken.

Silenzio. An Italian Cavatina, for Tenor or Soprano voice, with Violoncello (ad libitum). Composed by Giulio Roberti.

The violoncello part, which has much prominence in this song, will greatly lose of its effect when played by the left hand on the pianoforte; but the composition has sufficient merit to recommend itself, more especially to tenor singers, even with a pianoforte accompaniment. In parts the melody seems to halt, but the phrases are extremely vocal; and if not quite as spontaneous as some other works we have seen by the same composer, there can be little doubt that it may be made highly effective by a vocalist who has dramatic feeling as well as vocal power at command. The lengthening out of the word "Silenzio," from the part marked "più lento," at the conclusion of the song, with the descent of the violoncello in octaves, pizzicato, is a point worth attention, and we like also the effect of the voice ending on the fifth of the key-note chord. The composition is appropriately dedicated to Mr. W. H. Cummings, but it is not stated whether it has yet been heard in public.

The Streamlet. Part-Song for four voices (with Soprano or Tenor solo). Words by Frederick Pratt, Esq. Music by William J. Young.

A melodious and carefully harmonised part-song, which, without calling forth any special mark of eulogy, we can conscientiously recommend to Choral Societies desirous of increasing their store of available compositions of this class. The solo, in the subdominant, is somewhat common-place, and we think it a pity that Mr. Young does not tell us whether it is intended for a tenor or soprano voice. Surely the composer ought to know best what he means, and having once expressed his intention, executants are bound to abide by his decision.

Metzler and Co.

Valse, pour Piano, sur l'opera de Gounod "Irene" (Reine de Saba), arrangée par F. Burgmüller.

The arranger has here done the utmost justice to M. Gounod's tuneful themes, and has produced a piece which cannot fail to please. The "Chœur des Sabéennes" makes an effective introduction to the Waltz, and the passages are written throughout so that much brilliancy may be gained by a small expenditure of labour. We should be glad to see operatic Fantasias always entrusted to such experienced hands.

Ashdown and Parry.

Allegretto Grazioso, for the Pianoforte. By T. Mee Pattison.

We select Mr. Pattison's little sketch from a formidable pile of more pretentious music, because instead of an attempt to express "Drooping flowers," "Fleecy clouds," or "Roaring cataracts," it is a simple piece, simply written, and relying solely upon its intrinsic merit for success. The subject is graceful, but not very striking, a character, however, being obtained by the figure in the accompaniment, which is continued until the change of key. The second theme, in A flat, has a somewhat patchy effect, and might indeed as well belong to any other piece, but it is melodious, and the moving bass is a relief from the eternal arpeggio accompaniment which so effectually covers the want of contrapuntal power amongst so many of our modern composers.

Will it be no, Sweet? Will it be yes? Song. Words by Mortimer Collins. Music by Josephine Williams.

We have already favourably mentioned Miss Williams's vocal music, and have now pleasure in drawing attention to the ballad before us as a good specimen of a pure and healthy melody. We like the song so much that we cannot but regret that the C in the voice part, proceeding upwards to D (between the 5th and 6th bars), should have been accompanied with the fundamental basses of the subdominant and dominant. In all other respects the harmonies are unexceptionable.

Duff and Stewart.

Esmeralda. Bolero. Composed by W. C. Levey. Arranged for the Piano by Brinley Richards.

Mr. Richards has made a most attractive piece of this clever Bolero; indeed, although only an arrangement, it has sufficient merit to recommend itself both to players and listeners as a well-considered composition for the pianoforte. The theme, in $\frac{3}{8}$ rhythm, is extremely effective as a contrast.

Scherzino, pour Piano, par Teresa Carreno.

There is decided merit in this piece. The principal theme is harmonised with much purity, and the quaver accompaniment between the bass and melody is well sustained and effective. In the second subject, for the left hand, we should have preferred a change in the harmony for the E, as it jars, to our ear, against the key-note triad; but this is a minor defect in a well-written composition, the author of which we should have known to be no tyro had we even not seen "op. 36" upon the title-page.

B. Morley.

The Firefly. Composed for the Pianoforte by F. V. Kornatzki.

A sprightly sketch, requiring but a small amount of executive power, but showy enough to make the majority of listeners imagine it to be difficult. The principal theme is graceful, and the second subject, although somewhat wanting in interest, sufficiently serves the purpose of contrast. We have seen better pieces by this composer, but much worse from others; so that, on the whole, the "Firefly" has a right to a good word. By the way, if we must have a little French upon an English piece of music, we should like to have that little good. Will Herr Kornatzki tell us what he means by calling his composition a "Morceaux brillant"?

Duncan Davison and Co.

Tarantella for Piano. By Horton C. Allison.

As "Third Edition" is placed prominently upon the title-page of this Tarantella, there can be little doubt that the public has at least returned a favourable verdict upon its merits. That sterner critics will endorse this verdict can scarcely be questioned: for even allowing for the comparative ease with which this rhythmical dance-music can be thrown off by an experienced writer, there is sufficient vitality in Mr. Allison's composition to make it stand forth from the overwhelming mass of such pieces published in the present day. The first subject, in A minor, is a genuine Tarantella theme, and throughout the piece the interest is never allowed to flag, the coda especially, marked Prestissimo, being extremely brilliant and effective. The sequence of keys, however, sounds somewhat strange: A minor, E major, C major, A minor, E major, A major, do not seem to mix pleasantly; but the introduction of the subject in the tonic major at the conclusion is exceedingly happy. Pianists with elastic fingers will find some good practice in this piece; and its reception at Mr. Allison's "Recitals" amply testifies as to its effect upon the listeners.

William Morley.

Come, pretty Swallow. Ballad. The Poetry by Edward Phillips. The Music by Richard Limpus.

An unpretentious ballad, harmonised and accompanied with appropriate simplicity, but with the skill and feeling of a musician. We should only take exception to the chord of C major being followed by the chord of B major, between the 6th and 7th bars of the song, the effect of the similar motion in the accompaniment being to us somewhat unpleasant; but it is a small fault in a very pretty song.

O trill again, sweet Nightingale. Words by Walter Egerton. Music by W. F. Taylor.

We like Mr. Taylor's melody better than his harmony. When songs are sent for review composers must bear to hear facts; and one which we should impress upon the author of this song is that when the melody falls from C to F (as it does between the 11th and 12th bars) the bass must not be F, B♭. Other inaccuracies may be pointed out—such as the doubling of the leading-note in the 6th bar of the symphony between the verses—but enough has been said unless we overstep those limits of kindly criticism within which we desire to remain.

Weekes and Co.

Songs for Children. Words written by Rev. Charles Kingsley, George Macdonald, Adelaide Procter, and Rev. Dr. Neale. The music composed by William Boyd.

Both words and music in this collection are as simple as juvenile songs should be; and we are glad to find that the authors of the verses have not thought it necessary to manufacture pathos by writing about "tiny graves" and "empty cradles," after the pattern set in the majority of "moral" books for the young. We cannot understand why the names of those who have contributed the words are only placed before some of the songs, especially as many which are anonymous are amongst the best in the book. The melodies are all pleasing; and the accompaniments throughout are those which small hands can readily grasp.

Lovely Flowers. Song. The words by G. Washington Moon, Esq., F.R.S.L. The music composed by Horton C. Allison.

Mr. Allison has wedded an appropriate melody to some verses far above the average of most of the modern "words for music." The effect of the four crotchets in a bar, moving almost throughout with the voice is somewhat heavy; but as the song is evidently carefully written in every part, it is obvious that the composer does not agree with us. With this passing expression, therefore, of the impression produced upon ourselves, we commend "Lovely Flowers" as a fair specimen of unpretentious vocal music.

Lamborn Cock and Co.

There's nae luck about the house. Morceau de Concert, pour Piano; par Arthur O'Leary.

A showy and effective concert-piece which will well repay the trouble of the practice it inevitably demands. The passages require agile fingers and a perfect command of the instrument; but they lie well under the hand, and present no eccentric difficulties which are likely to deter good pianists from attempting to master them. In the second variation, the rapid arpeggios played with the right hand, whilst the melody is carried on with the left, have an excellent effect; and although all the embroidery used in this and other portions of the piece have been common property for many years, the materials are handled with an artistic feeling which cannot fail to recommend the composition both to performers and listeners.

The Cuckoo. Chamber Trio. Words by Felix Mansfield. Composed by Dr. Ferdinand Hiller.

This Trio, written for three equal voices, is a highly favourable example of Dr. Hiller's refined vocal compositions. Although simple in structure, it is thoroughly artistic in treatment, the passages of imitation giving a vitality to the part-writing which cannot fail to make it interesting to a mixed audience. The vexed question of the Cuckoo's song has been decided by Dr. Hiller in favour of a minor third. Why will this tiresome bird continue thus to cause a diversity of opinion amongst musical composers?

My Heart and Lute. Song. Words by Thomas Moore.
My dearest, thou hast bound me. Song. The English version by Miss J. E. Lewin.
Composed by Halfdan Kjerulf.

There is a decided character about both these songs (by a composer who is new to us) which should attract vocalists who are weary of the conventional melodies and harmonies of the day. There is a considerable difficulty in throwing off all recollection of a tune which we have for many years connected with words; and perhaps the reception of "My heart and lute" may not be so cordial on this account as the worth of the setting before us should entitle it to; but the expression of the words is so exceedingly good (a remarkable fact, considering that the composer is evidently a foreigner), the melody is so purely vocal, and the accompaniments are so musician-like throughout, that it is fairly entitled to an impartial examination of its merits by all who are really seeking for good music. The second song, "My dearest, thou hast bound me," we like even better than the first one. The principal theme is extremely melodious, and the conversational bits between the voice and pianoforte evince an artistic feeling which cannot but make us look forward with interest to future works by so accomplished a writer.

Original Correspondence.

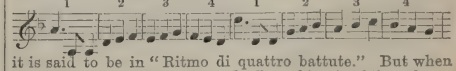
Sir,—I must apologise for having allowed a number of your journal to have been published without answering Mr. Archer's strictures on the "additional final bar" theory of Chant-form. On reading his letter I was very much disappointed to find that, after demolishing the theory broached in my article to his own satisfaction, all he had to suggest in its place, was the adoption of a system suggested by me but discarded at once. He says, Why not add a bar at the beginning? and, that such an addition will practically carry out Dr. Elvey's system. But as a matter of fact, the addition of a bar at the commencement of a chant, so far from "practically carrying out" Dr. Elvey's system, practically destroys it, as the preface to his Psalter will prove. The sentence from the "Elijah," which I gave in my article as being analogous to the form of a chant, if the second reciting note belongs to the first half, Mr. Archer gives with the accents placed where he considers they occur in a chant, and as the effect is absurd, believes he has proved me wrong, or in other words, because his conclusion cannot logically be deduced from my premises I am wrong. Reasoning in such form as this, is playful but not edifying.

Again, Mr. Archer converts a fragment of Mendelssohn into a jumble (or as he calls it "a curious plagiarism"! What does he mean?) and then kindly says he has done it on my principles. I think I may safely relieve Mr. Archer from the self-imposed duty of attempting to enunciate or illustrate my principles.

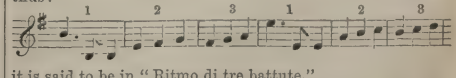
Mr. Archer defines a phrase as "an incomplete idea," but I find the following in Dr. Marx: "A melody which is constituted into a whole, by having a determined beginning and end, is called a Phrase." Upon weighing Mr. Archer and Dr. Marx as rival authorities, I am inclined to adopt the definition of Bernhard Marx, and shall continue to use the word phrase as I have hitherto done.

Allow me also to say that the word arsis is just as intelligible if written in italics as in Greek letters, especially as Mr. Archer ignores the Greek accents, and that the word desis is altogether unintelligible to me as a musical term. This word can only signify a bind, a musical sign unknown to the Greeks. If Mr. Archer intended thesis by desis, he should have written to you, and have pointed out the misprint in your last number. It surely does not take him a month to distinguish between δ and θ. But the word occurs twice in his letter in the form desis (without accents). I do not see how he could intend thesis, because, as every tyro at music knows, arsis signifies accent; thesis, non-accent; and yet Mr. Archer speaks more than once of the strong-marked desis (?) or accent which he believes falls on the reciting-note.

I consider it my duty to apologise to your readers for here stating that there is no cross-rhythm in the scherzo of the choral symphony. The case is simply this—when the theme is of four bars in length, thus:



it is said to be in "Ritmo di quattro battute." But when it is used with one bar lopped off, making it of three bars, thus:



it is said to be in "Ritmo di tre battute."

The former is practically in compound common time, the latter, in compound triple; the former consisting of four groups of three notes; the latter, of three groups of three notes. The two rhythms are kept perfectly distinct, the latter appearing for 57 bars, and containing nothing but the three-bar theme repeated 19 times.

From the study of this scherzo, "the symmetrical form of a chant becomes "at once apparent" to Mr. Archer! I confess I see no grounds for a comparison.

Mr. Archer finds great fault with me because I said that the Psalms are "prose cut into slices." I can only say that the daily Psalms which I have sung from my youth up were translated into English prose. Mr. Archer is more fortunate, I presume, in being in the habit of using a translation into English verse, "whose spirit and sentiment move congenial with the movement of the music," as his esteemed essayist says. I, on the contrary, find it difficult to get even the words of the Gloria Patri to "move congenial with the movement of the music." Lastly, Mr. Archer finds fault with me early in his letter for proceeding to found an argument on the hypothesis that 4 and 3 make 7. What can I say in reply to this serious charge?

I am, Sir, yours faithfully,
JOHN STAINER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

DEAR SIR,—I have been much interested in Dr. Stainer's paper on the form of the Anglican Chant, and in Mr. Archer's reply, and I beg you will kindly permit me to say a few words on the subject. Probably the most marked feature in recitative is the, I may say, total disregard of the time (as written); this, I think, will generally be allowed to be a feature in chanting as well, the long-sustained reciting note often occupying the time of from 3 to 4 bars of the regular beat—the effect being (minus accentuation) the same as this:—

thus, in my opinion, constituting the chant as strictly recitative. Mr. Archer, in his letter, exemplifies a "plan indicated by Purcell:" this "plan" is (in effect) to be heard in most of our parish churches. Take the words commencing the Venite, sung to the reciting note, and written thus:—

O come, let us sing un - - to, &c.

This is generally sung, if not played, thus:—

O come, let us sing un - to, &c.

a pause being plainly discernible to the most casual listener after the word "sing." Trusting you will favour me by inserting these few remarks,

I am, &c.,
ALFRED BROWN.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

DEAR SIR,—I should like, if you will allow me, to say a few words in reply to the letter of "Clericus" in your last number; and first, as "Clericus" seems still unconvinced that organists are not paid for church duties at the same rate as for secular work, I would tell him that though my own salary is an exceptionally good one for the duties I have to perform, yet, were I paid at the same rate by time as for teaching (I leave concerts out of the question, as not being ordinary secular work) I should receive at least £25 more than I do; and this difference would be much greater in the case of an organist receiving only £40 or £45 per annum. And here I must observe that the assumption on the part of "Clericus" that a guinea per quarter is fair pay for an hour a week is altogether beside the mark, as a country organist of any standing will receive two guineas, and an organist in town from that to three guineas for a quarter's lesson of one hour each—would "Clericus" like to preach a sermon per week for a guinea a quarter?—so that the assignment of a guinea per pupil for lessons, and the condescending manner in which "C." allows that a good organist deserves £45 a year, savour strongly (though perhaps unintentionally) of gratuitous insult. Again, while I am ready to admit that the performance of many organists is far from what could be desired, both in playing from book and in extemporising, still in these points we are certainly not a whit worse than the clergy themselves; for is it not a very rare thing to meet with a clergyman who can read the lessons, or a sermon in a style that would even be tolerated in a secular lecture? while to hear a clergyman attempt an extempore prayer or address, is, as a rule, fully as painful—and to a general congregation far more so—than the consecutives and other musical faults so playfully alluded to by your correspondent. I cannot but think therefore that a thoroughly competent clergyman must be accounted quite as much a "laudable exception" as a thoroughly competent organist. It is my opinion that a great deal of the incompetence so much to be deplored in organists is to be attributed to the desire of many clergymen and others to get the music done cheaply. I remember a case in point. On an organist of my acquaintance requesting an increase of salary, his vicar demurred, saying he knew several persons who would be glad to play for nothing; when my friend's somewhat pertinent reply was, that he knew several people who preach for nothing, "and do it very well too." But, seriously, if the clergy expect organ-playing to be "cheap" they must not be surprised should it occasionally be "nasty." Also, with regard to the question of position as regards teaching; undoubtedly an organist in the country obtains a certain amount of teaching as organist, but in or near town this is not so, as people frequently engage professors "from London" in preference to the local organist, even though he may be a clever man. This I know from personal experience, as well as from that of others. I think that much may be done to improve our position by a hearty support of the "College of Organists," and also that the "Organists' Lists," suggested by Clericus, would be a most excellent thing; but, if not intruding too much on your space I must take vigorous exception to the idea of Cathedral præcentors (who with one or two brilliant exceptions are merely second-rate amateurs with very little real knowledge of music) giving lectures on Church Music, and inviting educated musicians to come and be edified. Cathedral organists might be entitled to a hearing, but præcentors—really the idea is too absurd to be entertained for a moment. Believe me, dear Sir, yours very truly,

March 11, 1872. B. O.

P.S.—May I be allowed to echo the hope of your reviewer that now "Tannhäuser" is published in this country we may find a manager spirited enough to produce it. I for one would willingly travel a couple of hundred miles to hear it.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—I am glad to find that "Clericus" has at last given us an idea of what he considers a fair salary for a good church organist. If, as he says, I calculated the time I give to my church duty as so many one-hour pupils at a guinea per quarter, no doubt it would come to about £45 a year, but I believe he would have great difficulty in finding a professor of any standing who teaches on these terms. I have always found that two guineas per quarter may be taken as the average cost of music lessons in the provinces, and in London five shillings and seven and sixpence per lesson are very common charges. Of course, such organists as he describes would doubtless give lessons at a guinea per quarter, but he must not suppose that this is the recognized charge throughout the profession.

From motives of curiosity I have carefully calculated the time I give to my church, and I find that if I were paid at the same rate I charge for music lessons (two guineas per quarter) my salary would be, as nearly as possible, £95 a year. Now, although I have passed the only examination open to organists, and although my appointment is to one of the principal churches in a large town, I can assure "Clericus" I do not receive anything like the above sum.

He will no doubt reply that I am but one amongst many, and must not judge others by myself; but I contend that the great majority of organists are suffering under the same injustice, else why is the complaint of bad pay so general? Unfortunately no means at present exist whereby it can be ascertained whether organists are, as a rule, underpaid or not; but the publication of Organists' Lists, somewhat similar to Clergy Lists, as suggested by "Clericus," would quickly decide this point. After the admission made by "Clericus," that organists are justified in demanding as much from the church as they would from the general public, it is scarcely fair to allow anything for indirect advantages (supposing any exist) such as position, &c.

A few words as to the style of organ playing usually heard in churches. No doubt there are many performers holding church appointments who are not capable of efficiently discharging their duties; with reference to these I will only say that the clergy themselves are responsible for this: the power of appointment usually rests with them, and if an incompetent person obtains a situation, they alone are to blame.

In such cases it is the plain duty of the vicar to seek for an organist who is capable of rendering his portion of the service in a proper and efficient manner, even if he finds it necessary to increase the salary a little. But if "Clericus" means to infer that the great mass of organists are inefficient and unworthy of holding their appointment, I beg most emphatically to deny that such is the case.

We have unmistakable evidence that the art of organ playing in this country has made, and is making, rapid and substantial progress. New organs are constantly being erected in churches, and in many of our large towns an organ is to be found in the concert-hall on which performances are occasionally given. In addition to this we find composers turning their attention to a long neglected branch of art, and there is a plentiful supply of new organ compositions and arrangements, many being of extreme difficulty, and such as would not have been attempted by average performers a few years ago; furthermore, it would be impossible to find a period in musical history during which England possessed so many organists of acknowledged excellence as she does at the present time. With these facts before us it cannot fairly be said that organists, as a class, are incapable of discharging in a satisfactory manner the duties imposed on them.

In conclusion, we ought to thank "Clericus" for one or two valuable hints, more especially with regard to the publication of an Organists' List. This would form a valuable work of reference, both for the clergy and the profession. As to local examinations, the College of Organists has a board of examiners in many cathedral and other towns.

I remain, Sir,
Yours, faithfully,
A Fellow of the College of Organists.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—Pray allow a few remarks on Mr. Macfarren's able and interesting paper, "Oratorios in Church," which I will make as an earnest lover of music, and, not least, of Oratorios. Sacred music has a double object—God's glory and man's edification, and we must not ignore the first in seeking the last, nor do right save in a right way. I fully admit that an Oratorio reverently and carefully performed may most rightly be given in a Church; but it should be ever remembered Whose is that House. When the Oratorio forms part of Divine Worship, as the Messiah was performed at Horsham a few years ago, as Bach's Passion was last year given at Westminster Abbey, I think it is in place, and I gladly note Mr. Macfarren's testimony to the devout conduct of the congregation at the Abbey last Maunday Thursday. What offends devout and thoughtful people is the turning of a Cathedral into a mere large Concert-room for a great audience, with the stewards and purchased tickets and even more secular adjuncts. Having myself attended more than one of the Triennial Festivals I can aver with many people (I will not say with all), there is lamentable forgetfulness of the sanctity of the consecrated building, so that apparently irreverence is far more promoted than devotion.

This was the objection to the use of Worcester Cathedral first formed in 1865, by Lord Dudley (who had himself been a steward), but it was rather set aside by traditional prejudice and local interest, than fairly answered. Originally, I believe, the Festival, as instituted by Chancellor Bisse, was of far simpler kind—a "meeting of the choir"—and did not subordinate Divine Worship to a musical performance, however grand.

I should gladly see our Cathedrals and great Churches open at high Christian seasons for combined musical worship and edification, but I cannot allow the justice of the wish that Cathedrals may "fall to the ground, for it is of far less importance to keep them...as homes of a dead Service (!) than...for those Festivals...whereat men of all religious persuasions might meet." Surely the Divine Service is not "dead," though it may have been sometimes but coldly offered; nay! I would say that we cannot be too thankful that, save in the Rebellion, God's daily worship has been at least maintained in our Cathedrals, when so much neglected in our parishes, and has been preserved to our own days. And may it be ever offered, not for "men of all persuasions" to hear and criticise, but for good Christians to join in with heart and voice if they can; at least reverently listening themselves when the elevating and instructive strains of the Oratorio—a Musical Picture—are out-poured.

I am, Sir, your humble Servant,
Tunbridge Wells, March, 1872. M. A.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—Your remarks upon musical rhythm in the review of Mr. Calkin's organ works are very interesting to musicians; but allowing that in most cases the last note of a musical period should fall on the first beat of the bar, there are many instances where it would be wrong to obey this rule; and the fact of there being so many examples of the last note of the period falling on the third beat of the bar has not been owing either to carelessness or ignorance on the part of the composer, as no amount of twisting or adding to such refractory phrases will make them at once conform to the rule you have cited, and preserve their original meaning.

If you should think this worth inserting, it may lead to some correspondence upon a subject that is of great interest to musicians. Your obedient Servant,
Weybridge, 22nd March. Walter H. Sangster.

Brief Summary of Country News.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

Blackpool.—On Monday evening, the 26th February, the Blackpool Vocal Society gave the second concert of the season in the Assembly Rooms, Talbot-road, to a large audience. A selection of sacred music formed the first part of the programme, and included a portion of Mozart's Twelfth Mass, "See what love hath the Father" (Mendelssohn), duet and chorus, "O never bow we down" (Handel), and "Hallelujah" (Beethoven). The second part comprised a selection of secular songs, choruses, &c. The principal vocalists were Miss Poole, Miss Webster, Mrs. Maries, Miss Grindrod, Messrs. Birtland, Gardner, Kay, Waddington, Johnson, and Stanton; accompanists, Mr. Grindrod (pianoforte), and Mr. J. G. Wrigley, of Rochdale (harmonium); conductor, Mr. N. Dumville, of Manchester. The choruses were, on the whole, well sung, and reflected great credit on the conductor. Miss Grindrod in Sullivan's air, "Love not the world," and Mr. Stanton in Haydn's "Rolling in foaming billows," were highly successful; and Mr. Gardner received an encore for his singing of Loder's "Thanksgiving song." Jackson's glee, "The sisters of the sea," was also greatly applauded. The only instrumental piece was a duo for harmonium and pianoforte, by Ch. Gounod, "Hymne à Sainte Cecile," which was excellently rendered by Messrs. Grindrod and Wrigley. "God save the Queen" concluded the concert.

Bootle.—On the 12th ult., Mr. Charles Edward Horsley's Liverpool Ballad and Madrigal Company gave a highly successful concert in the Molyneux Assembly Rooms. The part-singing was excellent throughout, and Mr. Horsley's pianoforte solos were loudly and deservedly applauded. Miss Marie Arthur sang with much expression "With verdure clad," and Miss Nicholls in "O rest in the Lord," Mr. C. Wilson in the ballad "When other lips," and Mr. T. J. Hughes in the aria from Horsley's Joseph, "Oh that my head were waters," and a recit. and air, "Song of the Martyr," by Mr. Alfred Phillips (with a duo pianoforte and harmonium accompaniment by Mr. Horsley and Mr. W. J. Argent) were also received with much favour.

Cheltenham.—The national festival of the Principality was duly celebrated by a performance of Welsh music at the Assembly Rooms, on St. David's Day. Among the artists engaged were Mr. Cummings, Mr. L. Thomas, Mr. J. Thomas, Miss Megan Watts, Miss Annie Edmonds, and Ehedydd Cymru. In the first part Mr. L. Thomas was highly successful in the ballad "The Harp of Wales," and Miss Edmonds received much applause for her rendering of "The plaint of the Ring-dove," and also (in conjunction with Mr. Cummings) for the duet "The Summer storm is on the mountain." In the second part, Mr. Lewis Thomas obtained an encore for "The Men of Harlech," and in response he sang "Worth of true friendship," and the lady, Ehedydd Cymru, was loudly applauded in each of her solos. The national song, "St. David's Day," and "God save the Queen," brought the concert to a pleasant termination.

Chiselhurst.—The Woolwich Choral Society gave a performance of the Creation at the Town Hall, on Tuesday, the 5th ult., under the direction of Mr. Whomes. The vocalists were Miss Jones, R.A.M., Mr. Arthur Thomas, and Mr. Chaplin Henry; solo trumpet, Mr. Dearden. The performance was highly successful.

Cork.—The second concert of the Cork Musical Society was given on the 5th ult., at the Imperial Room, which was crowded in every part. The programme included a selection from Beethoven's Mass in C, the principal parts in which were excellently sustained by Miss Lambkin, Messrs. Harvey, Scott, Seymour, and E. Hackett. The "Benedictus," especially, was charmingly sung, and all the choruses were given with commendable precision and care. In the miscellaneous part, Miss Lambkin gave a highly successful rendering of Weber's "Softly sighs," and vocal pieces were also contributed by Mrs. Baily, Mrs. Empson, Miss Morgan, the Misses Corbett, Messrs. Harvey, Scott, and Hackett. Several orchestral pieces were excellently played, under the able direction of Dr. Marks; and a trombone solo by Mr. Dittrich created a marked effect with the audience.

Derby.—The Philharmonic Society gave a highly successful concert at the Lecture Hall, on the 19th ult. The orchestra, under the leadership of Mr. W. S. Woodward, performed with much effect the overtures to Zauberflöte, Stradella, and Preciosa. Mr. Chadfield was greatly applauded in Weber's Concertstück, and also played a solo on themes from Le Prophète with good executive power. The vocalists were Mrs. Bateman and Mr. Coulson, and both were received with warm and deserved applause, the former being encored in Kalliwoda's song, "Home of love," the clarionet obbligato to which was excellently played by Mr. Hall. The concert was ably conducted by Mr. W. W. Woodward.

Doncaster.—Mr. J. H. Eyre (choirmaster of the Parish Church, and director of the Choral Union) gave the last of a series of six entertainments for the winter season, on Monday, the 11th ult., when the Guild-hall was crowded to excess. The reader was W. E. Shirley, Esq., town-clerk, who expressed great pleasure in being allowed to take part in these interesting meetings. The vocalists were Miss Louisa Foster, Miss Bloomfield, Mr. Moxon, Mr. Eyre, and Masters H. C. and R. Thornsby and Lucas, three boys from the Parish Church choir, who have sustained important parts in each entertainment, in such a manner as to deserve special praise. Mr. Mager played a solo on the violin, and Mr. Booth presided at the pianoforte. The performance was highly successful throughout, and the audience dispersed with a feeling of regret that these entertainments have come to an end.

Dublin.—The proceedings of the St. Catherine's Choral Union were opened this year by a Lecture on Sacred Music, by the conductor to the Society, Mr. R. Pryor, the musical illustrations of which were effectively sung by the members. On Thursday evening, the 7th ult., the members gave their first concert in the Society's Rooms, Thomas's Court, before a large audience. The first part was selected principally from Haydn's Creation, the second being composed of secular songs, duets, part-songs, and choruses. Mr. Taylor, organist of St. Werburgh's (though evidently labouring under severe cold), was warmly applauded in his two songs, "Now Heav'n in fullest glory," from the Creation, and Reyloff's "Over the rolling sea." Master Pryor sang "Where the bee sucks," which was encored. The other principal vocalists were Miss Mahon, Miss Mills, Miss Malone, and Messrs. Woods, Green, Shea, Johnston, Mannering, Devine, Malone, and J. E. Field, all of whom were highly effective, the last named being the leading tenor and hon. sec. of the Society. Mr. Walker, organist of St. Andrew's, ably accompanied, and Mr. R. Pryor conducted.

Edinburgh.—The selection of music at Professor Oakeley's Organ Recital, on the 14th ult., was made almost exclusively in reference to the programme of the concert on Wednesday, 20th ult., of the University Musical Society. The exceptions were, firstly, the prelude and fugue in B flat, on the notes "B A C H" (H being German for our "B natural"), by the great composer whose name consists of these four letters; and secondly, the slow movement from the organ fantasia in C minor, by Berens. A large audience of students and others listened with the attention and appreciation so characteristic of these recitals. The pieces which seemed most to please were the spirited part-songs by Mendelssohn and Weber, the new Abendlied, by the Professor, which was much applauded, and the March from Athalie, peculiarly effective on the grand organ.

Greenock.—On the 26th February, the Greenock Orpheus Club gave a concert in the Town Hall, in aid of the funds of the Infirmary. The principal singers were Messrs. William and John Boyd, Currie, Methven, and Strickland, all of whom elicited much applause and several encores. Messrs. Middleton and Methven contributed two pianoforte duets, which were well received, and Mr. Poulter's performance on the organ was also greatly admired.

Leeds.—On the 19th ult., a concert, promoted by the Madrigal and Motet Society, was given in the Victoria Hall, in aid of the funds for the Leeds Medical Charities, and as a Thanksgiving for the recovery of the Prince of Wales. The programme contained Handel's Dettingen Te Deum, Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise, and a Thanksgiving Hymn by Mr. C. E. Horsley. On the whole, the choruses were well given. The solo singers had not much to do, but that little was well done. In the Lobgesang they had more prominence. Of Madame Rudersdorff nothing new can be said, for her powers in sacred music are well known. Miss Alice Fairman seconded her admirably in "I waited for the Lord," and Mr. Byron gave the recitatives in a manner which showed that he appreciated the words as well as the music. His singing of "Watchman, will the night soon pass?" was excellent. The organ playing of Mr. Dodds was of great assistance. Dr. Spark evidently has his heart in the work, and is to be congratulated on his success. It remains to be added that the performance commenced with the National Anthem, and that Mr. Horsley's hymn was encored.——At the Parish Church, on the Thanksgiving Day, a special Service was held at 12·30, when the Te Deum and Anthem, composed by Sir John Goss, were sung by the full choir. The prayers were intoned by the precentor, and the responses were sung to Tallis's festal setting. An appropriate address was given by the Rev. F. J. Wood, senior curate, after which the special Hymn, "O Thou, our soul's salvation," was sung by the congregation, which numbered about three thousand persons, including fifty of the local clergy, in surplices. The collection was in aid of St. Paul's Restoration Fund. At St. George's Church the same music was performed, under the leadership of Dr. Spark, organist of the church, and one or two other churches had special choral services in the evening.

Liverpool.—Messrs. Horsley and Thomas's Classical Recitals at Draper's Rooms are manifestly gaining in interest and in public support. The programme on the 2nd ult. included Beethoven's Sonata in A minor, and excerpts from a Concerto by Spohr, both for piano and violin. An interesting item in the programme was Moscheles' fine duet for two pianofortes, "Homage à Handel," which was admirably played in its original form by Messrs. Horsley and A. W. Borst. The vocalist was Mrs. Billinie Porter. Her selection comprised Sullivan's "Orpheus with his lute," a canzonet by Spohr, with violoncello obbligato, and a new song, "Alone with thee," composed for her by Mr. Horsley. The latter might be better described as a Scena, and, being in that form, afforded ample opportunity for the display of Mr. Horsley's power in the higher walks of his art. Mrs. Porter did adequate justice to the new work, and was, indeed, successful in all she undertook. The performance concluded with a trio by Mr. Horsley, performed by the author, assisted by Mr. Thomas and Mr. Haddock, a well known local violoncellist. The duties of accompanist were discharged by Mr. Wrigley.——The Third Subscription Concert of the Philharmonic Society, on the 5th ult., was devoted to Mozart's Requiem and Mendelssohn's Lobgesang. The principal artists in the Requiem were Miss Edith Wynne, Miss Chadwick, Mr. Maas, and Mr. J. G. Patey; and in the Lobgesang, Miss Edith Wynne, Miss Green, and Mr. Maas. The duet, "I waited for the Lord," was encored, and the choruses and adagio of the Sinfonia much applauded.——The fourth and concluding concert of the present series, on the plan of the London Monday Popular Concerts, was given in the Philharmonic Hall on the 6th ult. Executants: first violin, Herr Joachim; second violin, Herr L. Ries; viola, Mr. Zerbini; violoncello, Signor Piatti; solo pianoforte, Mdme. Schumann; vocalist, Mr. Edward Lloyd; accompanist, Mr. Zerbini. The instrumental portion of the programme consisted of Beethoven's String Quartett in A major (op. 59, No. 3), Schumann's Quartett in E flat (op. 47) for pianoforte, violin, viola, and violoncello, Haydn's String Quartett in G major (op 76, No. 1), and Beethoven's solo Sonata in A major (op. 101), for pianoforte, which was finely rendered by Madame Schumann. The vocal pieces were excellently given and well received. "By Celia's arbour," and Schubert's "Post" being redemanded.——The Societa Armonica gave its thirty-eighth open rehearsal at the Liverpool Institute, Mount-street, on Saturday evening, the 9th ult., before a large audience. The programme comprised the overture to De Sargino (Paer); Kyrie and Gloria, from the Mass in E flat, No. 2 (Hummel); Symphony in C (MS.) (Henry Gadsby); Chorus, "Susceptible hearts," from Ruins of Athens (Beethoven); Adagio, Symphony in E flat (F. Löhr); and March and Chorus, "Twine ye the garlands," alse from Ruins of Athens. The instrumental part of the performance was highly successful, a prominent feature being Mr. Gadsby's Symphony, which was performed for the first time in Liverpool. The chorus, though limited, was effective. The vocal soloist was Madame Billinie Porter (a daughter of the talented conductor, Mr. Armstrong). She sang, in a finished style, the recitative and aria from Eli, "I will exalt Thee," and "Alone with thee," written expressly for her by Mr. C. E. Horsley. Mr. Lawson was an effective leader; and much of the success of the rehearsal must be attributed to the devoted attention of Mr. Armstrong, the conductor.——The Fourth Subscription Concert of the Philharmonic Society on the 19th ult., was devoted to the performance of Mendelssohn's Elijah. Principal artists, Madame Titiens, Madame Bentham-Fernandez, Mr. Bentham, and Herr Stockhausen. The additional voices in the quartetts and trios were supplied by members of the Society—Miss M. Philipps Mrs. Keef, Mr. Foulkes, and Mrs. Armstrong; and the unfortunate indisposition of Madame Titiens preventing her from fulfilling the whole of the arduous part of first soprano, her place, in portions of the work, was most ably filled by Miss Edith Wynne. The choruses went with great spirit, and the general effect was excellent. A good word must be said for Madame Bentham's charming rendering of "O rest in the Lord."

London, Ontario.—On the 22nd February, a sacred and secular concert, in aid of the funds of the Church of England Young Men's Association, was given at the City Hall with much success. Miss Fanny Chatfield, of the Ladies' College, created a marked impression by her singing of the air "How beautiful are the feet," and also of a bright little song by Randegger, called "Marinella." Her voice is excellent, and her execution displays a high state of culture, the encore which she elicited for the last-named composition being earned by the most legitimate means. Miss Williams, Miss E. Raymond, Mrs. Crow, Messrs. Beaton, Coles, Fewings, and E. Plummer, were also highly effective in the solo music; and Miss Hall (of the Ladies' College) gained well-deserved applause by her performance of two solos on the pianoforte. The choruses were carefully rendered throughout, and Mrs. Raymond conducted the concert with much ability.

March, Cambs.—The second annual concert of sacred music in aid of the choir and organ fund, was given on the 28th February in the Wesleyan Chapel, by the choir and several instrumentalists, numbering in all about forty performers. Organist and choirmaster, Mr. E. C. Haylock. The principal pieces were, Gloria and Credo (Haydn's First Mass); Duet and Chorus, "Hail, Judea" (Judas); trio, chorus, and instrumental march, "See the conquering" (Judas); chorus, "Let their celestial concerts" (Samson); recit., "In splendour bright" (admirably sung by Mr. Hunt), and chorus, "The Heavens are telling." The performance was very successful, and afforded satisfaction to an audience of more than 700 persons.

Middleton.—The Middleton Musical Society celebrated its hundredth anniversary with a very excellent performance of the Messiah at the Co-operative Hall, on the 4th ult. Miss Hiles, Miss Hariow, Mr. N. Dumville, and Mr. Benj. Ramsbottom were engaged for the principal vocalists, with Mr. C. A. Seymour as leader, and Mr. Handel Thorley as conductor. Miss Hiles, although suffering from indisposition, sang the soprano music with taste and finish, the air, "Rejoice greatly," being especially well given, and Miss Harlow's rendering of "He was despised," was one of the successes of the evening. Mr. Dumville gave "Comfort ye," "Every valley," and the other portions allotted to him very creditably, and Mr. Ramsbottom may be highly complimented for the style in which he sang "The peop'e that walked in darkness," "Why do the nations," and "The trumpet shall sound," the trumpet obbligato to the last named piece being skilfully played by Mr. Peers. The choruses were given with much spirit and precision. The audience numbered nearly 1100, and the Society, after paying all expenses, will be able to add to its funds from £15 to £20.

New Zealand.—The Mendelssohn Society, Christchurch, gave a very successful performance of Athalie on the 8th December. The chorus-singing throughout was highly creditable to the Society; and the trio, "Hearts feel that love Thee," and the duet, "Ever blessed child," were especially well rendered. The War March was played with great spirit by the band (numbering about 20 performers), under the leadership of Mons. A. Fleury, and was unanimously re-demanded. The spoken recitatives were read admirably by Mr. W. Bowron. The second part of the concert consisted of Mendelssohn's "Victors' return," "First Spring day," and "Nightingale," and a miscellaneous selection. The concert attracted a very large audience. Mr. Robert Parker, musical director of the Society, conducted; Mrs. W. J. Smith and Miss Marshman presided at the piano, and Mr. Milner at the harmonium.

Northalleton.—A musical association has been recently formed here, entitled "The Church Musical Society." President, the Rev. T. W. Mercer, vicar; conductor, the Rev. F. Page Roberts. It promises to be a great success, as about fifty members have already been enrolled.

Oxford.—On Monday, the 18th ult., the members of the Oxford Choral Society presented to their conductor, Mr Allchin, a testimonial, as a mark of their appreciation of his zealous and untiring efforts to promote their interests and the good of the Society. The present was in the form of an elegant silver salver, richly engraved with the following inscription: "Presented, with a purse of twenty guineas, by the members of the Oxford Choral Society to their conductor, W. T. Howell Allchin, Mus. Bac., Oxon., on the occasion of his marriage, Dec. 30, 1871." The testimonial was presented by Dr. Stainer, President of the Society, who congratulated the members on being so fortunate as to secure the services of so able and painstaking a conductor.

Ramsgate.—At St. Mary's Church on Thanksgiving Day the service (full choral) commenced with Hymn 198 (Ancient and Modern) as a Processional. The Te Deum was Sullivan's in D, and the Anthem was "Glorious is Thy Name (Mozart). The special Thanksgiving Hymn (to a tune by Dr. Wesley) was heartily joined in by the congregation. The Service concluded with a Choral Celebration of the Holy Communion, at which Marbeck's music was used.

Redruth.—On Friday evening, the 1st ult., Mr. Ellis Roberts, assisted by Miss Ellen Glanville, gave a successful entertainment in the Druids' Hall. Mr. Roberts played as usual in a very brilliant style. Miss Glanville (her first appearance in Redruth) acquitted herself in all her songs in a highly effective manner, and was encored in Bishop's "Bid me discourse," for which she substituted "The blind girl to her harp."

Salisbury.—The Sarum Choral Society gave a performance of Mendelssohn's St. Paul on the 21st ult. in Hamilton Hall, under distinguished patronage. Miss Emily Spiller, Mr. Taylor, and Mr. O. Christian were the solo vocalists; leader, Mr. Rowland; conductor, Mr. C. J. Read.

Slough.—Mr. O. Christian gave his annual miscellaneous concert on the 12th ult, assisted by Miss Julia Elton, Miss Banks, Mr. T. Dyson, Mr. Fred. Graham, and Miss Lazarus, R.A.M. The programme included selections from the Creation, Elijah, &c. There was a large and fashionable audience.

St. Louis, Missouri, U.S.—Mr. Waldemar Malmene, Mus. Bac., Cantab., formerly of Belfast and Derry, Ireland, has been awarded the second prize offered by the American Conservatory of Music, New York, for the best anthem.

Stratford.—The West Ham Philharmonic Society gave the second concert of the fourth season in the Town Hall, on Tuesday, the 19th ult. The programme consisted entirely of secular music. Of the part-songs, Pinsuti's "The sea hath its pearls," Barnby's "Silent night," Gardiner's "Go, lovely rose," Macfarren's "Orpheus," and Bishop's "Daughter of error," were the most successful, the solo in the latter being taken by Miss Smellie, who received a well-merited encore. The Misses F. and G. Jones, Mr. O. Jones, and Mr. W. Latta also contributed much by their singing to the success of the concert. Messrs. T. and F. Kitson performed a pianoforte duet, Mr. Clutterbuck a concertina solo, and Miss H. Rivers a pianoforte solo; the last-named (a young lady about twelve years of age) creating quite a sensation. She is a pupil, we understand, of Mr. Alfred Carder. Mr. F. Kitson accompanied, and Mr. J. S. Bates (organist of the Parish Church), West Ham, conducted.

Wareham.—The Wareham Musical Society gave its second concert of sacred and secular music at the Corn Exchange on the 7th ult., under the able direction of the Rev. J. B. Lloyd. Several pieces were given by the choir with commendable precision, amongst which must be especially mentioned "Banish, oh maiden," which was sung by the male voices without accompaniment. Miss Parmiter, Miss Yearsley, Mrs. Seale, Mrs. Shave, Mr. F. Hibbs, and Master G. Gould were highly effective in the solos entrusted to them, many receiving encores. The accompaniments were excellently played by Mrs. Lloyd and Miss Yearsley. We sincerely trust that the Wareham Musical Society will continue to flourish under the able guidance of Mr. Lloyd, who has, by his indefatigable exertions, brought the association to its present state of efficiency.

Windsor.—Mendelssohn's Elijah was given in St. Mark's Schoolroom on the 19th ult. under the direction of Sir G. J. Elvey. Miss Banks, Madame Poole, Mr. Montem Smith, and Mr. Orlando Christian were the principal vocalists. The chorus included the members of the Windsor and Eton Choral and Amateur Madrigal Societies, assisted by eminent amateur vocalists, and the band was augmented by H.M. 1st Life Guards' band. The performance was a most successful one.

Worcester.—The fourth concert of St. Clement's Choir for the present season was given at the Schoolroom on Monday evening, the 11th ult. Being Lent, the selection consisted solely of sacred music, from Haydn, Mendelssohn, Spohr, Handel, &c. Great pains had evidently been taken to make the entertainment as good as the confined room and the means of the choir would permit. The attraction of the concert was much enhanced by Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Caldicott, who kindly took part in the performances. Miss Doward, as usual, efficiently presided at the pianoforte.

Organ Appointments.—Mr. W. W. Meadows, Jun., Organist and Choirmaster to Winkfield Church, Windsor.——Mr. J. Greatorex Wyatt (late Organist and Choirmaster of S. Matthias', Bethnal Green), to St. Paul's, Lisson Grove.——Mr. Henry R. Bird (of S. Gabriel's, Pimlico), to the new Parish Church, Kensington.——Mr. J. G. Bolland Elliott, to the new Church of S. "The Organist's Quarterly Journal. Edited by W. Spark, Mus. Doc. (Novello, Ewer, and Co.)—Having reached its thirteenth part, and having thus entered upon its fourth year, the Organist's Quarterly may fairly now be considered a permanent institution. From the first we have felt it our duty to uphold this publication, because we conceived that it supplied an unquestionable want; and it is with no small satisfaction we record the continued appearance and undiminished attraction of one of the most useful of periodicals. In the present number we have some pieces, English and German, which will increase the reputation of the journal. Herr Degenhardt, organist of St. Catherine's, Hamburg, contributes a concertstück in F minor, consisting of a grave introduction and an allegro maestoso of earnest, forcible character, which terminates brilliantly in the major. Dr. Spark himself has a very pleasing and well-written prelude in G major, of such brief dimensions as to warrant its being used as an opening voluntary. Herr Philip Tietz gives us a Fantasia in D major—a freely-designed and brilliantly-written piece. Mr. Arthur Page contributes an introductory voluntary in A major, which has many good points and no bad ones; Mr. Charles Joseph Frost an Impromptu of considerable merit in A minor; Dr. Papperitz, organist of St. Nicolai, Leipzig, two Choral-Vorspiel in F major, which display much ingenuity; and Mr. William Wright, organist of Christ Church, Croydon, an Andante Cantabile in G major, easy enough for the least ambitious to essay, and sure to be very acceptable to many."—Queen, Feb 3.

AN ENTIRELY NEW WORK FOR MUSICAL EDUCATION.

CONTAIN A PROGRESSIVE COURSE OF INSTRUCTION IN MUSIC, UPON A SYSTEM DESIGNED BY HIM.

The exercises are set at the top of each page, and blank staves are left for the pupil to copy the examples given. It is intended that the pupils should fill up the first page by copying the exercises given, and write from memory on the second blank page. Every succeeding exercise includes all that has been taught in the preceding examples. The rudiments of music are explained as simply as possible. Diagrams of the pianoforte keyboard are provided, by means of which the notes can be more easily learnt than by any other method. The fundamental rules of harmony and thorough bass are practically illustrated, and a plan laid down by which singing at sight can be learnt without assistance. The Music Copy-Books will, it is believed, be equally useful to master and pupil, by relieving the former from the necessity of constantly repeating the same rules, and ensuring the gradual progress of the latter.

Parts I. and II. contain RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC.
Part III. contains INSTRUCTIONS FOR THE PIANOFORTE.
Parts IV. and V. contain THE RUDIMENTS OF HARMONY.
Part VI. contains INSTRUCTIONS IN VOCALISATION, PART-SINGING, AND SINGING AT SIGHT.

Price Sixpence each; postage free for 7 stamps.

CHAPPELL'S PENNY OPERATIC PART-SONGS.

For Soprano, Alto, Tenor, and Bass.

The present collection of Part-Songs is entirely new, being selected and adapted from the most striking and popular Choruses in the Favourite Foreign Operas. The Arrangement is purely Vocal, such Choruses only being chosen as can be sung without the aid of an Instrumental Accompaniment. The Words have been expressly written for the work, and the harmonies arranged in four parts, as likely to be most useful in small classes.

3.	Spring's Bright Glances (In Elvezia non v'ha)	From Bellini's "La Sonnambula."

HANDEL'S CHORUSES

Arranged for the Organ, with Pedal Obbligato, EXPRESSLY for the use of AMATEURS, by Dr. Rimbault. Price 3s. each. Nos. 1 to 12 are now ready:—

No. 1. Zadok the Priest.	No. 5. Sing unto God.	No. 9. For unto us a child is born.
2. From the Censer.	6. Hallelujah.	10. He trusted in God.
3. We never will bow down.	7. Lift up your heads.	11. But the waters overwhelmed them.
4. He gave them hailstones.	8. Let us break their bonds asunder.	12. The Horse and his rider.

The present publication has been undertaken with a view to supply a musical want long felt by amateurs and lovers of the organ, i.e., an edition of Handel's Celebrated Choruses arranged for the organ with pedal obbligato, that shall be effective, combining all the salient parts of the score, and yet at the same time be within the reach of those performers who have not made the instrument their entire study. We have, it is true, many arrangements; some for "Organ or Pianoforte," others by our most eminent organists. The first belong to a past age; the second, in all cases, are only fit for professional performers, and require an amount of skill for their proper execution rarely attained by amateurs. In the present edition, the notation has been carefully studied so as to simplify the reading, whilst the pedals, in all cases of difficulty, have the assistance of the left hand of the performer. Many other points have been considered so as to render the arrangement fitted to the object it has in view—to supply an edition of Handel's Choruses for the Organ expressly for the amateur.

J. S. BACH'S MUSIC OF THE PASSION ACCORDING TO THE GOSPEL OF ST. JOHN.

By G. A. Macfarren.

The interest of late excited by Bach's music of the Passion according to St. Matthew, promises for that great work an English acceptance, if not as general as it has in Germany, where all its Choral tunes, with their poems, are familiar to everybody, that is still commensurate with the importance of the subject and the sublimity of its treatment. The Matthew Passion having established a hold on public esteem, attention naturally turns to another work of the same class by the same artist. Comparative criticism is a fallacious form of judgment, since no work is better or worse because of the less or greater merit of another; but, an examination of the as yet less known John Passion will be facilitated by reference to the other, not as a standard of excellence, but as a type of form. Such reference will then be made in the present remarks, and, in the absence of other data, the internal evidence of the two will be taken as an authority for guessing as to which may have been the earliest production.

No record has been brought forward of when the John Passion was composed, or when publicly produced; Herr W. Kust, the editor of the work as issued by the Bach Society, states indeed that four performances of the Oratorio are known to have been given during the life of the author, but he makes no mention of their time or place. Further, he asserts that there are three versions of the composition, the second differing from the first in the substitution of five pieces for as many others that are quite distinct from them in the original, and the third differing from the second in the refinement and elaboration of the details of the same matter. One of the substitutions of the second version is the opening Chorus, "Lord, our Redeemer," which displaces the contrapuntal treatment of the Choral, "O man, thy heavy sin," that now stands at the end of the first part of the Matthew Passion. Here is a seeming evidence of the earlier composition of the work upon St. John's text; and the change is otherwise remarkable, as the substituted piece, with all its merits, is less attractive than that which was rejected. Surmising from this, and from other indications to be adduced by and bye, that the John Passion was written before the Matthew, one may date it prior to 1729, when the latter was performed; and one may suppose it to have been subsequent to Bach's settlement in Leipzig in 1723, for it was there that he first had opportunity to write extensively for the Church.

The design of the present work is the same as of the other, and in this respect the Oratorio resembles also several preceding settings of the Passion for the Lutheran celebration of the event. The Gospel text is set as recitative, the words of the narration being reserved for a tenor voice, his part being named Evangelist, and the words of Jesus and the other persons who speak in the course of the story being assigned to a different singer for each character. The words spoken by the disciples, the Jewish people, the Roman soldiers, and even the High Priest, are given to the chorus. This text consists of the 18th and 19th chapters of St. John's Gospel, the first part containing the 18th chapter to the end of the 27th verse, and the second part proceeding from thence to the end of the 19th chapter; but, curiously, there are some insertions in this from St. Matthew's Gospel, which show that the composer's object was rather to make an impressive recital of the story, than to give a faithful rendering of either historian. The text is interpolated with Chorals, the words and inseparable scenes of which illustrate the points where they are introduced. It is further interpolated with Choruses and Airs, described by German writers as "reflective pieces," which form a commentary on the Biblical narrative.

The poetry, so to speak, of the "reflective pieces," is based on that of the John Passion of Handel, with which Bach must have been familiar, for a copy in his writing is extant of the entire work of Handel. This is the production of one Brockes, a member of the Town Council of Hamburgh, and it abounds in coarsenesses of expression, such as, at the time, were not uncommon in the treatment of the sacred story, in which it was usual to exaggerate in some degree the personal, at the expense of the doctrinal aspect of the subject. These turns of phrase are materially modified in Bach's version, always to their literary improvement, and to the idealisation of the theme; and internal evidence suggests that the alterations may be due to Bach himself, as there can be little doubt is the arrangement of the entire book, as to where the Gospel text should be broken by the insertion of Chorals and lengthened compositions, where by the insertion of scriptural passages from another source, and as to the choice of the Chorals.

The following speculations are offered as to the possible evidence within the two Oratorios of the later composition of that to St. Matthew's text. In the work under notice, the words of Jesus are not individualised from the rest of the recitative by the accompaniment of string instruments, a beautiful device by which, in the Matthew Passion, the sacred person is surrounded, as it were, by a glory that distinguishes his figure from every other in the story. This conception is too poetical, and its good effect is too apparent for it to have been discarded by the same composer in a subsequent work of the same class; but it may naturally have occurred to him when pondering a completed composition, and considering how further he might idealize the subject in an after setting of an analogous text. Again: those passages in the Gospel which are assigned to the chorus are here so amplified by repetition as to form, in some cases, the groundwork of extensive compositions—for instance, those beginning "If this man were not an evil-doer," "It is not lawful," and "Let us not divide," in the second part; whereas, in the other work, if such passages are not set totally without repetition, as is the case with those for single speakers, they are repeated to such extent only as to give an idea of multitude, and so to increase, not to annul, the dramatic force of their setting. It would be matter indeed for regret, were any one of these noble pieces any shorter than it is; but the more one admires their musical beauty, the more one must feel their dramatic unfitness, and hence arises the surmise that he who had written the concise, terse, living ejaculations that animate the action of the Matthew Passion, could not afterwards set like passages in the comparatively cold, because diffuse and quite didactic, manner of those before us. And yet again: in the John Passion, after what would else be the final Chorus, "Rest here in peace," is a Choral, "Lord Jesus," but in that according to St. Matthew, the Chorus "In tears of grief" concludes the work. Now the purpose may have been good of assigning to the people, whose part throughout the Oratorio is eminently conspicuous, the task of closing it with one of the Hymns that served to enchain their attention to the performance, as much as to enlist their services therein; but it is not unlikely that, in Bach's own time, the people's hymn singing may have been perhaps unsteady, and that such a termination to a work may consequently have been somewhat vague and undecided; if so, his experience of this would prompt him to finish a later work with a piece for his trained and controllable executants only, which would be more impressive, because more definite, than the other.

From these indications, if they may be regarded as such, and from others that it would be tedious to particularise, it may be assumed that the John Passion was a kind of sketch or study for the other, having tested his powers upon which, and strengthened them by exercise, Bach devoted himself to the grander work, which was fitted by the more dramatic form of the Apostle's relation, and by its superior suggestiveness, to become so much greater as it is than its predecessor.

In a composition of this structure, the narrative recitative is the portion of primary importance; for though the rhythmical portions be more musically attractive, they are designed to illustrate and to relieve this, and must therefore be esteemed as subsidiary to it. In speaking of the recitative in the present work, one technical speciality must not be unnoticed, but it may be briefly mentioned and dismissed. Nearly always, the vocal closes are followed by a second inversion of the tonic harmony preceding the penultimate dominant chord. This is so unlike the general use of composers, including Bach himself, as to be remarkable on that account; its effect is to prolong the vocal cadence in the accompaniment, and to connect it with the sequel, whether this be the continuation of the narrative or one of the reflective pieces. The course of the action and the reflections upon it seem thus to be linked in unbroken sequence, and the hearer's mind passes from event to commentary, as if the one sprang irresistibly from the other. It may appear superfluous to describe the ordinary and all-familiar practice of confirming or completing the vocal closes in recitative with two chords only, those of the dominant and tonic; the more definitely terminal character of this form of cadence will be acknowledged by every reader, and the distinction from it of the form here employed warrants the space spent on this remark.

It is impossible to extol too highly this portion of the Oratorio. The words are declaimed in the manner of the loftiest oratory, and in some places with pathos that seems to be in very unison with the fervent feeling of the Evangelist in relating the scenes he witnessed, and the doctrines on which the faith and the teaching of his life were founded. The two passages interpolated from St. Matthew, to which reference has been made, are notable; first, because the same points are distinguished in the other Oratorio, and second, because of their very high but yet inferior beauty in the present setting; these are, when Peter, hearing the cock crow, is reminded of his Lord's words, and "went forth and wept bitterly," and the plaintive melody to these words is strengthened by a progression of harmony as fully beautiful as it is unprecedented, and as yet unimitated; and when the final agony is passed, and nature is convulsed as if in horror at human iniquity, the terrible disturbance of her laws is described. In both of these passages, as in their setting in the other Oratorio, the orchestral instruments are unemployed, and the accompaniment is restricted to the organ or harpsichord—it is hard to determine which—preserving to the recitative throughout the work its marked separation in every respect from the rhythmical portions. One might wish that the extreme high notes of the tenor voice had been less freely used than they are in phrases where the declamation of a word seems not to demand such a strain as they must cause the singer; one must more regret that their difficulty of performance compels sometimes the substitution of others, which are practically better, but which must distort the climax of the passages wherein they occur, and so weaken the effect. The sentences belonging to Jesus are set with a tenderness that is quite holy, and with such an obvious sense of reverence, as makes one revere the great master to whom we owe this interpretation of the divine character. The greatest qualities are needful in the singers who will undertake the parts of the Evangelist and of Jesus, the latter more particularly, because it is but by the manner of the executant that the composer's conception can be embodied, and that an audience can be made to feel the presence of the superior Being whose personality is represented in his words; the distinctive accompaniment of the other Oratorio materially aids the vocalist, nay, in itself separates this character from all the others; but here the grave responsibility rests with the performer alone to fulfil the sublime ideal of the composer.

The portion of next importance in the Oratorio is the treatment of the Chorals. This is to be esteemed with reference particularly to the situations of their occurrence, and to the unmistakable purpose of throwing light on these situations by the choice of appropriate verses from the hymns with the tunes that are dissociable from them, and by the expressive harmony wherewith the tunes are sustained. There can be no question that the master has here harmonised the tunes very differently from what he would have done, from what he did, in fitting them for ordinary congregational use—his purpose there was to give broad expression to the general purport of the poem, while here it was to strengthen the sentiment of certain words, so as to make it strengthen the impression of the incidents to which the selected verses apply. The harmonisation of the Chorals is always remarkable from a merely technical point of view, and in many places it is particularly so on account of the extremely chromatic nature of the harmony; the comment that every piece seems to call forth would be unintelligible if not read side by side with the music, but one instance is so unlike anything elsewhere to be met with, is so strikingly beautiful, and is so truthfully pertinent to the words, that it may be cited in the hope to induce the student to examine it separately, and to regard it as a valuable addition to his store of knowledge; it is in the Choral, "Thy bonds, O Son of God most High," the setting of the last line, "We had been bound for evermore," where, the piece being in the key of E, the bass ascends semi-tonically from B to E, and the progression from an inverted chord of A minor to the dominant seventh in the key of F sharp minor is as beautiful as startling. The effect must have been very deep, and all but supernatural, upon singers accustomed from infancy to troll forth certain tunes which were familiar to them as is the Lord's Prayer to our grown up school children, of unwonted harmonies that give particular meaning to every word, changing almost the sound and certainly the character of the very notes they sang, as if men standing on the ground were unexpectedly lifted into a rarer atmosphere, and consequently breathed and felt, and even thought, otherwise than they were used to do. In two respects, this portion of the Oratorio suffers from its transplantation into another people than that for whom it was written; the English people know not the tunes which are a part of the very being of the North Germans, or if they know accidentally some one or other of them, know it as being in "Common Metre" or "Peculiar Metre," and by the unsignifying name of some German city or province; and the English version, admirably as it fits the accents of the tunes, and as it accommodates itself to the mechanism of vocalisation, fails, and could not but fail, to represent word by word the sense of the original, and thus hides the purpose of expressing with the harmony the sense of each. This is said in no disparagement of the translation of the entire work, which commands, on the contrary, high praise for its fulfilment of the severe exactions of that most arduous of all literary labours, the adaptation of syllables to music of which not a note is without its characteristic purport; the metrical hymns differ in structure from the other portions of the work, and in rendering them there are difficulties almost insuperable. Nothing can better show the illustrative design in the various treatment of these tunes, than a comparison of different arrangements of the same tune when it occurs in several situations of the present work, and occurs also perhaps more than once in the Matthew Passion; for example, "Oh wondrous love"—which is introduced where Jesus, yielding himself to the officers of the High Priest, craves leave for his disciples to depart—is the same tune as, "Oh mighty king," another verse seemingly of the same poem, which follows the Saviour's allusion to his heavenly renunciation of his earthly kingdom; and this is the same tune as, "Oh blessed Jesus," and also, "Mysterious act," both in the Matthew Passion, and having reference there respectively to Jesus' prescience of his betrayal, and the Jews' demand for his crucifixion. It would amply repay the student of harmony and of musical expression to compare these pieces, and the several others that are in like manner framed on one tune in the same and in the two works; he will learn from such a comparison how apparently boundless are the resources of harmony, and how far more strongly does their just application prove the inspiration of a poet than the mere skill of a scholar. This simple reference should be sufficient to instigate the search of those who are interested; to enumerate all the instances would here be futile as tedious.

The reflective pieces—namely, the Choruses and Airs—call lastly for consideration; lastly, because they are subordinate, in some sort, in the plan of the work; lastly, because they are each complete in itself, comprehend each a complete design, are each extractable, and have all interest of a kind that belongs not to the other portions of the work. These are, for the most part, of extreme difficulty; difficulty more of insight and comprehension than of mere note singing, though in this respect some are by no means to be slighted. Of the songs, two are perhaps more attractive—it would be as false as daring to say more beautiful—than the others. Firstly, the soprano Air, "I follow Thee," which directly succeeds the statement that Peter and John followed the captive Jesus to the house of Caiaphas, has a melody of the tenderest sweetness and of charming continuity, one that will please all hearers, and repay whatever pains a singer may spend upon it; specially notable in it is the ascending phrase to the words "encompassed with sadness," where the chromatic passing-note is a most rare exception from the practice, of the age and of the author, to employ diatonic passing-notes only; and the accompaniment of this song, for organ with two flutes only, helps essentially to characterise it. Secondly, the contralto Air, "It is finished," which follows the last words of the Saviour, is such a piece of pathos as has rarely been equalled; in more than one respect this may be likened to Elijah's song, "It is enough," as in the similarity of its opening words, in its form of an Adagio, interrupted by an Allegro, and afterwards resumed, and its accompaniment for the viol da gamba, which is analogous in tone to the violoncello employed by Mendelssohn; the likeness goes not so far as the phrases, in which the two pieces are totally distinct, but it is too obvious to pass unnoticed. The exhortation to follow our Lord to Golgotha, "Haste, ye deeply wounded spirits," an Air for bass, is remarkable for the choral questions, "Come where?" "Fly where?" that intersperse it, and is on the pattern of several pieces in the other Oratorio. "Beloved Saviour" is another Air for the same voice which forms both the counterpoint and the interludes to the Choral, "Jesus, Thou who knowest death," and is an admirable specimen of a musical form that Bach often employed, and in which he was always successful. The Chorus, "Rest here in peace," that precedes the concluding Choral, refers to the entombment; it bears a strong resemblance to the final Chorus in the Matthew Passion, in having the same key of C minor, the same 3-4 measure, and even in its phraseology, one passage in the second part, indeed, where the bass descends in arpeggio, being almost identical with one in the other Chorus; its expression, too, is the same as that in the piece here cited; but admirable as is this Chorus, it certainly suffers from comparison with the other.

At the present day, and in this country, it is impossible to reproduce the John Passion with precisely the effect that it had in Bach's time. The subject is now differently regarded from what it was a century and a half ago, and the hearers are therefore otherwise impressible, and this must be taken into grave consideration in estimating the work. Several of the instruments are obsolete for which the parts are written; the substitutions, however, that are now imperative, are not more greatly at variance with the several versions of the Oratorio than are these from each other, for it seems that one inducement for re-casting the work again and again as has already been shown that the author did, must have been to adapt it to the means at command on the different occasions of its performance. To assign now a part for the viol da gamba to the violoncello, one for the lute to the harp, and to make some other similar adaptations is but to meet necessities in the manner that Bach would have done; and though he appears to have set great value on the delicate distinctions of different kinds of hautboys that are now extinct, and of instruments of the viol class that are now no longer in use, he bowed to compulsion when the one of his predilection was not at hand, and we do but as he did in choosing its nearest representative under the same circumstances. In our performance of the Chorals, a still more important deviation from the method of Bach's time is inevitable. The people here have not so generally the habit of hymn singing as is common in the Lutheran Church, even of the tunes they know, and the Choral tunes introduced in this Oratorio they, with few exceptions, know not; hence their taking part in the performance is here impracticable, and even in Germany it is at the present day unpractised. When all the congregation sang the tune, it was needful to enforce the harmony of the comparatively small choir with the accompaniment of organ and orchestra. The somewhat coarseness of tone of all these voices and instruments probably at their loudest, was greatly counterbalanced by the fact that everybody contributed to it, and no one stood apart to listen; general experience will attest to the vastly different effect of music upon him who sings and him who hears, and some other means are requisite to excite us to the same extent when we are witnesses, than those by which we should be moved were we participants in the performance. It is, then, a most happy expedient to have the Chorals, sung by the unaccompanied chorus, and to give them the beautiful relief of light and shade expressed in music by the gradations of tone from piano, to forte. There is no effect so universally and so irresistibly pleasing as that of unaccompanied voices; to offer this at its best before an audience, it is necessary to vary it by different degrees of loudness and softness; and to compensate for the people's inability to sing their part and to be thus moved from within by the words and the music, the most powerful external aid must be made to their feelings, and the means employed in London performances are to be commended as being the most powerful and as producing the desirable result. The Chorals were originally the most impressive portion of the Oratorio; so they are now; the end is analogous if not identical, and we must applaud the very different machinery whereby this end is effected.

This necessarily brief notice of a great work would be more than necessarily incomplete without an acknowledgment of how far its acceptance in England will be due to the Rev. J. Troutbeck, whose rendering of the text shows his comprehension and appreciation of the music as much as his knowledge of the German, and command of the English language. He has been singularly fortunate in the preservation of nearly all the words of the accepted Scripture text, for this would lose much of its hold on our interest were it represented in other than the familiar syllables.

The John Passion has here been spoken of as a study for the supposed later work of the master, the Matthew Passion. Many a painter's study is treasured as highly as his matured work, and so indeed, if regarded in such a light, must this be. If we possessed not the later Oratorio, this would be esteemed above all price a masterpiece; the only thing that can out-price it is the other Oratorio, and that can be only fully valued by those who have a thorough knowledge and a due appreciation of the great work we have now been considering.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

The last of the Saturday afternoon concerts was given on the 20th ult., when the Cantata by the Danish composer Niels W. Gade, known in this country as "Spring's message," was performed. Remarkable for purity of melody and grace of treatment, this work is entitled to a position, at least, amongst the many Cantatas constantly placed before the public, although it is assuredly inferior to the "Erl King's Daughter," by the same composer, so thoroughly dramatic a piece as to make us wonder why Choral Societies still allow it to languish in obscurity. Beethoven's Ninth Symphony produced, as usual, a profound impression upon the audience; the orchestral portion, of course, being played to perfection, the principal vocal parts being well sustained by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Julia Elton, Mr. W. H. Cummings, and Mr. Lewis Thomas, and the choral finale receiving very fair justice from the Crystal Palace choir, which certainly shows unmistakable signs of improvement. A young violoncellist, M. Cros St. Ange, made a highly satisfactory début, his performance of a dreary concertino, by one Goltermann, evincing talents of the first order. Mendelssohn's overture to the "Son and Stranger," was finely performed at the commencement of the concert; and vocal pieces were contributed by the singers already named.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

This establishment opened for the season on Saturday the 6th ult., with Beethoven's "Fidelio," Madlle. Titiens sustaining the part of Leonora with undiminished power; the Florestan of Signor Vizzani, and the Pizarro of Signor Agnesi being kindly accepted by the audience as the best representatives of these characters to be found in the company. Mr. Mapleson may fairly congratulate himself upon the convalescence of Madlle. Marimon, for he has chiefly his old attractions to fall back upon, and he could ill spare the valuable services of this accomplished vocalist. As Amina, in "La Sonnambula," Maria, in "La Figlia del Reggimento," and Norina, in "Don Pasquale," she has fully supported, if not enhanced, her previous reputation. In the "Huguenots" Signor Fancelli elicited well deserved applause for his singing of Raoul; and Madame Trebelli-

Bettini received that warm reception as Urbano which her artistic merits must always ensure her. On the 4th inst. Signor Campanini, the tenor of whom report speaks so highly, is announced to appear as Gennaro, in "Lucrezia Borgia."

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

THE opera selected for the opening night (the 26th March) was Gounod's "Faust," but Madlle. Sessi being ill, the part of Margherita was assigned to Madame Sinico, who sang throughout with so much artistic feeling as to cause no regret for the unavoidable change. Of M. Faure's Mephistopheles it is impossible to speak too highly: both histrionically and vocally it is one of the most perfect performances on the operatic stage. The great event of the month, however, has been the success of Madlle. Albani, who made her début as Amina, in "La Sonnambula." With a genuine soprano voice, a facile and unexaggerated execution, and a remarkable power of sostenuto in the higher part of her register, this young vocalist at once secured the good opinion of her audience, and gradually advanced her position throughout the opera until the final "Ah non giunge," her brilliant rendering of which produced a storm of applause which could only be appeased by her appearing three times before the curtain. As the heroine in "Lucia di Lammermoor," Madlle. Albani again asserted her right to the highest place as a lyric artist; and there can be little doubt that future performances will fully justify the verdict so unanimously and unmistakably pronounced upon her first appearance. Madame Lucca has achieved her usual success in many of her favourite parts; and Signor Nicolini, despite the recent recollections of Signor Mario in the same character, has created a marked effect as Fernando, in "La Favorita." The attendance has been extremely good.

THE ORATORIO CONCERTS.

AT the Ninth Subscription Concert, on the 10th ult., Mendelssohn's "Elijah" was repeated before a large audience. Herr Stockhausen being indisposed, Mr. Whitney sang the music of the Prophet, and made a very decided advance in the estimation of the public by his intelligent reading of the part. In the arduous solo, "Is not His word like a fire," he was especially successful, and most of his recitatives were delivered with so thorough an appreciation of the composer's intention as to make it apparent that he had deeply studied the work. Madame Rudersdorff's energetic delivery of the soprano part was highly effective where energy was required; but in some passages she forced her voice beyond the limits of legitimate tone. Madame Fernandez created a marked sensation in "O rest in the Lord," and would have been compelled to repeat it had encores been permitted by the conductor. Miss Dones was painstaking in the contralto music which fell to her share, especially in the air, "Woe unto them," in which she displayed real devotional feeling. Mr. Sims Reeves was as usual unapproachable in the two tenor songs, and in the other parts able assistance was rendered by Miss Emily Spiller, Messrs. Nordblom, Stedman, Smith and Pyatt. The choruses were sung throughout with that precision and power to which the audience at these concerts has now become accustomed, "Thanks be to God" and "He watching over Israel" being perhaps the most entitled to particular commendation. Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" was selected for the tenth and concluding concert on the 24th ult., and was so finely given as to form a fitting termination to the season. The choir particularly distinguished itself, for not only the purest tone, but the most vivid colouring throughout the highly wrought choruses, more especially "Stone him to death," "Happy and blest," "Rise up, arise," and "O great is the depth," all of which produced a more profound impression upon the listeners than we can remember at any former performance of the Oratorio. The chorales, too, were sung with a perfect management of the gradations of tone, and went with remarkable steadiness. Madame Lemmens-Sherrington's rendering of the soprano part was everything that could be desired, the air "I will sing of Thy great mercies," eliciting much applause; and Miss Julia Elton was thoroughly successful in the solo "But the Lord is mindful." The effect created by Mr. Sims Reeves in the beautiful air, "Be thou faithful," was indescribable, the struggle to gain a repetition of it being almost irresistible. Such enthusiasm, however, could scarcely be wondered at, for never have we heard this great artist throw more genuine religious feeling into the interpretation of a piece than he did on this occasion, and never indeed have we heard his fine voice more thoroughly under command. A good word, too, must be said for the violoncello obbligato of Mr. Walter Pettit, which was in every respect fully worthy of being associated with this most perfect rendering of one of Mendelssohn's purest inspirations. Mr. Whitney was highly satisfactory in the principal bass music, and the more subordinate parts were efficiently filled by Messrs. Nordblom, Smith and Pyatt, Mr. Nordblom giving many of the most trying recitatives with good effect. The band was in every respect highly efficient; Mr. Barnby conducted with his accustomed decision, and Mr. F. A. W. Docker ably presided at the organ.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

THE second concert took place on the 15th ult. in St. James's Hall. An interesting feature in the programme was a concerto, with principal part for the hautboy, written in Handel's early days, at Hamburgh. This work can, of course, only excite curiosity with musical antiquarians; but it is good that such specimens of a past age should be occasionally placed before us, especially when so perfect a rendering can be ensured as this concerto received by the Philharmonic orchestra and M. Lavigne, whose hautboy playing on the occasion was entitled to the highest commendation. Madame Schumann gave a fine reading of her late husband's pianoforte Concerto in A minor, and was received with the applause she legitimately earned. Beethoven's Symphony in D (No. 2), Mendelssohn's "Isles of Fingal" overture, and Gounod's spirited and finely instrumented Saltarello were the other orchestral compositions performed. Madlle. Regan was hardly so successful in Meyerbeer's "Va! dit elle" as she invariably is in the more quiet German songs she so often delights us in; and, although Mr. Vernon Rigby sang "Dalla sua pace" well, it appeared scarcely suited for one of the principal vocal pieces at a concert of such pretension. Mr. W. G. Cusins, as usual, conducted, and kept the band well under control.

MR. HENRY LESLIE'S CHOIR.

A CONCERT was given at St. James's Hall on the 8th ult., the principal attraction of which was the ballad singing of Madame Patey, Miss Ellen Horne, Miss Enriquez, Mr. Sims Reeves and Signor Foli. The part-music for the choir gave, as usual, the highest satisfaction; and we need scarcely say that the lovers of this class of composition were somewhat disappointed at the very prominent intrusion of the solo singers into the concerts of what should be the finest specimens of choral performances in the metropolis. But the room was full; and Mr. Leslie is perfectly justified in pleading this fact in extenuation of the nature of his programme, which, as a miscellaneous selection of popular music, was excellent. We must not omit to mention the artistic pianoforte performance of Miss Linda Scates, who is fast attaining a high position in her profession.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.

ON Friday the 5th ult. the 134th anniversary festival of this Society was held at Willis's Rooms, under the presidency of His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh. Sheriff Sir John Bennett, in proposing "The health of the Prince and Princess of Wales and the rest of the Royal Family," made highly flattering remarks upon the patronage the Prince of Wales had extended towards music, and raised hopes for the future which we trust, for the sake of Sir John Bennett and the art, may be fully realised. The Duke of Edinburgh did his best, in speaking for the "Prosperity of the Royal Society of Musicians," to elicit sympathy for the objects of the Charity; and Sir Thomas Gladstone, who is an ardent lover of music, paid a compliment to the chairman, in proposing his health, by quoting from a letter which he had received from a relative, who was a shipmate of His Royal Highness, describing the Duke's fiddling on board the "Racoon" for the sailors to dance to, thus giving, as he said, not only signs of his fondness for music but evidence of his kindliness of heart. But the speech of the evening was that by Mr. G. A. Macfarren, whose eloquence afforded one more proof of the good which must arise at these gatherings from delegating members of the profession to advance the claims of an art the study and practice of which have absorbed the best years of their life. During the evening vocal and instrumental music was performed by the following artists:—Madame Arabella Goddard (pianoforte), Madame Camilla Urso (violin), Mdlle. Regan, Miss Rebecca Jewell, Miss Harman, Miss Jessie Jones, Miss Marion Severn, Mr. W. H. Cummings, Herr Jules Stockhausen and a very excellent glee party, under the direction of Mr. James Coward. The pianoforte accompaniments were ably played by Mr. C. E. Stephens and Mr. Henry R. Eyers. The subscriptions, as announced by Mr. Stanley Lucas, the secretary, amounted to upwards of £500.

PRESENTATION OF THE STERNDALE BENNETT TESTIMONIAL.

This interesting ceremony took place on Friday, the 19th ult., at St. James's Hall, before an audience crowding every part of the room. The Attorney-General occupied the chair, and was supported by all the most eminent musicians in London. Sir Sterndale Bennett's graceful and imaginative "Naiades" overture, performed by the Philharmonic band, under the direction of Mr. W. G. Cusins, formed the first piece in the programme, and this was followed by two of the same composer's part-songs, "Come, live with me," and "Sweet stream," the intrinsic merit of which, aided by an absolutely perfect interpretation by Mr. Henry Leslie's choir, elicited the warmest applause, the latter being repeated, in obedience to an irresistible encore. Then, after a few appropriate remarks from Mr. G. A. Macfarren, who dwelt with much ability upon the manner in which music had struggled to assert its true position in this country, and the honour which had been recently conferred upon the art as well as upon the artist by the knighthood of Sir Sterndale Bennett, the chairman, in a speech remarkable for that eloquence of which he is so consummate a master, presented to Sir Sterndale the names of the donors to the testimonial engrossed upon vellum, the amount of the subscription (£1,080) enabling the committee to found a free scholarship in the Royal Academy of Music, and also an annual prize to a female student of the institution. Sir Sterndale Bennett, in acknowledging the testimonial, alluded in feeling terms to the warm friendship of the many surrounding him who had been his fellow students in the Academy, and also thanked the artists who had so ably performed his compositions in honour of the occasion. Mr. Henry Leslie then proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. Walter Macfarren and Mr. H. R. Eyers, who had so zealously discharged the duties of honorary treasurer and secretary to the testimonial committee; and Mr. John Hullah, in proposing the same compliment to the chairman, made some happy allusions to the affinity between the specimens of music and oratory which had that morning been placed before the audience. The National Anthem was then excellently sung by the pupils of the Royal Academy of Music, the solos being taken by Miss Jessie Jones, Miss Butterworth, Mr. Guy and Mr. Wadmore, and the proceedings, which had been marked throughout by the most enthusiastic demonstrations of approval, were brought to a close. So spontaneous an expression of personal and artistic estimation has rarely been accorded; and we can assuredly remember no instance where the marks of admiration for genius were more thoroughly hearty and sincere. No presentation of plate, to be hoarded up as a family relic, and handed down as an heir-loom, would have satisfied those who subscribed to this testimonial. Sir Sterndale Bennett, through a life devoted to music, has ennobled and dignified the art in this country; and the artists, in return, have worthily raised to him a public monument which shall glorify his name to generations yet unborn.

Royal Academy of Music.—The Testimonial to Sir Sterndale Bennett, which has taken the form of a Scholarship, to be called the "Sterndale Bennett Scholarship," was contended for on Saturday, the 20th ult., at the Institution in Tenterden-street, Hanover-square, the examiners being Mr. G. A. Macfarren, Mr. F. R. Cox, Mr. W. G. Cusins, Mr. W. Dorrell, Mr. John Hullah, Mr. Henry Leslie, Mr. H. C. Lunn, Mr. Walter Macfarren and Mr. Brinley Richards. The results were as follows:—Master Tobias Matthay (elected), Mr. Walter Fitton, Mr. G. F. Hatton, and Mr. Joseph Ridgway (highly commended).

Should it ever become the custom of our Government to appoint musicians to consider how the science can be most effectually spread amongst the people, their acts would be a legitimate matter for criticism; but the notorious and avowed ignorance of the art amongst those whose duty it is to legislate on the subject makes it impossible for artistic journals to do more than wait and watch, in the hope of better times. As a matter of news, however, we must record that the Tonic Sol-fa system having been recommended for adoption in the schools of this country by the London School Board, has received the sanction of Government; and that Mr. John Hullah, who has made no secret of his being an opponent of the method, has been appointed Inspector of Music. This has called forth an angry letter from the Rev. John Curwen, which was inserted in the "Times," headed "Tweedledum and Tweedledee," we presume to show the contempt of the authorities of that powerful journal for the case in dispute. Into the merits of this controversy we have no desire at present to enter. As Sir Lucius O'Trigger says, "It is a very pretty quarrel as it stands—we should only spoil it by trying to explain it." When the principals have fairly fought the matter out and the result has been officially proclaimed, we may probably return to the subject.

A highly successful concert was given at the City of London College, Leadenhall Street, on Thursday, the 11th ult., under the direction of Miss Matilda Carter. Several well merited encores were obtained, amongst which may be specially noticed Miss Matilda Carter in "Marjorie's Almanac," Miss Thomas in "Forsaken," and Mr. Baker Scott for his remarkably fine rendering of "The old sexton."

The first public concert given by the members of the St. John's Wood Society of Musicians took place at the Store Street Hall, on the 13th ult., under the direction of Mr. Lansdowne Cottell, attracting a large and fashionable audience, who testified their pleasure by continued applause and many encores.

A Soirée Musicale was given by the members of the Westbourne Society (under the able direction of Madame Leupold) on Saturday, March 23rd, at the Hanover Square Rooms. All the choral music was excellently sung, the choir giving unmistakable proof of the careful training of Madame Leupold. Gounod's anthem, "Come unto him," Oberthür's motett, "Give ear, O Lord," Benedict's chorus, "Silver wedding march" (the pianoforte duet accompaniment being beautifully played by the composer and Herr Papendieck), and G. A. Macfarren's part-song, "The three fishers," being especially worthy of high commendation. Amongst the solos must be particularly mentioned "The soft southern breeze" (from Mr. Barnby's "Rebekah"), and Sullivan's "Once again," exquisitely sung by Mr. E. Lloyd (the latter being encored), Schubert's song "I do not ask," given with much purity by Miss Codd, and Scarlatti's "O cessate," very finely rendered by Miss Goodall. The concert was in every respect thoroughly successful, and the result must have been highly gratifying to the indefatigable directress, Madame Leupold.

An evening concert, under the direction of Mr. John Stedman, was given at the Birkbeck Institution on Wednesday, the 17th ult., when a very attractive miscellaneous programme was provided. Two part-songs were well rendered as quartets by Miss Pattie Laverne, Miss Gertrude Mayfield, Mr. Stedman and Mr. Thurley Beale. Miss Emrick displayed an excellent mezzo-soprano voice, and was encored in both her songs, a compliment which was also paid to Mr. Stedman (who, however, did not repeat his song) and Mr. Thurley Beale. The solos of Miss Mayfield and Miss Laverne were much applauded, and one of the most successful pieces of the evening was the duet "Se m'ami ancor," finely sung by Miss Emrick and Mr. Stedman. Mr. King Hall's performance on the Mustel organ created quite an effect, and Mr. Willem Coenen's marvellous pianoforte playing was thoroughly appreciated. Mr. Henry Parker accompanied with much ability.

Miss McQuire's concert at Myddelton Hall, on Monday evening, the 17th ult., was an undoubted success, both in the quality of the entertainment and the number of the audience. The concert-giver was assisted by Miss Julia Derby, Miss Maria Langley, Miss Hallam, Mr. Henry Guy, Mr. Walter Reeves, and Mr. Tremeer. Miss McQuire sang "Terence's Farewell," Franz Abt's "When I am near thee" (which elicited an unanimous encore), and Hullah's "Storm," in all of which she was highly successful. Of the male artists, Mr. Henry Guy decidedly took the lead, and he was heartily applauded. Three part-songs occurred in the programme, and at least one of these, Barnby's exquisite "Sweet and low," was very successful. Miss Hallam gave two pianoforte solos, Sidney Smith's selection from the "Huguenots," and a Fantasia on "Dinorah." Both were warmly received. Mr. Robinson conducted, and made an efficient accompanist.

Mr. John Thomas, the eminent harpist, has just been appointed harpist to Her Majesty. Mr. Thomas received his musical education at the Royal Academy of Music, where he studied the harp under Mr. J. Balsir Chatterton, and composition under Mr. Cipriani Potter. His compositions for the harp are very numerous, as well as his vocal and orchestral works. The public is also mainly indebted to him for having been instrumental in establishing the Welsh Choral Union, of which he is conductor.

A SACRED musical performance was given at Holy Trinity Church, Triangle, Hackney, on Easter Tuesday evening, in aid of the choir fund; vocalists, Miss Blanche Reives, Miss Marienne Potter, Mr. Edwards, and Mr. B. Trotman, assisted by the choir of the church. The selection included Sir John Goss's Thanksgiving Anthem and Te Deum. Miss Blanche Reives was highly successful in the air "With verdure clad," and in the solo in Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer; Miss Marienne Potter sang "O rest in the Lord" and "Children's voices," eliciting much applause; and Mr. Trotman gave "Lord God of Abraham," from "Elijah," with skill and taste. Mr. Edward Craig was organist and conductor.

A SPECIAL service, in a very praiseworthy spirit of imitation of the pattern set at Westminster Abbey, was held by the London Church Choir Association, in the Church of St. Botolph, Aldersgate, on Thursday evening, the 28th March, consisting of evening prayer, the "Passion of Our Lord, according to St. John," by G. F. Handel, and sermon. The "Passion oratorio," as it is called in the preface to the score, published by the German Handel Society, is there described as "the earliest work of Handel's youth, composed at Hamburgh, in 1704, when he was only 19 years of age." The order of proceeding on this occasion was as follows:—First, a voluntary was played by Mr. J. J. Stephens, organist of St. Matthew's, City Road. The prayers were then intoned by the Rev. W. Sparrow Simpson, (Minor Canon of St. Paul's and Rector of St. Matthew's, Friday Street,) as far as the suffrages before the Psalms, when a pause was made, the officiating clergyman retiring to the Communion Table, and the first portion of the Passion music was sung (the solos being rendered by the members of the St. Botolph choir); after which Mr. Simpson ascended the pulpit and delivered a brief but eloquent address. The second portion of the Passion music was then sung, and the service concluded with the prayer of St. Chrysostom, a hymn, and the Apostolic Benediction. Mr. J. R. Murray, choirmaster of the Association, to whose untiring energy and zeal we are indebted for the production of a work almost entirely unknown, conducted. The chorus, assisted by a small and efficient band, numbered 60 performers, and the whole of the music went steadily and well.

THE members of the Quaver Choral Society gave their fifth concert on Wednesday evening, the 17th ult., in the School-room, Bishopsgate Churchyard, to a crowded audience. The first part consisted of selections from the "Messiah," the choruses in which were rendered with great care and precision; the solos, "Every valley" (Mr. Myers), "O Thou that tellest" (Miss Butterworth), "The people that walked" (Mr. Phillips), and "I know that my Redeemer" (Mrs. Bernard), were sung with much feeling. At the conclusion of the first part, the secretary, J. Baker, Esq., presented to the conductor, Mr. William Bicknell, a complete set of Novello's edition of Handel's Works, handsomely bound, as a mark of the esteem in which his services are held by the Society. Mr. Bicknell suitably acknowledged the gift. The second part consisted of a selection of songs, glees, &c., in which, in addition to the above named vocalists, Mrs. Bicknell, Miss E. Shearman, Messrs. Bernard, Harvey, Youngs and Cozens took part. Parry's duet, "Flow gently, Deva," sung by Messrs. Bernard and Phillips, was deservedly encored, as was also a Buffo Scena by Mr. Bernard. Messrs. Barratt and F. H. Cozens ably accompanied on the pianoforte.

THE Canonbury Tower Choral Association, under the able conductorship of Mr. J. T. Cooper, gave an evening concert at Barnsbury Hall, Islington, on the 22nd ult., with great success. The choral portions of the programme were rendered with remarkable precision and taste. Sir John Goss's Anthem, "The Lord is my strength," was given with much spirit, Mendelssohn's "I waited for the Lord," Spohr's "As pants the hart," and Rossini's "To Thee, great Lord," were also highly effective, Spohr's anthem being encored. Several part-songs by Mendelssohn, and various glees by standard English composers were well sung. Solos were given by Miss Oakey, Miss Thornthwaite (who was encored in Sullivan's song, "Birds in the night"), Miss Hiorns (who sang a sacred song by Mr. J. T. Cooper called "Saved," in a chaste and finished style), Mr. Street, Mr. Knight, and Mr. Cray. Some really good instrumental pieces were performed by various members of the Association. Miss Reynolds played Dussek's pianoforte Sonata in B flat; Miss Oakey, with Messrs. Leefe and Reynolds, an "Andante" by Mozart, for pianoforte, flute and violin; and Mr. Alfred Morton performed most effectively a solo for oboe, on airs from Bellini. The accompaniments to the choral pieces were well given by Miss Cooper. The Association is in connection with the Islington Branch of the Church of England Young Men's Society, and gives promise of becoming an important local Choral Society.

ON Wednesday, the 17th ult., a complimentary dinner was given to Sir John Goss, the latest, though by no means the least deserving, of the musical Knights which Her Majesty has been graciously pleased to create. The locale (the Albion, Aldersgate Street) was happily chosen, as being perhaps the nearest available place to the scene of Sir John Goss's labours during the last five and thirty years, and as also possessing the additional advantage of containing a room with the most admirable acoustical properties. Mr. W. H. Gladstone, M.P., occupied the chair, and, as might have been expected, the room was well filled by eminent musicians anxious to do honour to their distinguished brother artist. It will be remembered that Sir John, then Mr., Goss, was on the point of relinquishing his long tenure of office as organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, when he was requested to compose music for the Great Thanksgiving Service for the recovery of the Prince of Wales. His success in this important undertaking was unquestionable, and his reward was the Knighthood, which as the chairman gracefully remarked had given the Prime Minister as much pleasure in suggesting as the recipient could possibly have felt in accepting. It remained only for the members of the musical profession to testify their sense of the honour conferred upon an eminent member of their body, and this they did by assembling in large numbers on the occasion now referred to. The speeches were neccessarily somewhat shorter than usual; a selection of music, taken from the sacred and secular works of Sir John Goss, forming not the least enjoyable item in the proceedings.

HAYDN'S "Creation" was performed with much success at Liverpool Street Chapel, King's Cross, on the 12th ult., the principal vocalists being Miss Susanna Cole, Mr. Horatio Perry and Mr. Orlando Christian, all of whom gave the solos allotted to them with much effect, several narrowly escaping an encore. The choruses were excellently sung throughout, and the band, under the able leadership of Mr. Flatteley, was everything that could be desired. Too much praise cannot be awarded to Mr. J. Arnold, who conducted the performance, and to whose exertions the efficiency of the choir is mainly attributable. The proceeds of the concert (if any) are to be devoted to the organ fund. The Rev. N. Bishop, M.A., presided on the occasion.

THE usual monthly concert of the St. George's Glee Union was given at the Pimlico Rooms, on Friday the 5th ult. Mdlles. Augarde and Pritchard in two pianoforte pieces, and Signor Ferraris in a Fantasia for melodium and pianoforte, were warmly received. Miss Bliss, Miss Florence Wydford and Miss Buley were highly successful in all their songs; Signor Correlli elicited much applause for his rendering of "La Colunnia" from "Il Barbiere," and Mr. E. Stringer gave with good effect the songs of "Anita" and "Once again." Several glees and part-songs were carefully rendered and well received. The accompanists were Mdlles. Buley and Pritchard, Signor Ferraris and Mr. E. Paine; conductor, Mr. T. Garside.

AN excellent performance of the "Messiah" was given (under the direction of Mr. F. A. Bridge), in the Hall of the Bow and Bromley Institute, on the evening of Good Friday last. The principal vocalists were Miss Ellen Horne, Miss Beryl, Mr. Arthur Thomas, Mr. F. A. Bridge, and Mr. Albert Hubbard; pianoforte, Miss E. Stirling; harmonium, Mr. R. Coleman; solo trumpet, Mr. W. Graves. The choir was very efficient, and consisted of about one hundred voices. The room was crowded, and the execution of the Oratorio was in every respect most satisfactory.

A HIGHLY interesting lecture was delivered on the 4th ult. at the Streatham Hill and Tulse Hill Institution, by William H. Stone, Esq., M.A., F.R.C.P., the subject being "The Combination of Voices with Instruments." The lecturer was assisted in the vocal department by Miss Burkinyoung (soprano), Miss Enriquez (contralto), Mr. Stedman (tenor), and Mr. Tremere (bass), and also by the following instrumentalists: Mr. Pratt (violin), Mr. Enthoven (viola), Mr. Woolhouse (violoncello), Mr. Dow (flute), Mr. Webb (clarionet), Mr. Fletcher (French horn), Mr. Dearden (trumpet), Mr. Percy (trombone) and Mr. H. R. Bird (pianoforte). The lecture was listened to with much attention by a large and appreciative audience.

Reviews.

A Morning, Communion, and Evening Service. Composed by Samuel Reay, Mus. Bac., Oxon.

Amongst the many musical settings of the Canticles which have appeared during the past twenty years, few will be found more useful in choirs, and places where they sing, than the one under notice. Mr. Reay has long been known as a talented organist, and particularly as the composer of some of the most popular part-songs of the day. It could not fail, therefore, to be a matter of considerable interest to note how far he would succeed in the higher and more important branch of the art. His proficiency in vocal writing was greatly in his favour, and his well known command of the technicalities of the Organ, would seem to supply the only remaining thing requisite. But, of course, those who look more deeply into things are well aware that many other qualifications are necessary to the production of sacred music properly so called, and that a musical organization is required to be singularly complete and well balanced to succeed in any remarkable degree in the composition of music for the Church. That Mr. Reay possesses many, if not most, of these qualifications, few who have examined these Services would venture to deny. That he possesses all, no sensible person would expect. Enough that he has produced a work which will take its place on terms of equality with many of the best of the old Church Services, and, what is of perhaps more value, displace some of the imitations of ancient work, which as music is contemptible, and viewed as an aid to devotion is beneath contempt. It would take too much space were all the musicianly points in this work enumerated and described, but a few instances may be cited, if only as examples to younger and less experienced musicians.

To commence with the Te Deum. It is everywhere apparent that there is no lack of resource; one idea follows another easily, and without the slightest appearance of effort. At the same time there is evident a certain reticence or reserve of power, which appears to be one of the invariable characteristics of a work of true art. It is also worthy of notice how Mr. Reay has repeated the same subject in different parts of the setting, and has thus bound the composition into one homogenous whole. For instance, the same phrase does duty for "We praise Thee, O God," and "Day by day we magnify Thee,"—a most felicitous union of textual and musical sentiment. Again "The glorious company of the Apostles," with the two succeeding verses are sung to the same music as "Thou art the King of Glory," and "O Lord, in Thee have I trusted." Thus cognate sentiments which by some church composers are not even realized, are here carefully emphasized and connected. A little pedantry in the shape of a canon (four in two, in the octave) is exhibited in the Gloria Patri to the Jubilate, but it is amply condoned by its effectiveness and position. The setting of the Kyrie is also much to be commended, despite its somewhat undefined tonality. The Creed has been most judiciously set to the simplest of music, principally in recitative and unison. This, as implying that all should be enabled to join in the recitals of the fundamental elements of their faith can hardly be too strongly commended. In the Sanctus the music appears to fail in rising to the height of the subject. As abstract music it is good, but as a setting of the Song of Angels, it is less commendable. Nor does the music to the Gloria in excelsis wholly succeed in expressing that intensity of jubilation which the subject would seem to demand. The Magnificat possesses a point of considerable beauty, a short interlude for the organ serving to introduce the soli quartett on the words, "He remembering his mercy," with charming effect. These are, however, but a few of the many good things to be found in this Service.

Capriccio, in E minor, for the Pianoforte. Composed by Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy. Op. 118.

This Capriccio, forming No. 47 of the second series of Mendelssohn's Posthumous Works, will afford unqualified pleasure to pianists, and renew the feeling of wonder that such treasures should so long have remained unpublished. That Mendelssohn himself may have had valid reasons for withholding many of his works from the public is scarcely to be wondered at by any who know how resolute was his desire thoroughly to satisfy himself in every composition which he gave to the world; but pieces which he might consider imperfect are so much better than those which many other composers consider perfect that they cannot but be received with a cordial welcome whenever they appear. A brief but melodious Andante, in E major, precedes the Allegro in this Capriccio, the writing in which is remarkably finished throughout. A close upon the dominant leads to the subject in E minor, a simple phrase founded on the triad of the key-note, in semiquavers for both hands, which is introduced in various keys in the progress of the piece. A beautiful melody, in the relative major, with some charming passages of syncopation, forms a most refreshing contrast with the principal theme; and the artistic manner in which the leading ideas are afterwards developed gives a continuous interest to the composition which cannot fail to attract both performer and listener. We shall doubtless shortly hear this Capriccio in the concert-room; but in the meantime we may gratify those numerous amateurs who are lovers of Mendelssohn's works by informing them that it is by no means one of his most difficult pieces.

Quanti Mai. Words by Metastasio.

Evening Song. (The Shadows of the Evening Hours), with obbligato accompaniment for the Viola. Words by Adelaide Anne Procter.

Composed by Ch. Gounod.

The theme of the first of these songs is made additionally attractive by a most characteristic accompaniment in staccato semiquavers, which (save in the comparatively short legato portion, which sympathises with the melody) runs obstinately against the voice part throughout. The harmonies are written with extreme care; and the sequence of sevenths, with a moving bass, which occurs on the third page, is exceedingly interesting. After the change in the form of the accompaniment, the return to the original subject comes with much effect; and a good point is gained by making the voice conclude on the fifth of the key-note harmony, lengthened out whilst the pianoforte part gradually dies off. This composition requires only to be known to become popular. The "Evening Song" has an extremely placid and melodious subject, the feeling of the words having been studied by the composer with commendable earnestness. In the symphony the viola commences the melody, accompanied by the pianoforte. The voice then begins, and is shortly joined by the viola, with an independent part, skilfully woven in with the theme, and in the highest degree effective. The treatment of the phrase, "Oh, give us now repose," is full of feeling, the changes of key giving the utmost eloquence to the expression of the words. The last few bars of the song, too, are extremely beautiful, the voice dwelling upon the key-note, with the chromatic ascent of the viola, against the descending bass, the repetition of the instrumental phrase becoming the concluding symphony. We can scarcely doubt that this song will shortly be sung in public, where, with a good vocalist and two equally competent instrumentalists, its success would be certain.

Ave Maria. Song. Words from the "Lady of the Lake." Music by Edward L. Hopkins, B.A.

There is so much artistic feeling thrown into this "Ave Maria" that it cannot but give pleasure to all whose taste has been sufficiently cultivated to separate reality from pretence amongst the multitude of compositions daily issuing from the music publishers. It is true that the theme is simplicity itself, but then it is this very simplicity that charms, when united with that skilful and sympathetic treatment which effectually prevents its degenerating into insipidity. The subject, in 6-8 rhythm, is highly appropriate to the words, and gains much interest by a moving quaver accompaniment, the character of which is preserved, with but slight intermission, throughout. Commencing in D flat major, the modulation into F has an extremely fresh effect; and much skill is shown in the return to the key, the progression of harmony, to the words "Ave Maria," leading the ear agreeably back to the starting point. Judging not only from this song, but from one which we recently noticed by the same composer, we have conceived a high opinion of Mr. Hopkins's power of writing good vocal music; and shall be glad to meet him again as the author of works of higher importance.

The Blind Organist. Song. Words from the German by the Rev. J. G. Bailey, M.A. Composed by Alfred Alexander.

A placid symphony of eight bars introduces the melody of this song, which well expresses the feeling of the words.

The harmonies are carefully written, and the varying character of the accompaniment gives interest to a theme which would otherwise be monotonous. The composition is extremely unpretending; but when we say that the writer has satisfactorily accomplished all that he has aimed at, we are awarding no mean praise in these days of shallow pretence.

A Widow Bird. Duet for two Sopranos. Poetry by Shelley. Music by George B. Arnold, Mus. Doc., Oxon.

Shelley's poetry has here received a very sympathetic setting. Much effect is gained in the Soprano solo, which commences the song, by the syncopated accompaniment, which afterwards flows on in semiquavers, without unduly intruding upon the voice parts. Two Soprano singers whose ambition does not extend beyond warbling a pleasing and graceful little duet will find this an attractive composition.

Gratitude. Sacred Song, for Baritone or Contralto. Words from Psalm cxvi, verses 1, 2, 3, 4, 7 and 8. Music by Miles Bennett.

There is nothing sacred about this song except the words. The melody flows agreeably enough, but the phrases have a faded air, and the accompaniment is not particularly well written, the bare 4th, which answers the first phrase in the opening symphony, is rather a warning as to what is to follow.

Novello's Part-Song Book (Second series), Volume IX. A collection of Four-Part Songs, composed by Walter Macfarren.

It would be difficult to describe, but as difficult not to feel, how complete a change has come over the character of our concerted vocal music since the form of the Elizabethan part-song was brought back from Germany, which may almost be called the land of its exile, for there it found a home and nurture, and a consequent development during its long period of neglect in its native country. This form has now all but superseded that of the glee, which held its place here while it was out of use, and, for the most part, music is the healthier for the restoration. Some of our best writers have thought some of their best thoughts in the form of four-part song, and the world has shown its readiness for these capital productions by its cordial reception and just appreciation of them. Among the most successful of these composers stands the author of the present volume, which, containing four and twenty pieces, shows him also to be one of the fertile. These are, however, by no means all new to us; the majority have been collected, on the recent dispersion of musicsellers' catalogues, by the firm which, perhaps more than any other, has assisted in the choral movement of the last thirty years, a movement that has affected the manners and the morals of large masses of people in towns and rural districts, and which would never have moved at all but for the indispensable assistance of music to sing at a price which singers can pay. The present collection does not comprise all of Mr. Walter Macfarren's part-songs; eight of them—including the well-known "You stole my love," having appeared in a previous book of the same series; but it contains some of his most popular favourites, and several that, to the best of our knowledge, are now printed for the first time, and that greatly enhance the interest of the volume. First among the former is the setting of Coleridge's hunting song "Up, up! ye dames," with its pointed and sparkling passage, beginning "'Tis you must tend the flocks." The poem has been often treated by other composers, even as a part-song, but this version stands in front of its companions. Dr. W. C. Bennett's "Summer Song" follows, and its sweet setting is enough to enamour one of the rain whenever it may fall. Then we have Longfellow's "Curfew," a piece less addressed to the general hearer than are the foregoing, but replete with tokens of musicianship; particularly may be remembered the good effect of the episode, "Dark grow the windows," where the inner voices have a constant motion of quavers, swelling and diminishing in power, against the sustained notes of the outer parts. "The Warrior," of Cunningham is a spirited painting of the words, which gaily tell of the hopeful departure from his well wishers of one who means to prove himself a hero. S. Daniel, a 16th century worthy, furnishes the next inspiration to the composer; "Love's heigh-ho!" is a most charming specimen of his muse, the peculiar harmony that paints the line, "A plant that with most cutting grows," is happily applied, and brings out the chief word with true poignancy, and, indeed, every phrase might call forth an admiring comment. The same epoch, in which England's helicon flowed most freely, furnishes the verses of the next piece in Shakespeare's "Good night, good rest;" this is set in the diatonic style which prevailed when the poet wrote, a style that should be included in every musician's education, and that proves the writer's contrapuntal fluency in being as good a madrigal, technically and spiritually, as modern times have produced. Nimble and tripping is the musical rendering of Allingham's "Fairies," and if this be less known than some of the pieces, the loss is theirs who know it not. There is a lulling softness in the "Cradle Song," another poem of Dr. Bennett, that is truthful to the text and therefore attractive, and the piece, too, has a musical charm, independent of the words and its fitness to them, that always recommends it; the vocal distribution is fortunate, the second female voice reflecting in sweet consonance the gentle melody of the first at the intervals of 6ths and 3rds, while the tenors and bass together have a dronesome accompaniment that supports the repose of the over song. "O come for the lily," to verses by Cunningham, pleases from the melodious flow of all its parts. How many and many a time has Heywood's "Go, pretty birds," been a vehicle for carrying musical fancies into general esteem! Here is one more to the many settings of the quaint little poem, and it loses nothing in comparison with others; it is a pleasant thing to note how variously different composers treat the same verses—Schubert, Mendelssohn, Schumann, and Franz have often gone to the same store, and their songs draw interest from comparison with each other, in addition to that which each has in itself—and the same is as much the case with the several settings of our English classics. The poem by Alice Carey, "More life," is full of beautiful aspiration; the music is novel and perfectly natural; one of its main features is the distribution of the voices, which is made on something like the principle that prompts an orchestral writer to employ the higher notes of violoncellos or bassoons rather than those of the same pitch which lie lower in the scales of violins and clarionets, and with like good effect; this principle is obvious throughout the volume. Old Dekker's "Sweet content" is set to thoroughly 19th century music, but the honest, hearty feeling of the words is perennial, and thus no tune can be too new for it; the change for six bars to 6-8 measure is after the manner of the early "Song of four parts," it is capitally quaint, it brings out with piercing point the lines "Work apace; Honest labour bears a lovely face," and it gives effect to the resumption of the foregoing accent. The next piece is for male voices only, "The moon shines bright," by Lord Lytton; it is a sea song, with a good nautical savour, but having abundant grace to reflect the moonlight and other such ornaments with which the poet adorns the nature of his subject. That the watery element in the verses again induces the male element in the voices is shown in the treatment of Hood's "The stars are with the voyager;" there is a particular tone in the high notes of counter-tenors that qualifies the entire combination in which they are comprised; it must be for their register that the A and B of the first tenor part are designed, and it is this tone that will give roundness and richness and sweetness to the music under notice. Hood's "Autumn" is also for male voices, and it abounds in pleasant and sonorous effects. Several of the pieces last named are comparatively new, and have yet their way to make in general favour; not so another specimen of male voice, the "Pibroch of Donuil Dhu," which is one of the greatest popularities of the series, and well deserves to be, for it veritably glitters with the sheen of arms while resounding with their clang, and stirs every hearer to join his footstep to the warrior tramp that seems to mark its every accent. "Shortest and longest" is the effusion of an anonymous writer; it has prompted two charming tone-pictures of a summer and a winter day, with the "Good night" that closes either, that are remarkable for their likeness in unlikeness; they are the settings of the two stanzas, and contain, if one may say so, the same ideas under varied aspects of expression; the salient and very striking harmonies bring out admirably the full tone of the voices. A "Windlass Song," to Allingham's jovial words, is a right royal type of seafaring jollity, showing all the wear and tear of wind and weather without a tittle of common-place or a hint of vulgarity; it must achieve a great success, and the sooner male singing societies take it in hand, or in throat rather, the better. Here we are back to the ladies again, and, after the course we have run among pieces in which they have no share, we welcome once more the sound of their voices; "O lady, leave thy silken thread," by Hood, is the groundwork of some sweetly flowing music, in which every part is a melody; this piece we suppose to be quite new, as are all those that are to come. "Lover's parting," by Middleton, atones, with the clearness and freshness of its last strain in G major, for the somewhat uncertainty of key in its earlier phrases. "Shepherds all," and "Sweetest melancholy," are both set to verses of John Fletcher; the musical idiom in these assimilates itself to that of the same period as the poetry; the composer has not so entirely thought himself into the antique vernacular as in his rendering of Shakespeare's "Good night," already noticed, but there is enough of the elder manner to give a distinction to these pieces, and a little modern spicing gives a zest to this which is not without its happy influence. An extract from Young, who thought at night and draped all he wrote with her dusky mantle, "Night, sable goddess," is an effective and appropriate piece of vocal harmony. Dr. Bennett reappears as the author of the final piece, "Swallow, hither wing;" this is not the leaving-taking of the migrant, so favourite with literalists, but his welcome, and the musician has invested it with the freshness of sweet springtime without a tinge of the incertitude of that ficklest of seasons; here are no frosts of to-day nipping the buddings of yesterday, no east winds to make us shiver in the very sunshine, but a merry tune of unclouded gladness. It is obvious that our composer loses nothing in power as he gains in experience, and his latest pieces give as much value as interest to the publication. The volume worthily represents in typography and binding the firm from which it is issued, and its comely appearance with its well-sounding contents must ensure it a wide circulation.

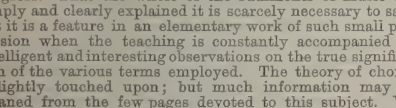
An Elementary Manual of Music. By Henry Leslie.

"I have embodied" says the author, in his Preface to this little Manual, "in the simplest possible form such rules as I deem essential, from the experience of many years, to ensure a good practical result." From the multiplicity of "systems" with which we are supplied in the present day it is difficult indeed for a young musical student to select one which shall not lead him so far away from the long established method that, save to a small section of his fellow workers, he is made to feel like a foreigner in speaking the language of his art. It is refreshing, therefore, to find so well known a preceptor as Mr. Henry Leslie urging pupils to travel in the high road which has led so many to the desired goal, and issuing plain directions to facilitate their progress. That the whole of the rudiments of music are simply and clearly explained it is scarcely necessary to say; but it is a feature in an elementary work of such small pretension when the teaching is constantly accompanied by intelligent and interesting observations on the true signification of the various terms employed. The theory of chords is lightly touched upon; but much information may be gleaned from the few pages devoted to this subject. We must however take leave to differ from the assertion that "with the exception of the major and minor common chords and their first inversion, all chords are discords." Without enforcing the argument that a certain combination of sounds forming a concord cannot by being placed in another position become a discord, we do not believe that the second inversion of a common chord (although often used as a suspension of a triad on the same bass note) is in reality a discord demanding resolution. In the following example, for instance, where the inversions of the diminished 7th always resolve upon the tonic harmony, can the $\frac{6}{4}$ be termed discordant?



As the book is especially intended for those who desire to practice part-singing, some very valuable exercises are given for the study of intervals; and there are also several important directions as to the pronunciation of the words, a matter, as we all know by experience too little regarded, even by those who aspire to become solo singers. The Manual is published in a cheap form, and as it will no doubt have an extensive sale, the author will, we presume, thank us for pointing out that there is no explanation of the double dot, that in the last bar but one of the "Harmonious Blacksmith" the $\frac{6}{4}$ on the dominant is figured $\frac{6}{4}$, and that the opening triad of the prelude at page 29, is marked $\frac{4}{3}$. These things might lead some pupils astray; and they could be easily remedied in a second issue of the book.

Cramer's Celebrated Tutor for the Pianoforte. Edited by J. Rummel.

Musical education is advancing so rapidly in the present day that it behoves all interested in its healthy progress to watch carefully the books which are designed to assist teachers in their task. It is true that the word "celebrated" prefixed to the title of this work seems as if it were designed to disarm criticism; but anything sent for review has a right to receive earnest attention, and we open Cramer's "Tutor," therefore, without any reference to the favour with which it may have been received in past years. The whole of the early part of the book is exceedingly good. We particularly admire the idea of calling Semibreves, Minims, Crotchets, &c., "whole measure notes, half measure notes, quarter measure notes," and so forth; the correct counting of the lessons is also judiciously enforced; and all the exercises for both hands will be found highly useful for beginners. But although we may agree with our author that "children should never be forced into learning technicalities," we can scarcely imagine that they should find innumerable signs the meaning of which is never explained at all. In this work, however, we have tunes in various times (although no information is given upon this subject in any part of the book) dots after notes, double sharps without any directions as to their signification, and airs in the minor key before any mention has been made of the construction even of a major one. It may be said that all these things are better left to the teacher; but if this plan be recommended, why have any Instruction Book at all? Our experience has taught us that Pianoforte "Tutors" are but of small service to the conscientious professor, who can assuredly best explain the rudiments of music to his pupils; but if such works are published those who use them are justified in expecting that at least they shall be complete as far as they go; and this we have shown "Cramer's Celebrated Tutor," in its present shape, is not.

Rain Drops. Song. Words by L. H. F. Du Terreaux. Music by Virginia Gabriel.

The fact of this song being an adaptation of the subject of a piece under the same name, by Virginia Gabriel, published many years ago, sufficiently accounts for the melody not flowing very freely with the words. Abstractedly, however, both poetry and music are worthy of commendation; but we must take exception to the harmony in the sixth bar of page 3, where the $\frac{6}{5}$ on C rises to the augmented triad on D, causing a false relation between the A natural in the left hand and the A sharp in the right, which is extremely unpleasant. In the piece the same passage is harmonised much better.

Oh, give me back the golden days. Song. Words by Matthias Barr. Music by Giovanni Sconcia.

A graceful melody, unaffectedly accompanied. The words are well expressed, and the harmonies written with commendable care. As these simple ballads, however, are usually sung by persons with but slender musical knowledge, they must not be expected to remedy engravers' errors. Let us point out to the composer, therefore, that the acciacatura in the second bar of the song should be A, instead of G; and that in the first bar of page 3, and third bar of page 5, the $\frac{3}{4}$ is omitted before the D, in the left-hand part.

To the Evening Star. Song. Poetry by John Leyden, M.A.
To Daisies. Poetry by Herrick.
Love's Farewell. Poetry by Michael Drayton.
Composed by Doyne C. Bell.

These three songs are highly favourable specimens of the talent of a composer whose name is now new to us, but who will, if we are not much mistaken, very shortly take a foremost rank amongst the vocal writers of the day. "To the Evening Star" is somewhat in the modern German school, beginning in triplets for the right hand, with a passage for the left, reminding us strongly, by the way, of the commencement of Harper's "Truth in absence." Here, however, the resemblance ceases, for the melody has much originality, and the harmonies are evidently spontaneous. As a "lied," for voice and pianoforte, this composition cannot fail to be effective. The songs written to the words of the old poets Herrick and Michael Drayton have a flavour of the period, which fully justifies the right, often assumed by mere pretenders, of "setting to music" those solid verses of a past age which, instinct with the spirit of true poetry, can never die. A flowing and appropriate melody expresses the first song with excellent effect, the change to the tonic minor, at the words "No marigolds yet closèd are," being a point worthy of attention. We like "Love's Farewell" even better. The opening subject, in F major, is extremely quaint and melodious, and again an effective use is made of the transition to the minor. Presuming that the natural before the B is meant for a flat, in the first chord of the bar after the pause, on the last page, the chromatic descent of the bass, against the minims in the voice part, is good.

Musical Jottings, useful and humorous. By Joseph Proudman.

We like the "useful" better than the "humorous" of these sketches. The difficulty of lashing the evils of the day by the force of ridicule is sufficiently proved by the fact of so few writers having achieved a lasting fame in this department of literature; and if in these portions of his work Mr. Proudman has scarcely been successful, he must remember that he fails in good company. But there is much to admire in his papers on "Psalmody." Take, for instance, the following observations on the necessity of individual sincerity in musical worship: "The idea of personal identification with the thoughts and words of our hymns and psalms is too often quite overlooked. We are prone to sing as though the believing, the hoping and confessing, the loving and praising, were all exercises of anybody's heart but our own, and having to do with any time but the present act of worship. This personal adoption and appropriation of the sacred sentiments and emotions is the first source of true expression in worship. Given this, what could be more impressive than the united utterance of five hundred lips, all warmed into glowing worship by the loving, earnest sincerity of five hundred hearts." There is also much truth in what our author observes about the "special cultivation of men's music." There can be no reason, as he says, why our seamen should not learn enough of intelligent singing to enable them to chant their sabbath services, and we cordially agree with the remark that if we aim to make them even humble singers, "we shall make them better and happier men, and no worse sailors." As we have said, our admiration of Mr. Proudman's "jottings" ends with the first part of his book. To be funny on compulsion is proverbially a difficult task; but as we presume no compulsion was exercised in this case, we may conclude that Mr. Proudman's humour was spontaneous. Miss Silvertone, whose early history commences the second part, is destined by her parents to become a solo singer; and, strangely enough, we are told that, in consequence of this resolve, her papa, "with a seer-like forethought," christened her Sonata! At the "Soirée Musicale" given to introduce her, where Mr. Monotone "thundered out the recitatives from the 'Creation,'" and Miss Arpeggio "advertised for pupils with energetic variations of her own on the Moonlight Sonata, of Beethoven's," Miss Sonata makes a grand effect with her first song. She then is requested to sing the solos in the "Creation," at a charity performance of the work, an invitation which she at once accepts, "although she had never sung an Oratorio solo in her life." But all this is a trifle to the description of the concert, in which we are informed that "Mamma Silvertone," arrayed in her full-dress cap, with a half-peeled orange in her hand, walks with her daughter into the orchestra, and coolly deposits herself in the seat of the tenor soloist. This extraordinary proceeding at the performance of a sacred work we should have thought would have been sufficiently absurd; but the nonsense culminates when it is related that between the recitative and air of the débûtante, her mother offers her the orange to refresh her. It may be said that all this is written without any notion of the possibility of such events having actually occurred; but authors who attempt this style of literature should know that it is the very absence of reality which prevents the satire from hitting the intended mark. A great satirist is so subtle a master of his style that he leaves many inexperienced readers in doubt whether he is in jest or earnest.

Melodious and Characteristic Piano Studies. By Horton C. Allison. Books 1 and 2.

Considering that so many of the modern German pianists have given to the world books of elegant and refined little sketches, upon the model of which those before us are evidently based, we see no reason why Mr. Allison should have used the word "studies" upon his title-page, especially as he has thought each piece worthy the dignity of a title. "Melodious" and "Characteristic," however, they certainly are, and infinitely better than many compositions of formidable pretensions daily thrown into a market already overstocked with such ware. From so many numbers we can but name a few for special praise. No. 1, an excellently written simple canon two in one, on the octave below; No. 6, a vivacious caprice, carefully harmonised, and sufficiently varied to be interesting both to player and listener; No. 8, a fughetta, containing some good introductory practice for this class of music; No. 11, a melodious tarantella; No. 14, a tuneful legato movement, in 6-8 rhythm, with some highly effective modulations; and No. 19, where two well-known airs are combined, may be cited as striking examples of the composer's skill. The "March," No. 2, contains some writing which we do not like (as one example of which we may mention the $\frac{4}{4}$ on E at the commencement of the 11th bar, which, with the harmony of D major on each side of it, falls most unpleasantly on the ear), and in the "Berceuse," No. 5, we scarcely think the skipping left hand part in character with the movement. But on the whole Mr. Allison may be fairly congratulated on his success; and if really good music can make its way, these pieces should command a ready and extensive sale.

Schott and Co.

Repos et Réveil. Deux Morceaux de Salon, pour violon et piano. Composés par Berthold Tours.

We cannot too highly recommend these two charming little compositions. The graceful and melodious subject, so appropriate to the due expression of the title of the first piece, is treated with much originality; and both violinist and pianist will be delighted to find that each part is so carefully and thoughtfully written as to form a duet, in the truest sense of the word, instead of a violin solo, with a pianoforte accompaniment. The second piece, "Allegro agitato," in A minor, has a vivacious theme, the scale passage with which it commences being effectively imitated in both parts throughout. Here again there is no mere accompaniment; all is good solid writing, the introduction of the tranquil subject in the tonic major forming an excellent contrast with the opening melody. With two good players the success of these unpretending little sketches is certain.

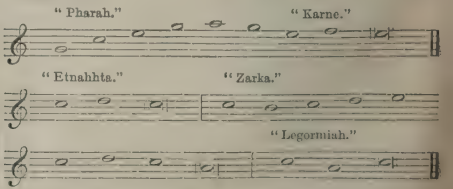
Original Correspondence.

To the Editor of the Musical Times.

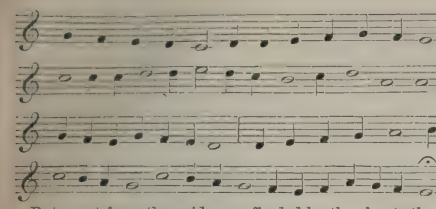
Sir,—I have much pleasure in affording information respecting the Hebrew "Musical Accents," incidentally alluded to in my former letter. R. Simeon bar Zemach Duran (who flourished in the 14th century), in Magen Abboth (page 526), states as follows: "The Musical Accents (also called trop) are a sort of melodies—of these three have remained to us: one is appropriated for the reading of the Pentateuch; the second for that of the Prophets; the third melody is for the reading of the Psalms, the Proverbs, and Book of Job."

The Sephardim have besides these different modulations for Esther, Ruth, Song of Solomon, and Jeremiah, each admirably adapted to, and expressive of the subject of each specified Book.

The following are some of these introduced musical cadences:—



In the last three quoted examples, a distinct resemblance to the "plain chant" is perceptible. In Sephardic congregations it is customary to introduce one or other of these vocal inflexions, after the reading of a verse in any of the books I have already named. But even a more marked similarity to the Roman Antiphon may be discovered in some of the Hebrew Chants; for instance, here is one they use for Psalm xvi, Hebrew Version (xv, Lat. Ver.), in some portions of which we find actual identity with the Gregorian "plain Chant."



But apart from the evidence afforded by the chants themselves, the reasoning of G. B. Martini (History of Music, vol. I., p. 350), is to any impartial reader, conclusive on the subject. He says, "These are the Hebrew Chants of the Psalmodies which, ever since the time of David and Solomon have been transmitted from one generation to another, and therefore go beyond the first half of the first age of the church. Is not this sufficient to convince us that the Apostles who were born Hebrews, brought up in the custom of their nation, wont to frequent the Temple and engage in the prayers and divine praises therein recited, should retain the same method, and use the same chants with which the people used to respond to the Levitical Choir?"

Again it is quite improbable that the Early Christians should have adopted other melodies than these, for not only were they averse to the melodies employed by idolators, but their use was prohibited to them by the pagans themselves. We read that Clement of Alexandria, in the third century, would allow the guitar and lyre to be used at social festivites, "because David played on them;" but prohibited the flute, because that instrument "was used for the purpose of idolatry." They, therefore, could not use any other than the old Hebrew melodies with which they were acquainted from early habit and association.

Unfortunately any kind of musical notation was utterly unknown to the Jews, and therefore many of these melodies were forgotten and lost in the course of time; but there are still several that have been traditionally preserved, and transmitted through subsequent generations with religious care and veneration; and the fact of these being the same in nearly every Jewish congregation, however widely separated, and having no means of communication with each other, affords ample proof of their antiquity, genuineness, and general adoption; and there is very little doubt that they have reached us nearly in their original form.

Mr. Rumsey alludes to the productions of the Hebrew poets, whose solemn hymns are now incorporated in the Jewish Liturgy. I have myself heard many compositions of Gabirol, R. Judah Ha-levi, and Moses Aben Ezra,—the three great hymnic poets,—sung to various melodies, and not always of Hebrew origin; in fact the objectionable practice of adapting secular tunes of the day to sacred verses indulged in by some of our own dissenting congregations, is not altogether unknown to our Jewish brethren. In the performance of these hymns, no interspersed "musical accents" are used, but in the poems themselves, Scriptural texts are interwoven in such a manner as to form integral parts of them, though not having the slightest relation to the subject in the original context.

As Mr. Rumsey truly says, the consideration of this subject is most interesting, both from a musical and ritualistic point of view, and I must therefore apoligize for having intruded on your columns to a far greater extent than I originally intended.

Yours truly,
Frederic Archer.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—The last resource of the would-be arguer is abuse, although this mode of proceeding has, to the best of my knowledge, never been recognised by any standard treatise on Logic. Dr. Stainer has scarcely strengthened his case by adopting this course, and I cannot but think that if he will allow himself another two months for extra reflection, he must awake to the conviction that, however ingenious wilful mis-readings and distortion of facts may be, such a defence (if defence it may be called) is scarcely wise under existing circumstances.

Solomon once expressed an earnest wish that "his enemy had written a book." I feel strongly tempted, in the present instance, to slightly plagiarise (if Dr. Stainer will kindly allow me to use the term) the wise man's wish, and, while repudiating anything like ill-feeling in the matter, express my satisfaction that mine enemy has written a letter.

It is doubtless very ridiculous on my part to advocate a suggestion rejected by Dr. Stainer as inapplicable to the case in point, but I once more repeat the assertion that the addition of a bar at the beginning of a chant is the only plan available for carrying out the proposed alteration; a change, however, I consider utterly purposeless for reasons which are almost self-evident; indeed my opponent acknowledges that "many known chants if written in this new form would present absurd forms of melody!"

Dr. Stainer complains that I "draw conclusions from his premises." Allow me to assure him that I am never likely to do this, as it could not possibly lead to any satisfactory result, for his antecedent propositions are, to put it mildly, somewhat peculiar. He here states, for instance, in the midst of a lucidly (?) worded passage, that "the sentence from "Elijah" is analogous to the form of a chant if the second reciting note belongs to the first half" (the italics are his own,) but it does not; the necessary identity of musical and verbal accent rendering this impossible. On the other hand, I fail to see his object in making the comparison, more especially as he deprecates the evil practice of manufacturing chants from well-known works, although he immediately afterwards presents us with a double chant he has adapted from the opening phrases of the slow movement in the Sonata Pathetique of Beethoven, the harmonies being, of course, altered and improved! I must confess this so-called argument is somewhat bewildering,—in fact, such reasoning as this is neither "playful" nor "edifying," but I am inclined to think somewhat absurd.

A fragment from Mendelssohn written with an altered accent constitutes a "jumble," to borrow Dr. Stainer's refined phraseology. Granted; but will he permit me to enquire the exact designation he would give to a chant constructed on his, or rather Professor Oakeley's principles, the salient feature of which is total disregard of accent? I can quite understand that any fair enunciation of such notions as these is strongly objected to, but while seeking recognition, Dr. Stainer must not complain if his reckless statements are subjected to honest criticism.

That portion of a chant which closes with a double bar is certainly a phrase, and although a complete musical sentence may sometimes contain but one phrase, such a circumstance is somewhat exceptional. Were it otherwise both terms would be practically synonymous. Such a view of the case is quite in accordance with Dr. Marx's definition, and therefore Dr. Stainer's feeble sarcasm at this point in his letter seems somewhat irrelevant. May I, on my part, ask why he designates the extract from "Elijah" already alluded to as a sentence, and yet, when it is written as a single chant, he styles it a phrase?

An Oxford graduate surely must be aware that the Greek alphabet contains both ε and η and consequently Θέσις might easily be mistaken for Θῆσις—if anglicised, thus, thesis—the plan adopted by Dr. Stainer. The substitution of δ for θ, concerning which he favours you with so much erudite verbosity, was so palpable a typographical error that I really did not think it necessary to correct it in a subsequent number. I did intend Θέσις, which, as Dr. Stainer kindly informs us, signifies non-accent or up-beat. He seems unaware that an up-beat may be strongly accented, although I presume he has heard of "syncopation," when, I am inclined to think, artificial accent is sometimes to be met with.

The new organist of St. Paul's next favours us with a lengthy description of three and four bar rhythm, which may be intensely interesting to Oxford musical students, if not to the musical world in general; but I still maintain that the symmetrical form of a chant is more readily discernible in the scherzo I alluded to than in either of the extracts from Mendelssohn and Beethoven furnished by Dr. Stainer; as musicians will readily understand.

If he finds a difficulty in making "even the Gloria Patri move congenial with the movement of music," is it not passing strange that he should have adopted the recitative form, and that, too, without bars, in one of his anthems? However, in this instance he has altogether mistaken the purport of my quotation from the Rev. E. Irving's introductory essay to a Philadelphia edition of "Horne on the Psalms." He does not refer to chants, but anthems; and what can be finer than some of the antiphonal effects in many compositions of this kind for double choir, illustrating certain verses of the Psalms? I must here express my surprise that he still persists in stating that "the daily Psalms which he has sung from his youth up were translated into English Prose." He surely cannot be aware of the original form in which these Poems appeared, a poetic form still preserved in our English version, for in Hebrew poetry antiphonal contrast is the conspicuous feature, and one cannot fail to observe that this characteristic is retained in our translation, between the portions of a verse separated by a colon. I have yet to learn, also, that sentences in English prose are, even as a rule, divided more or less in the middle by a colon; in fact, this mark of punctuation is not often used by the better class of writers amongst us, unless the distinct contrast between members of a sentence is intended to be enforced.

By way of conclusion, Dr. Stainer says that I find fault with him "for proceeding to found an argument on the hypothesis that 4 and 3 make 7." I think that people in general have ceased to regard that fact as an hypothesis; such absurd metaphysical pedantry is now happily laughed out of court. My statement ran thus: "He states that a single chant consists of two parts, containing 3 and 4 bars respectively, each separated by a double bar. This he scans as one phrase of 7 bars, simply because 3 + 4 = 7, and on this hypothesis (i.e., the existence of one phrase under such circumstances) proceeds to found his argument."

Now, may I be permitted to recapitulate briefly my objections to the Oakeley-Stainer theory, already expressed in my former letter, but which, of course by pure accident, Dr. Stainer has overlooked, and confined his attention to points not at all affecting the question at issue.

If a chant has any definite scholastic form (which however I deny), the strong accent on the second reciting note clearly marks the commencement of a new phrase at that point.

In writing a chant, identity of musical and verbal accent is an indispensable condition; in fact any shape the chant possesses is entirely dependent on the prosodical arrangement of the words it is intended to illustrate. These necessary elements of chant structure are utterly destroyed by the new method of proceeding.

But this evidently does no violence to Dr. Stainer's principles, as is evident in the following extract from one of his recent songs, "Jilting."

It is however universally acknowledged that accent affects the meaning of any musical passage (apart from any connection it may have with verse) in precisely the same manner as punctuation governs the sense of a literary sentence; change it and all identity is destroyed, as I think the Mendelssohn "jumble" fairly proves—for this would certainly be a plagiarism, if accent could be disregarded after Dr. Stainer's orignal manner.

I maintain that a chant is simply recitative, the double bars being introduced to mark the antiphonal division of each verse at the colon, and the single bars to assist the singers in adapting the interspersed melodial notes to certain fixed syllables immediately preceding the close of each half verse; and without such a quasi-mechanical expedient, the labours of our eminent church musicians in the vexata quæstio of "pointing" would have produced but few practical results.

While apologizing for the length of this letter, allow me to say that I am perfectly prepared to uphold everything I have advanced if Dr. Stainer will deal logically with the question; but vituperative invective simply involves an utterly needless waste of time, more especially as no possible advantage can thence ensue.

I am, yours truly,
Frederic Archer.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—Having for a long time noticed a great want of uniformity in the use of accidentals in music, I wish to call attention to the matter, and give specimens of cases which have come under my own observation.

Firstly, Take the case of accidentals in a single bar. In the bar (A) every one acknowledges that the 4th note is F♯. But in the bar (B), where the 4th note is an octave above (or it might occur two octaves above), some musicians place a ♮ before it, thus implying that without the ♯ it would be ♮. The latter case I think is not correct. Again, when the notes are in octaves, some write the accidentals to only one of the notes, as in (C); others write them to both notes, as in (D). The latter plan I think is correct. Again, when accidentals are placed before appoggiaturas some writers give them the same influence over the rest of the bar, as accidentals placed before the regular notes; others allow the appoggiaturas to be influenced, but no more. Again, when a change of clef occurs in a stave (E), some hold that the 5th and 7th crotchets are F♯; others say they are ♮. I agree with the former view.

Secondly, Take the case of two bars. Some hold that an accidental does not extend its influence beyond the bar in which it occurs. If this rule were generally acknowledged, it would do away with many inconveniences. Why should we see naturals placed one, two, or even three bars further on than where the accidentals occurred? Others refer to an old rule about accidentals extending their influence into the next bar. And even this rule (which I think ought to be regarded as obsolete) is not given alike by different authorities. One says, if a bar ends with an accidental note, and the next bar commences with the same note, then the accidental affects the first note of the second bar, but no further. Others say that in the above case, the accidental affects the whole of the second bar. I have seen specimens of each of these cases. One writer has a phrase occurring twice; the first time he writes it thus (F), putting F♯ before the 5th note; the second time it is written thus (G), putting F♯ before the 6th note, saying that the 5th note is F♯ because the 4th note is F♯.

Thirdly, There is the case of the right hand or left-hand part passing into the other stave, e. g. (H) and (K). In (H) the 7th quaver of the right-hand part does not need a ♯ printing in front of it, because there is F♯ already in the bass stave. In (K), the 6th quaver of the left-hand part does need a ♯ printing in front of it, because there is not F♯ in the treble stave, and the F♯ which has occurred in the bass stave does not extend its influence into the treble stave. Yet I have met with cases in which accidentals occurring in one stave, have been allowed to influence the other stave.

I find it a most difficult task to teach the rules concerning accidentals to my pupils; for, as I have shown, we are continually finding cases in which one writer uses one rule, and another writer the opposite.

I would suggest that a rule be put forth by proper musical authority, which would set aside all the various ways of writing mentioned above, so as to have a uniform system of using accidentals. The following rule will I think include every case I have mentioned:—

An accidental affects the note before which it is placed, and all succeeding notes of the same name, in the bar and in the stave in which it occurs.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Dear Sir,—In the criticisms in your valuable paper upon the concerts of Modern Chamber Music, I find myself repeatedly reproached for confining my choice of music to that of German composers, and consequently neglecting English works. It certainly would be difficult to compile three programmes of chamber music without drawing largely on the works of German composers. But I can at once refute the charge of partiality and exclusiveness, which your able critic brings against me, by drawing attention to three composers who were originally included in my programmes, viz., Gade, a Dane, Rubinstein, a Russian, and Chopin, a Pole, not to mention the songs by authors of various nationalities. But, he says, "Why not have works of English composers?" I answer, Where are they? I am fully aware that Sir S. Bennett and Mr. Macfarren have written important works of chamber music, but, as my concerts are given for the purpose of introducing music not generally known to a London audience, I have, as a matter of course, omitted their well-known compositions from my programmes. I must confess I know of no other English composers whose works of chamber music can rank with those of Sir S. Bennett and Mr. Macfarren, and with those I selected for my concerts; and I shall be only too thankful to your critic if he can mention any. I can do no more than carefully study the catalogue of printed chamber music issued by the principal music-sellers of Europe, and select from the works named in them those which, in my humble opinion, are the most important. It is strange that, for instance, in the catalogue of Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co., I find no mention of those numerous English compositions your critic speaks of. Such works may exist, for aught I know, in manuscript; but in that case, if they are not known and performed, the blame would seem to attach rather to the editors who do not publish them than to myself. I beg that, in justice to me, you will insert these few remarks in your valuable paper, and oblige

Yours very truly,

56, Gloucester Crescent, Willem Coenen.
Regents Park, 12th April, 1872.

[In Mr. Coenen's announcement of his concerts we were not informed that they were given "for the purpose of introducing music not generally known to a London audience." The title "Concerts of Modern Music" would assuredly not lead us to imagine that the works of English composers were to be excluded; and certainly, even if the chamber compositions of Sir S. Bennett and Mr. Macfarren are known, many of them are not half as much known as they deserve to be.—The Writer of the Notice.]

Brief Summary of Country News.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

Aldershot.—Mr. Conway Brown, organist, gave his annual benefit concert on the 15th ult., with a chorus of fifty voices, and the string band of the 17th Regiment. Hatton's "April showers" was enthusiastically re-demanded, as was also "O luce di quest' anima," well sung by Mrs. Mark. The song and chorus "Good night, farewell," composed by Dr. Garrett, and performed with full orchestra and chorus, gave great satisfaction.——A "Monster" Concert was recently given at the East Cavalry Barracks, and proved a great success. Professor Mandell's Cantata, a Symphony by Haydn, a part-song, "Comrades in arms" (sung by 200 voices selected from the various Regiments, assisted by several of the Officers), and many popular overtures, were performed to the great delight of a large and fashionable audience, the whole terminating with "God bless the Prince of Wales" (Brinley Richards), and "God save the Queen," performed by a "Monster Band" and chorus, about eight hundred in number, including all the voices, the "string" band, the various bands of the Regiments, and all the drums of the division. The purpose of the concert was to aid the funds for the benefit of Trinity Church.

Alloa.—A grand concert was given, under distinguished patronage, by the Alloa Musical Association, on the evening of Wednesday, the 3rd ult., when selections from Handel's Samson and Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise were performed. The choir numbered nearly eighty voices, accompanied by an orchestra of twenty, comprising the Dreschler-Hamilton family. Mr. Alfred Alexander, organist of St. John's Church, was an efficient conductor.——At a meeting of the Alloa Musical Association last week a very handsome ivory gold-mounted bâton was presented by the members to their conductor, Mr. Alfred Alexander, organist of St. John's Church, in token of their appreciation of his valuable services to that musical body. The presentation was made by the secretary, Mr. James Muil, and suitably acknowledged by Mr. Alexander.

Anstruther.—The East of Fife Musical Association gave a public performance of Handel's Samson on Friday evening, the 12th ult., in the Parish Church of Anstruther Easter, before a large audience. The orchestra and chorus (all amateurs, under the direction of an amateur conductor) numbered nearly 100 performers. The solo parts were undertaken by members of the Association with much success. The members of the orchestra played in a praiseworthy manner throughout, and are to be congratulated on the high state of efficiency to which they have attained. The choir, with some slight exceptions, sang with commendable precision and firmness throughout, the most effective choruses being "Fix'd in His everlasting seat," and "Let their celestial concerts all unite." It should be recorded that this Association has the honour of being the first in Scotland to give an Oratorio, wholly unassisted by professional aid.

Barnsley.—On Sunday, the 7th ult., at the Parish Church, an excellent selection of music was taken at Matins, Holy Communion (Choral), Litany, and at Evensong. The Preces, Suffrages, Gloria Tibi, Deo Gratias, Sursum Corda, and Dignum et justum, were from Marbeck; the processional and other hymns from "Ancient and Modern;" Psalms, Helmore; Te Deum, Dr. Garrett, in F; Benedictus, Dr. Dykes, in F; Offertory Sentences, W. H. Monk; Kyrie Eleison, Credo, Sanctus, and Gloria in Excelsis, Dr. Hayne, in G; Agnus Dei, from Missa de Angelis; Recessional, Parisian; Magnificat, Best, in E; Nunc Dimittis, Best, in A. The anthem, "Now upon the first day of the week" (W. H. Monk), was admirably rendered. The trio, "Hallelujah," for treble voices, and the duet, "Why seek ye," were excellently sung by Masters Asquith (1st treble), Atkinson (2nd), Stead (3rd); their voices blending with much effect. The tenor recitative, "And it came to pass," was also well given by Mr. Price. Handel's "Hallelujah Chorus," which concluded Evensong, was sung with precision and vigour. The Revs. H. J. Day, M.A., Rector, and J. L. Brereton, B.A., Curate, intoned the services throughout, which were full choral.

Belfast.—On the 18th ult. a concert and readings, under the auspices of the Church of Ireland's Young Men's Society, were given in the Hall, Clarence Place. The concert was opened with Mendelssohn's "Farewell to the forest," which was rendered with much precision. Miss L. Walton and Miss J. Walton gave the duet, "We come to thee, Savoy," in a very pleasing manner. Miss L. Walton sang Franz Abt's "Ever thine" in excellent style; and Miss Henrietta Burn, a young lady with a voice of much purity, gave Balfe's song "Killarney," and in the second part Haydn's canzonet, "My mother bids me bind my hair," in both of which she displayed great taste, and was warmly received. Mr. Cotton was much applauded for his readings. The promoters of the concert are highly indebted to Mrs. Robinson for the assistance rendered in the accompaniments to the solos and duets. Miss E. Beatty accompanied the glees, and Mr. Thomas D. Baird conducted the concert with efficiency.

Belper.—On Easter Day special thanksgiving services were held in St. Peter's Church, the Easter offerings of the congregation being devoted to repairs and improvements needed in the organ. The morning prayer was choral; the anthem, "If with all your hearts," from Elijah, commenced with the recitative, "Ye people, &c.," which with the solo was taken by Mr. J. W. Turner, of London, and was excellently rendered. This was followed by the quartet, "Cast thy burden upon the Lord," which was well sung by the choir. The hymns were 107 and 114, the effect of the latter, sung heartily by the whole congregation, being almost beyond description. The sermon was by the Rev. F A. Friend, "Christ is risen." In the afternoon the Litany (choral) commenced with the processional hymn 110. The other hymns, 136 and 107, and the National Anthem, which concluded the service, were accompanied by brass instruments in addition to the organ, which added greatly to the effect. The anthem, "The Glory of the Lord," by Sir John Goss, consisted of a quartet and chorus by the choir, and was admirably sung. The sermon was preached by the Vicar, from the verse, "This is the day the Lord hath made," and was as earnest and plain-spoken as it was practical and we trust useful. At the evening service the whole of the large building was one mass of people, and the churchwardens were engaged to the last moment in introducing additional seats into the aisles and other available spaces. The anthem consisted of recitatives, and the solo "Thou didst not leave, &c.," followed by the "Hallelujah Chorus," from the Messiah. Of Mr. Turner's rendering of the recitatives and solos, in this and the morning service, we cannot speak too highly. The collections during the day amounted to £37, which will form a good beginning of the fund required for so worthy an object.——On Easter Tuesday, Belper was indebted to Mr. J. W. Turner for a most successful and admirably arranged concert. The large room was well filled with an appreciative audience. Mr. Turner was repeatedly encored, and Miss Sutton and Mr. Ellis were recalled more than once. We must also mention the conspicuous talent of Mr. Naylor (cornet) and Mr. Barlow (clarionet): nor must we forget the good service of Mr. Brooks, in the all-important part of accompanist.

Birmingham.—On the 11th ult. Mr. Stimpson delivered, at the Town Hall, under the auspices of the Church of England Young Men's Association, the first of two lectures entitled "Church Music; as it was; as it is; and as it ought to be." Taking the first part of his subject the lecturer ably traced the history of the art from the earliest times, and gave a very lucid account of the gradual growth of Church music. In the course of the lecture illustrations of ancient and modern music referred to by Mr. Stimpson were rendered by an efficient choir.

Bury St. Edmunds.—The St. Mary's Choir Glee and Madrigal Society gave the concluding concert of the season on the 11th ult., before a large audience. The glees and part-songs were sung with much precision and delicacy, showing that an immense amount of care and time must have been bestowed on the rehearsals by the conductor, who evidently has his choir well under control. Miss Blanche Reives was the principal solo vocalist, and created a very favourable impression. Mr. T. B. Richardson (organist of St. Mary's Church) conducted with his usual ability, and Mr. G. Whitehead (assistant organist) accompanied with taste. A small but excellent band gave several instrumental pieces.

CANTERBURY.—Mr. Longhurst presented a good programme for his twenty-third annual concert on Monday, the 15th ult. Miss Ellen Horne, Madame Poole, Mr. Moulding, Mr. Higgins, and Mr. Rhodes were the vocalists. The highly dramatic trio from Mr. Longhurst's new Oratorio, for Shimei, Abishai, and David (Mr. Higgins, Madame Poole, and Mr. Moulding), was re-demanded; and the grand march for orchestra and chorus was most admirably performed, and much applauded. Mr. Rhodes sang "Pro peccatis" from the Stabat Mater of Rossini with great artistic skill; and Miss Ellen Horne charmed the audience with Levey's "Esmeralda," which came rather too late in the programme for the encore to be responded to. Mr. John Cheshire played two harp pieces with great success, the first a selection of Mendelssohn's melodies, the second a potpourri of English airs. The other solo instrumentalist was M. Chandeau Lane, who created a decided effect by his excellent violin playing. The orchestral music was very fine; the Oberon overture never having been played so well in Canterbury.

CHELMSFORD.—Mr. Harold E. Stidolph's benefit concert was given at the Shire Hall on the 3rd ult. The instrumental portion of the programme included a trio by Mozart, excellently played by Messrs. W. H. Eayres (violin), Walter Pettit (violoncello), and H. E. Stidolph (pianoforte). Miss Edith Wynne, Miss Marion Severn, and Mr. Kerr Gedge contributed vocal pieces with much success; and Mr. Hilton's fine bass voice and cultivated style were displayed to the utmost advantage in "The knight and the maiden," and Handel's "Honour and arms." Mr. Stidolph played a pianoforte solo with decided success, and also accompanied with much care and judgment.

CHELTENHAM.—Two successful performances of Judas Maccabæus were given at the Corn Exchange on Easter Monday, the 12th ult. The band and chorus numbered 100 performers. The choir consisted of the members of Mr. J. A. Matthews's Choral Class. The solos were sung by the Misses Clarke, Julia Jones, and Taylor, Mr. W. Grayson, of Lichfield Cathedral, Mr. Twynning, and Mr. Halford. A new organ was erected by Mr. Williams for the performances, consisting of eighteen stops, and was played by Messrs. E. Brind and Hooper. The choruses were well sung, "We hear" and "See the conquering hero comes" being encored upon both occasions. Mr. E. G. Woodward was leader of the band, and Mr. J. A. Matthews conducted.

CHEPSTOW.—A concert in aid of parochial charities took place at the Beaufort Arms Hotel Assembly Room on the 12th ult. The principal vocalists were Miss Smith, Miss English, Miss Hanson, Mrs. Lawrence, the Rev. T. H. Belcher, the Rev. W. D. V. Duncombe, the Rev T. H. Davies, and Mr. G. Dewdney. Several instrumental solos were given with much success by Miss E. Hanson (harp), E. T. Brydges, Esq. (flute), and Misses Hughes and Watkins (pianoforte). Mr. J. O. Smith presided with ability at the pianoforte.

CHESTERFIELD.—The Chesterfield Parish Church Choir recently met together to take leave of one of their members, Mr. Henry Norman Biggin, who has been appointed organist to the Parish Church of High Wycombe, and at the same time to present him with an elegantly bound copy of Sir Julius Benedict's Oratorio, St. Peter, with the following inscription:—"Presented to Mr. Henry Norman Biggin by the members of the Chesterfield Parish Church Choir, as a small memento of their respect and esteem."

CLIFTON.—The public is indebted to Mr. J. C. Daniel for two concerts of a superior order, which were given on the 8th ult. One was held in the afternoon in the smaller Victoria Room, which was crowded to excess. The great attraction was the performance of Rossini's Stabat Mater. The vocalists were Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, her sister, Mdlle. José Sherrington, Madame Poole, Mr. Nelson Varley and Mr. Lander. It is due to the singers, one and all, to say that they achieved a marked success, the special feature of the performance being the effective rendering of the air "Inflammatus," by Madame Sherrington. The choruses merged into quartets, and the accompaniment was confined to the Mustel organ, which was performed by Chevalier Lemmens, and a grand pianoforte, at which Mr. King Hall presided. The second part, both morning and evening, comprised a series of popular songs, with solos on the Mustel organ and piano. The evening concert was held in the larger room, and the spacious saloon was nearly filled. The principal piece was Spohr's Oratorio The Last Judgment, with the Clifton Vocal Association, under the direction of Mr. W. B. Curtis, as a chorus, and the Mustel organ and the pianoforte for the accompaniment. We believe Dr. Spohr's Last Judgment has not been performed in its entirety in public in Bristol since 1858. It was then given, as now, at the Victoria Rooms, under the direction of Mr. W. B. Curtis. Madame Sherrington was enthusiastically encored in the duet with Mr. Varley, "Forsake me not in this dread hour." The quartet and chorus, "Blest are the departed," the solo (by Mr. Varley) and chorus, "Holy, holy, holy," and quartet, "Yes, every tear and every sorrow," were also splendidly rendered, and the concluding chorus in the Oratorio, "Thine is the kingdom &c." especially so.

DERBY.—On the 17th ult. the Derby Choral Union gave its last concert for the season, Handel's Dettingen Te Deum and Beethoven's Mass in C being the works chosen for the performance. The soprano parts were admirably sustained by Mrs. Thompson, the contralto by Mrs. Crowthen, and the other vocalists were Messrs. Coulson, Naylor, and Smith. Mr. W. W. Woodward has a right to be congratulated on the success of his pupils the whole of the choruses being excellently given. Mr. Farmer was leader of the band (which was highly efficient), and Mr. Trimnell presided at the organ.

DUDLEY.—Handel's Messiah was given in the Public Hall on Tuesday evening, the 2nd ult., being the Choral Society's first performance. The members were selected from the various choirs and amateur musical unions in the town and neighbourhood. More than ordinary interest was taken in the performance, and a crowded and fashionable audience was present. Upon taking his place at the conductor's desk, Mr. Eyland was received with a greeting as cordial as it was deserved. The choruses, with scarcely an exception, were given with excellent effect. The principal vocalists were Mrs. A. J. Sutton, Miss A. M. Ridgway, Mr. W. Grayson, and Mr. J. Tuke. A harmonium was employed for the recitatives and choruses, and Mr. Leyshon ably presided.

EAST BARNET.—On Friday evening, the 19th ult., a concert was given in the East Barnet National School, in aid of the funds of that building, which was opened on the previous Thursday by the Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of Rochester. The audience was a fashionable one, all the leading families in the neighbourhood being represented. The artists who took part in the concert were ladies and gentlemen connected with the neighbourhood, and several gentlemen from London, whose names were not published in the programme. The latter gave the greatest satisfaction, and elicited frequent applause. Mr. Rogers was also encored, and the other local amateurs were heartily applauded. At the close a vote of thanks was carried by acclamation, on the motion of the Rev. C. E. Hadow, to those who had so kindly taken part in the proceedings.

EASTOVER.—On Monday evening, the 1st ult., a concert took place at the St. John's New School-room, under the management of Mr. W. C. Dyer, organist of St. John's Church, assisted by the choir and other friends. The choruses and part-songs, and the glee, "The Winds Whistle Cold," were very effectively rendered. "The Yeoman's wedding song," by Mr. Leng, and "The maid of Seaton Valley," written and composed by Mr. W. Akerman, of Eastover, and sung by Mr. J. Dyer, were encored; but the pieces which were most appreciated were the violin solos by Mr. A. E. Dyer, and the duets on pianoforte and harmonium, by Mr. W. C. Dyer and Mr. A. E. Dyer. These were brilliantly executed, as was also a pianoforte solo by Mr. W. C. Dyer, who may be congratulated upon the success of the entertainment. The audience numbered about 150.

EDINBURGH.—On Saturday evening, the 30th March, Professor Oakeley gave an Easter Eve recital of music to a crowded and fashionable audience, in the Music Class-room, Park Place. The programme was highly interesting; and it is hardly necessary to add that the various pieces were played with the Professor's characteristic ability. This is the last recital for the season, although there may be yet a few special performances for local musical societies.——IN St. Paul's Episcopal Church, York Place, the pro-Cathedral of the diocese, on Easter Day, the services were rendered in a very jubilant manner. Although in the forenoon the Psalms were read, the Te Deum and Jubilate were sung—the service being Boyce in A—and they were admirably given by the choir. In the afternoon, the versicles were taken to Tallis, and the canticles simply chanted; but the service was sufficiently enriched by the introduction of an anthem composed by Professor Oakeley, the honorary director of the choir in St. Paul's, and by the appropriate chorus, "Worthy is the Lamb," from the Messiah. The special anthem which was on the theme, "This is the day which the Lord hath made; we will rejoice and be glad in it," is written in a thoroughly scientific and, at the same time, reverent manner, which shows that Professor Oakeley must inevitably make his mark in this department of music. The choir, which was augmented for the occasion by several ladies and gentlemen of the congregation, rendered the anthem with much effect. Handel's "Worthy is the Lamb" followed, and was of course given with, if possible, more heartiness, it being familiar as the alphabet to every singer, and almost so to every worshipper. After the anthem the Rev. Mr. Montgomery preached an eloquent sermon appropriate to the day.——AT the funeral of Bishop Terrot, at St. Paul's Church, on the 9th ult., the service was rendered in a most solemn and impressive manner, an appropriate conclusion to which was a very beautiful hymn, by the Rev. J. Gregory Smith, set to music by Professor Oakeley. The composition is remarkable for a graceful flow of melody, which expresses the words with true religious feeling. Professor Oakeley presided at the organ during the whole of the service.

FOLKESTONE.—At the Town Hall on the 4th ult. a sacred concert was held for charitable purposes. The programme included selections from Rossini's Stabat Mater, Mendelssohn's Elijah, &c. The principal vocalists, Miss Lacoste and Mr. Rhodes, were highly successful, and the unaccompanied Quartet, "God is a Spirit" (from Sir S. Bennett's Woman of Samaria) was so well sung by Master Cuckney, Miss Moore, Mr. Dale, and Mr. Rhodes, as to be unanimously re-demanded. Mendelssohn's "Judge me, O God," gave the choir an opportunity of showing its powers, the men's voices, especially, telling with wonderful effect in the unison passages. Beethoven's "Hallelujah Chorus" was also very finely sung. The first part of the concert was conducted by the Rev. C. J. Ridsdale, and the second by the Rev. E. Husband.

FORTON, GOSPORT.—A morning concert was given at St. John's Schools on Tuesday the 16th ult., under distinguished patronage, and before a very large audience. A great feature in the programme was the performance on the "Gigerila," a Tyrolese instrument of wood and straw. The Forton and Elson Choral Society, consisting of 45 members, and conducted by Rev. R. Lascelles, sang several pieces with much precision and care. Of the soloists mention must be made of Miss Doudney, Miss L. Brown, Miss Linford, and Mr. McCheane. The concert, with a very few alterations, was repeated in the evening, when the room was again inconveniently crowded.

GLASGOW.—The members of the Glasgow Choral Union gave, on the 2nd ult., in the City Hall, a performance of Bach's greatest work, The Passion Music" (according to St. Matthew). The principal vocalists were Madame Rudersdorff, Miss Alice Fairman, Mr. Arthur Byron and Mr. Winn. This was the first performance in Scotland of this wonderful creation, and it was gratifying to observe that the interest in the work was such as to bring together a crowded house. The Society issued an admirable programme, containing much valuable information regarding the composition itself, as well as a great part of Macfarren's able analysis of the music. Madame Rudersdorff was most successful in parts where dramatic effect was required, such as in her share of the duet, "My Saviour." The devotional airs, "Break and die," and "Jesus, Saviour," are not well suited to her style. Miss Alice Fairman possesses what is now becoming very rare—a genuine contralto voice, which she uses with good effect. The other solo parts were sustained by Mr. Arthur Byron and Mr. Winn. The choir during the whole evening displayed an earnestness worthy of the music they were interpreting. Considering the short time the members have had for the study of the work, they acquitted themselves most creditably. Many of the choruses and chorales were well given. The chorus "Have lightnings and thunders" was grandly and firmly declaimed, and created an impressive effect. "Let Him be crucified" was finely rendered; and the explosion on the word "Barabbas" was startling; "O tell us, O Christ," was also admirably given; whilst the execution of the double chorus at the end, "In tears of grief," was so excellent as to send away the audience thoroughly pleased. The first orchestra was led by Mr. Pollitzer, and the second by Mr. Daly. For the most part, the strings during the evening were satisfactory, but at times the wood instruments were not in strict tune. The violin obbligato to the air, "Have mercy on me," was exceedingly well played by Mr. Pollitzer. Mr. Lambeth, as conductor, deserves praise for the manner in which he discharged his unusually arduous duties. Mr. Peace presided at the organ, and Mr. Berger at the piano.——The fourth annual concert by the choir of Queen's Park Established Church (Rev. Mr. M'Corquodale's), was held in the church on Thursday evening, the 28th March, when were produced Mendelssohn's setting of the 95th Psalm, the motett "Hear my prayer," by the same composer, and Meyerbeer's "Pater Noster," with selections from Haydn, Gounod, and Sullivan. Taken altogether, the concert may be said to have been the most satisfactory the choir has yet given. A perfect rendering was given of "Hear my prayer," the beautiful solo in which was sung with the utmost delicacy and refinement of taste—the executant being a French lady. The tenor solos in Mendelssohn's 95th Psalm were taken exclusively by a soprano, and with considerable success. The singing of the "Pater Noster" of Meyerbeer was highly creditable. The conductor of the choir—Mr. Robert Donaldson—led with his usual care and good taste. The accompaniments were supplied on the organ by Messrs. Montague Smith and Alfred Knight, and on the piano by Mr. Emile Berger. The church was quite filled.

Gloucester.—The last concert for the season was given in the Shire Hall, on Tuesday, the 16th ult. The works performed were Barnby's Rebekah, and W. H. Birch's Operetta Robin Hood. Both were much enjoyed, and encores in the latter work were frequently demanded. The principal vocalists were Miss Julia Jones, Messrs. Twyanning, Phillips and Pickford. Mr. J. A. Matthews, of Cheltenham, presided at the organ; conductor, Mr. Hunt.

Grange.—On the 10th ult. the Musical Society gave its second concert, in the Institution, before a large audience. The first part consisted of Mozart's First Mass, in the solo portions of which Miss Hubbersty, Miss Cairns, Messrs. George Bush and Ashley were highly satisfactory. In the second part Miss Wakefield created a genuine effect by her singing of Gounod's song, "There is a green hill far away," and several other solos were excellently given. Great praise is due to Mr. Bather, the conductor, for the perfection to which he has brought the choir, the choruses throughout the evening having been most efficiently rendered.

Grantham.—Two concerts, under the direction of Madame Sillèn (the talented conductress of the performances of the Philharmonic Society), were given with much success at the Corn Exchange, on Easter Tuesday. The programme at the morning concert included Beethoven's Sonata, for pianoforte and violin, in F major (Op. 24), excellently played by Madame Sillèn and Herr Pettersson, Mozart's Quartet, for two violins, viola, and violoncello, given with equal effect by Messrs. Petterson, Wells, Skelton, and Ellis, and Beethoven's solo Sonata, in C major, in which Madame Sillèn evinced exceptionally high powers as an exponent of the most exacting classical music. In the evening a violin solo by Herr Petterson, a duet by Weber for pianoforte and violin (Madame Sillèn and Herr Pettersson), and a trio by Mozart for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello (Madame Sillèn, Herr Petterson, and Mr. Ellis), were interesting features in the selection, and deservedly applauded. Several orchestral pieces were also given with much effect at both concerts, and vocal music was contributed by Mrs. Drake, Misses Norris, Alma Minta, Lloyd and Brown, Mr. J. E. Swift (principal bass of Peterborough Cathedral), Messrs. M. Norris and Herr Petterson. Madame Sillèn deserves the warmest congratulations on the able manner in which the music, at both the morning and evening concerts, was rendered.

Greasbro'.—The twelfth annual concert of the Greasbro' Church Choir was given in the School-room under the Church, on Easter Monday. The programme was well selected, and the manner in which the pieces were rendered reflects the highest credit on Mr. Warburton, the organist and choirmaster. The part-songs were all well received, as were also the solos.

Great Yarmouth.—On the 18th ult., the Messiah was performed at the Drill Hall with much success, the principal parts being sustained by Miss Annie Sinclair, Miss Marion Severn, Mr. Kerr Gedge and Mr. Lawler. The choruses were on the whole well rendered. Mr. H. Stonex was conductor, Mr. Dyer leader of the band, and Mr. T. Tunbridge accompanist.

Haggerston.—Mr. George Legge, for ten years organist of St. Mary's Church, was presented on Tuesday, the 9th ult., with a testimonial, consisting of a silver tea and coffee service and salver, with an inscription on the latter. The supper at which the presentation took place was attended by about seventy ladies and gentlemen, old members of the congregation, gentlemen who had been members of the choir and former churchwardens. Mr. Legge's especial interest in his duties connected with the church, his great courtesy to all with whom he was brought into contact, and his kindness to his choir-boys will long be remembered. Mr. Legge was last October appointed organist and choirmaster of St. Thomas's Church, Regent Street.

Helston.—On Tuesday, the 26th March, the Misses Mitchell, of Camborne, assisted by Mr. Sampson (tenor), and Mr. Rowe (bass), gave a most successful concert in the Guildhall. The programme consisted of songs, duets, glees, &c., all of which were given with much effect. The Misses Mitchell fully sustained their reputation by their rendering of the duet "Welcome Spring" (Glover), and the songs "Esmeralda" (Levey), and "Home at last" (Vivien). Mr. Sampson also gave Benson's "Row gently here" with considerable effect. Mr. W. J. Treleaven was the accompanist.

High Wycombe.—The second year of the existence of the Choral Association was brought to a close by a very successful concert on the 10th ult. Mendelssohn's "95th Psalm," Spohr's "As pants the hart" (which was admirably rendered, both as regarded the solo and the chorus), and the "Gloria" from Mozart's Twelfth Mass were the principal features of the first part. The second consisted of Locke's "Macbeth Music," "Queen and Hunters" (Colborne), "O hush thee, my babie" (Sullivan), "The many rend the skies" (Handel), and some solos which were well rendered. The precision of the choruses reflected great credit upon the conductor, Mr. A. P. Standley, to whose energy the Association owes its present state of efficiency. He was assisted in the accompaniment by Miss J. Venn. The instrumental portion consisted of a pianoforte duet from the Symphony to the Lobgesang, by Mr. Standley and Miss Venn; and Beethoven's G minor Sonata by the former, which was feelingly interpreted. Mr. Standley is shortly leaving Wycombe for Bury, and his loss will be much felt by the Association.

Hitchin.—On the 17th ult. the members of the Hitchin Choral Society gave their annual concert in the Town Hall, the music selected for the occasion being exclusively from Handel's Messiah. The principal vocalists were Miss Matilda Scott, Miss Lucy Franklein, Messrs. R. Mason and Hilton, all of whom were highly effective in the solos allotted to them. The choir numbered about 60 voices, under the direction of the Society's conductor, Mr. William Carling, Mus. Bac., Oxon. All the choruses were excellently given, and Mr. Carling may be fairly congratulated upon the complete success of his efforts. A pianoforte and harmonium were used for accompanying the choruses; and Miss A. Wiles and Miss Rowton deserve the thanks of the Society for the manner in which they discharged their onerous duties.

Hook Norton.—The members of the Tonic Sol-fa Association gave their annual concert, in the National School-room, on Tuesday evening, the 2nd ult., Miss Blanche Burr being the principal vocalist. The association was assisted also by several amateurs from Banbury and Chipping Norton, besides local talent. The concert commenced with the overture to Lodoiska (Kreutzer), arranged as a trio for flute, piano, and violoncello, the executants in which were Mr. J. White, organist, and his son and daughter. Miss B. Burr sang the songs allotted to her with much effect, and was rapturously encored. The accompaniments were played by Mrs. Mills, Mr. J. White, and Miss M. A. White, who also performed in excellent style Fantasias by H. Thomas and Brinley Richards. The part-songs and choruses went with commendable precision. Mr. Mills was an able conductor.

Hull.—The thirty-second performance of the Hull Harmonic Society took place in the Public Rooms, Jarratt Street, on the 19th ult. The programme consisted exclusively of sacred music, Haydn's Second Mass, and Beethoven's Engedi, being the principal works given. In the first composition Miss Spiller, Miss Rigg, Mr. Thurley Beale, and Mr. Alfred Kenningham gave the solo parts with much effect, and Miss Spiller and Mr. Kenningham were highly successful in the trying music of Engedi. The choruses were finely sung throughout, Mr. J. W. Stephenson, the conductor, directing the Oratorio with much steadiness and precision.

Kibworth.—On Tuesday the 2nd ult., several of the principal inhabitants of Kibworth gave a benefit concert to their able and respected organist and choirmaster, Mr. Iliffe. The first part of the programme was devoted to sacred, and the second to secular music. Mr. Iliffe's performance of Chopin's Polonaise (No. 8, in A flat) was highly appreciated, and he experienced a cordial reception from a large audience.

Lancaster.—Handel's Oratorio, Samson, was performed at the Music Hall on the 8th ult., before a crowded audience. The principal vocalists were Madame Rudersdorff, Miss Fairman, Mr. Arthur Byron, and Mr. Winn, all of whom, especially Madame Rudersdorff and Mr. Winn, were thoroughly successful in the difficult solos allotted to them. The band under Mr. Seymour's able leadership, was highly efficient, and the choruses were finely rendered throughout. To Mr. Dean, the conductor, much of the excellence of the performance was owing, and it is gratifying to find that the ladies of the Choral Society have recently presented him with a handsome ivory bâton, upon which is the following inscription:—"Presented to F. Dean, Esq., by the ladies of the Lancaster Choral Society, as an acknowledgment of his kind services on their behalf."

Leamington.—At Holy Trinity Church, a new organ by Nicholson, of Worcester, consisting of two manuals and pedal organs, 22 stops, was opened on the 19th ult. by Mr. C. Sydney Vinning, when two special choral services were given. The Rev. J. S. Ruddach, the Incumbent, preached an eloquent sermon in the morning, and the Rev. — Jenkins in the evening. On Saturday afternoon a large number of persons assembled in the Church to hear an organ performance by Mr. C. Sydney Vinning, who, amongst other pieces, played Mendelssohn's Organ Sonata, No. 5; Graun's "Te Deum Laudamus," by E. J. Hopkins; and a grand Fantasia, by Berthold Tours, from "The Organist's Quarterly Journal." Collections made at the services realised a very good sum.

Leek.—The Leek Amateur Musical Society gave its sixteenth concert on the 8th ult., bringing the season to a brilliant close, by a very successful rendering of Handel's Serenata, Acis and Galatea. The principal characters were represented by members of the Society, with the exception of Acis, for which the aid of Mr. Grayson, of Lichfield, was obtained. The part of Galatea was divided between Miss Shute and Miss Smith, both of whom were highly effective. Mr. Grayson sang the part of Acis very finely throughout; and Mr. Dishley's one song, as Damon, "Would you gain the tender creature," was tastefully rendered. The giant, Polyphemus, was efficiently represented by Mr. Beckett. The execution of the various choruses reflected great credit upon the members of the choir, and their skilful teacher and conductor, Mr. Powell; showing, as it did, a considerable advance, both in style and expression, upon all their previous efforts. The overture and accompaniments were well played by a small band, led by a gentleman amateur of the Potteries Oratorio Concerts, with Miss A. H. Milner at the pianoforte. The brief second part was miscellaneous.

Lincoln.—A very excellent performance of Mr. J. F. Barnett's Cantata, The Ancient Mariner, was given by the Lincoln Amateur Vocal Society, at the County Assembly Rooms, on the 16th ult. The principal vocalists were Mrs. Pemberton, Mrs. John Swan, Mr. J. Adcock, and Mr. Charles Lovett, who gave a highly satisfactory reading of the solos throughout the work, the choruses also being rendered with commendable firmness and precision. The second part was miscellaneous, and included some extremely effective choral pieces, which were received with much favour. Mrs. Runton presided with ability and judgment at the pianoforte, and Mr. W. Lawrence at the harmonium. Mr. F. Ward was a most efficient conductor.

Liverpool.—The fifth Subscription concert of the Philharmonic Society took place on the 9th ult., and proved a most successful performance. The principal vocalists were Madame Trebelli-Bettini and Mr. Edward Lloyd; solo pianoforte, Herr Carl Reinecke, whose delicate playing of Mozart's Concerto, in D major, was deservedly applauded, as well as his excellent rendering of an "Andante spianato" and "Rondo giojosa" of his own, and a difficult "Ungarische" of Liszt. Madame Trebelli-Bettini gave, admirably, three songs, respectively English, Italian, and French, all of which were encored, but the two last only repeated. Mr. Edward Lloyd sang with much expression and refinement Gounod's "Salve Dimora," from Faust; Beethoven's "Adelaida" (beautifully accompanied by Sir Julius Benedict), and a new song, "Once again," by Sullivan. He also joined Madame Trebelli-Bettini in a duet by Campana, "Una sera d'amore." The orchestral pieces were Cherubini's overture Les deux Journées; a striking and brilliant "Fest Overture" of Herr Carl Reinecke, conducted by the composer; Haydn's well-known Sinfonia, the so-called "Clock Symphony"; and Meyerbeer's "Schuller Fest March." The choral members gave with effect some good part-music.——Good Friday a concert of sacred music was given in St. James's Hall, which was alike successful as a musical performance and a monetary speculation. The room was crammed, and even after the platform and passages had been utilised for the benefit of ticket-holders, many persons were unable to get in. The music selected was chosen from the works of Handel, Rossini, Mendelssohn, Haydn, and Charles E. Horsley. Several of the pieces were rendered with excellent effect. Mr. George Barton and Mr. M'Connell, in "Waft her angels," and "The trumpet shall sound," were well received, and the efforts of Miss Marie Arthur, and Madame Kate Wynne Matthison also elicited marked applause. The concert terminated with the "Hallelujah Chorus."——The members of the Edge Hill Choral Society gave a concert in Hope Hall on Tuesday evening, the 9th ult., before a large and appreciative audience. The programme consisted of selections from our best part-song writers. The singing throughout was excellent, and elicited the unqualified approbation of the audience. Mr. Franklin Haworth conducted with his usual ability; Miss Alicia Salt presiding very efficiently at the pianoforte.

Longsight, near Manchester.—On Saturday evening, the 30th March, Mr. C. W. Whitmore gave a very successful concert in the Mechanics' Institution. Hargreave's celebrated iron-framed grand pianoforte was used, and greatly admired for the brilliancy and power of its tone. Mr. Whitmore played Thalberg's "Last rose of summer" and "Home, sweet home" with much taste and expression, and was warmly applauded. Miss Catherine Pickering was encored in both her songs, and Miss Clara Newton was also highly successful. Messrs. Greenwood, Ford, and C. T. Smith also assisted in the vocal department and accompanied the songs. A violin solo by Master F. Wormald (nine years of age) was so well played as to be enthusiastically redemanded.

Lydney.—The second subscription concert of the Harmonic Union took place in the School-room, on Friday, the 19th ult. There was a large attendance. The programme consisted of the first part of the Creation, and Birch's Ereleen. Miss Julia Jones, Miss Sainsbury, and Messrs. Twynning and Gillman sang the solos; harmonium Mr. R. G. Phillips; pianoforte and conductor, Mr. J. A. Matthews.

Madeley.—A highly successful concert was given on the 15th ult. in the Austice Memorial Institute. Mrs. John Hayward, of Wolverhampton, sang "Esmeralda," "Dinna gang awa," and "Now smiling comes the spring," with much effect, and was encored in each. The glees by the Wenlock Glee Class (Messrs. Stroud, Parton, Lawley, and Evans) were exceedingly well rendered, and two of them, "The three chafers" and "Stars of the summer night," were re-demanded. A small but efficient orchestra played several pieces with commendable precision; and a duet, by Schubert, for piano and violin, was given by Miss Ellis and Mr. Mackenzie, of Wellington. Mr. Cartwright and Mr. Bailey also contributed some songs, which were well received, and Messrs. Parton and Lawley sang a duet, which was much applauded. Mr. Smart, of Newport, made as usual a very careful conductor.

Malden.—On the 9th ult. a concert was given at the National Schools, Lime Grove, by Miss Berry, in aid of the Vicarage Fund. Miss Berry was in excellent voice, and sang with much effect throughout the evening. The other vocalists were Miss Pocklington (of the Royal Academy of Music), who was received with deserved applause, Miss Stretton, Madile. Julien, Messrs. Morris, F. Pocklington, C. Davis, and T. Young, all of whom were highly successful. At the close of the concert, the Rev. C. W. Stapylton proposed a vote of thanks to Miss Berry, and the friends who had assisted on the occasion, which was carried with enthusiastic applause.

Mallow.—A serious riot occurred on Tuesday the 2nd ult., under peculiar circumstances. A concert had been announced to be held at the Queen's Arms Hotel, at which selections from Mozart's Twelfth Mass were to be performed, and, although the vocalists comprised Catholics and Protestants, a feeling got abroad among the townspeople that the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass was to be burlesqued. One of the Catholic curates, about three weeks since, warned the congregation against attending the concert, but the parish priest, on the following Sunday, endeavoured to counteract the impression which his coadjutor no doubt created. However, when the concert had proceeded for some time, the building in which it was held was attacked with stones. A violent onslaught was made on the audience when leaving the building, and the constabulary and militia staff found it neccessary to charge the crowd several times before those who had attended the concert could get away. Considering the violence used, the personal injuries sustained were very few.

Manchester.—On Sunday the 7th ult. Mr. Jardine's splendid organ at St. Peter's Church was re-opened by Mr. Best—or perhaps, as no part of the organ has been closed, it should be said that the additions recently made were then inaugurated by Mr. Best. On the following evening Mr. Best gave a selection of organ music, the programme of which was highly interesting. Amongst the pieces most admired were the "Andante Grazioso," originally written by Mr. Hopkins for the inauguration of the organ at the Royal Albert Hall, an organ concerto of Handel, and a selection of choruses from Israel in Egypt, all of which were performed in masterly style. It is gratifying to learn that the proceeds of the collections very nearly sufficed to cover the outlay recently incurred.——A choral concert of sacred music was given at the Free Trade Hall on the evening of Good Friday, the programme being made up of songs and excerpta from various Oratorios, Masses, and other sacred works. The solo vocalists were Miss Margaret Galloway, Miss Alice Fairman (who was highly successful), Mr. Byron and Mr. Winn. The choir, composed of well-known vocalists, at Mr. Hallé's and other choral concerts, sang exceedingly well. Mr. T. W. Dodds has all the proper elements of an accompanist, and he also showed himself an organist of no mean powers—his solos being among the most enjoyable portions of the programme. Mr. de Jong conducted the choral pieces.——The Vocal Society gave the sixth and last concert of the season on Tuesday evening the 2nd ult., before a large audience. One of the most important items in the programme was J. S. Bach's Motett "The spirit also helpeth us," which notwithstanding its great difficulty, was finely sung throughout, the performance adding one more to the many triumphs achieved by the Vocal Society, under the able direction of Mr. H. Wilson. Several part-songs were also given with excellent effect amongst the most successful of which were Best's choral song "What mournful thoughts," which was admirably rendered. Solos were contributed by Miss Standen and Miss Henderson, both of whom elicited warm applause.——The annual concert by the Musical Society in connection with the Manchester Athenæum, with the very laudable object of benefiting the funds of the Warehousemen and Clerks' Schools, was given on the 19th ult., in the Gentlemen's Concert Hall. The programme consisted chiefly of a number of the part-songs which had been introduced during the past season at the Subscription Concerts, the best executed of which were undoubtedly "The wood minstrels" (Mendelssohn), "Spring song" (Pinsuti), "Cradle song" (Smart), and a composition of the talented Doctor to whom the Society owes much of its success. These were interspersed with songs by Miss Isa Higham, Mrs. Cliffe, Miss Taylor, Miss Heywood, and Mr. T. H. Shorrocks. The principal item in the programme was the selection from Kuhlau's opera of Lulu, which has been adapted to English words expressly for the Athenæum Musical Society. There is a freshness and spontaneous flow of melody which makes us wonder why Kuhlau is so little known in England, it was (as far as the choral portions especially) the best performed of the whole programme. The solo parts were filled by Mr. Cliffe, Mr. A. Davison, and Mr. M. Thomas. Dr. Hiles conducted and accompanied, and is to be complimented on the great success of the concert.

Market Drayton.—On Tuesday, the 9th ult., the Musical Society brought its second season to a successful conclusion by a performance of Sir Sterndale Bennett's May Queen, and a miscellaneous second part, which included Rossini's Overture to Guillaume Tell. The principal vocalists engaged for the occasion were—Soprano, Miss Mary Thorley; Bass, Mr. Carlos Lovatt; Tenor, Mr. W. Howells, of the Royal Academy of Music; and Miss Smith, a local amateur; the two latter rendered gratuitous service. The band numbered twenty-three instruments, and the chorus about forty voices, the whole being under the direction of Mr. Sydney H. Williams, Mus. Bac., Oxon. The room was a crowded one, and we are glad to say that the Society has a balance in hand wherewith to renew operations next season.

Martock, Somerset.—On the 22nd ult., the members of the Literary Institute presented to Mr. J. W. Nosworthy a handsome black marble timepiece, as a mark both of their appreciation of his musical talents in the capacity of organist of the parish Church, and of their gratitude for the services he has for several years rendered in presiding over the musical part of the entertainments given by the Society. The Rev. E. A. Salmon, the vicar, was in the chair, and expressed in a few well-chosen words the pleasure he felt in the task of presenting the testimonial.

Mexbro'—The Sheffield Choral Society gave a miscellaneous concert on the 1st ult., for a charitable purpose, in the National School-room, kindly lent for the occasion. The first part of the programme consisted of sacred music, and included Mendelssohn's anthem, "Hear my prayer" (the solo portion of which was excellently rendered by Mrs. Charlesworth); "O rest in the Lord, by Mrs. House; and "He shall feed his flock," by Miss Hydes, both of which were much applauded. The bass solos were admirably given by Messrs. Kay and Edgington. In the second part, Farmer's song "I'll follow thee," sung by Mrs. Charlesworth, received an enthusiastic encore; and a duet by Miss Hydes and Mrs. House was also highly successful. The glees were well selected and effectively sung, eliciting the hearty applause of a numerous audience. Mr. E. J. Lee, the conductor of the Society, ably accompanied on the pianoforte.

Much Wenlock.—A successful concert was given on Easter Monday in the Corn Exchange, the principal features being the harp solos of Miss Brookes, of Shrewsbury, and two choruses for treble voices, "La Carita" (Rossini), and "Le Fiorentine" (Pinsuti), which were carefully rendered by a number of ladies residing in the town and neighbourhood, Miss Seacome taking the principal part. The part-songs, "When evening's twilight" (Hatton), and "The letter" (Hatton), sung by Messrs. Stroud, Parton, Lawley, and Evans, were enthusiastically encored and responded to. A duet (piano and cornet) by Master and Mr. Yates, and "The brave old oak," well rendered by Mr. Adney, elicited great applause, as did also the "Market Chorus," from Masaniello. The room was filled with a fashionable and appreciative audience.

Newcastle-upon-Tyne.—On Saturday the 6th ult., the proceedings in connection with St. Philip's Church Bazaar, were brought to a successful close by a tea-party and promenade concert, the members of the choir of St. Paul's Church, Elswick-lane, being the principal executants. The part-song, by Sullivan, "O hush thee, my babie," was very well rendered, and "Where the bee sucks," by Miss Hall, also deserves special mention. A Cantata, by G. A. Macfarren, entitled May-Day, with Miss Ettie Gray as the May Queen, was the chief musical attraction of the evening. It is redolent of bright, joyous music appropriate to a May festival, and was given by the choir with much spirit and power. Miss Ettie Gray rendered the solos with taste and expression, and Messrs. Wilkinson, G. W. Halliday, Baker, Adams, Stephenson, and Carter were also highly effective. Mr. C. H. Shepherd conducted with his usual ability, and also gave a solo, by Chopin, and in conjunction with Miss Rider, played a duet. Altogether the concert was a success, and reflected great credit on Mr. C. H. Shepherd, whose judicious management was apparent in the completeness of the programme as well as in the manner in which it was carried out.

Northampton.—The new organ in the Exchange Hall was so far completed as to admit of a private recital on Good Friday afternoon, when, for the purpose of displaying the power and tone of the instrument, Mr. McKorkell performed the following pieces:—Passion music from the Messiah: chorus, "Behold the Lamb;" song, "He was despised." From Rossini's Stabat Mater: "Domine Deus," and "Cujus Animam." From Haydn's Creation, "On mighty pens" (by desire), and "Most beautiful appear." The organ was re-constructed by Mr. Webb, and those who are competent to judge are unanimous in their praises of the manner in which the work has been executed. An appeal from the committee to the general public has been put forth on behalf of the funds for the liquidation of the expenses, which amount to £300, incurred by the purchase and erection of the instrument, and there can be no doubt that under the circumstances it will meet with a hearty and liberal response.

Oswestry.—Handel's Judas Maccabæus was performed by the Handel Society in connection with the Oswestry Institute, at the Public Hall, on Monday, the 1st ult. The band and chorus numbered upwards of forty. The principal singers were Miss Farmer, Miss Littlehales, Mr. Chisholm, Mr. Tims, Mr. Carter, and Mr. Glave. The band consisted of Mr. C. Stephenson, leader; Mr. J. J. Poole, second violin; Mr. Wetherilt, viola; Messrs. Armstrong, violoncello and double bass; Mr Williams, flute; Mr. Holmes, clarionet; Mr. Byrne, cornet; and Mr. Evans, euphonium; Mr. Whitridge Davies conducted. The principal singers were amateurs, but their natural qualifications and scientific attainments fully enabled them to sustain the parts they undertook, and ensured their success. Miss Farmer has a rich voice, of good compass, and Mr. Chisholm is a most effective singer. The choir was highly efficient, and did ample credit to their training.

Paisley.—Handel's neglected Oratorio, Joshua, was given for the first time at Paisley, in the Abbey, by the Musical Association, on Monday, the 1st ult. The principal vocalists were Madame Rudersdorff, Miss Alice Fairman, Mr. Arthur Byron, and Mr. Winn. Madame Rudersdorff was highly successful in the solos, "Oh had I Jubal's lyre," and "Hark, 'tis the linnet," with violin and flute obbligato. Miss Fairman (who made her first appearance) was well received as were also Mr. Byron and Mr. Winn, the latter creating a marked effect in "Shall I in Mamre's fertile plains." The band and chorus numbered 200. Special mention must be made of the choruses, "To long posterity," "Glory to God," and "The great Jehovah," all of which were excellently rendered. Mr. Waterson conducted with his usual ability, and Mr. J. E. Senior, of Skelmorlie, presided at the harmonium.

Plymouth.—On the 25th March an interesting lecture on Musical Sounding Boards was given at the Plymouth Athenæum. Mr. Robert Smith, the lecturer (of the firm of Parker and Smith, pianoforte makers, Plymouth), has invented and patented an improvement in sounding boards, consisting in forming them of two thin boards of pine wood glued together with the grain of one running transversely to the grain of the other, instead of one solid board of equivalent thickness, such as constitutes the sounding board of ordinary pianos. The object of this is to secure a more prolonged tone, or greater "singing" capacity in the instrument, and the audience had an opportunity of judging of the capabilities of a pianoforte fitted with a new sounding board, by the kindness of Mr. S. Weekes, who was among the audience, and consented to perform. Dr. C. A. Hingston presided, and several gentlemen took part in the discussion which followed the lecture.

Ramsgate.—A concert was given on the 5th ult. at St. James's Hall, by the Tonic-sol-fa Choral Society, in aid of the funds of the Sailors' Home and Refuge. The sacred Cantata, Daniel, by Bradbury and Root, was performed and a selection of solos, choruses, &c., principally from sacred pieces, all of which were most satisfactorily rendered. Miss Carter (of Canterbury), and Messrs. Birch, Moulding, and Higgins (from the Cathedral Choir), assisted and contributed much to the success. Mr. E. Lott, of Canterbury, accompanied on the pianoforte, and Mr. Birch on the harmonium; Mr. Thos. Duckett, the instructor of the class, conducted. ——At St. Mary's Church, on Easter Eve, there was a full choral service. Hymn 385, "Onward, Christian soldiers," was sung as a Processional, and hymn 117, "Jesus lives," as a Recessional. The anthem was, "Since by man came death," from the Messiah. On Easter Day the morning service commenced with the fine old Easter Hymn, "Jesus Christ has risen to-day," as a Processional. The Te Deum was Dykes in F. After the 3rd collect, Wesley's anthem, "Blessed be the God and Father," was sung—the solo in which was given by Master Adley with much feeling and expression. The evening service (as on Easter Eve) commenced with Hymn 385 as a Processional. The Magnificat and Nunc dimittis were sung to Arnold in A. The anthem was Handel's "Worthy is the Lamb," and the "Hallelujah Chorus" was sung during the offertory. On Sunday, the 7th ult., (being the Octave), the anthems were—in the morning "Since by man came death," and in the evening, "Blessed be the God and Father." It may be truly said that the excellent style in which the services are performed at this church is mainly owing to the ability and perseverance of Mr. J. F. Thorne, and the congregation must be congratulated upon having an organist who so thoroughly enters into the spirit of our beautiful Church service.

Richmond, Yorks.—A very interesting Organ Recital was given by Mr. J. H. Rooks, at the Parish Church on the 23rd ult.; a good programme was provided, and Mr. Rooks showed much skill in the execution of the several pieces, and good taste in the choice and combination of stops.

Rotherham.—A concert, in connection with the Rotherham Union, took place on the 12th ult., in the Mechanics' Hall, the object being to enable the Committee of the Society to provide vocal and instrumental music for the use of its members. Mrs. Turner, Mrs. Greenwood, Mrs. Foster, Mr Henderson, and Mr. Richardson were the chief vocalists, assisted by the members of the Union, numbering upwards of sixty. Four overtures were played by the band, which, although weak, was in many respects good. Mr. John Peck, of Sheffield, was the leader; but at the last moment Dr. Sewell's place as conductor had to be taken by Mr. Warburton, in consequence of the Doctor's indisposition. Of the vocal part there were many items deserving praise, especially Mrs. Greenwood's rendering of Lachner's song, "Think of me," with violin obbligato by Mr. Whittaker, for which she was recalled. Mrs. Turner also sang "Joyous life," and Meyerbeer's Cavatina, "Oh, Robert," receiving an encore for the latter. Mrs. Foster, Mr. Henderson, and Mr. Richardson also greatly pleased the audience.

Ruthin.—On the 8th ult. an evening concert was given at the Assembly Rooms, the principal singers being Madame Billinie Porter, Messrs. Orme, Halliday and Bell (of Chester Cathedral), and Mr. Simpson, an amateur. Madame B. Porter sang a new song, "Alone with thee," composed expressly for her by C. E. Horsley, and was greatly applauded. The concert was, in every respect, highly successful.

Ryde, Isle of Wight.—Mr. Augustus Aylward gave an evening concert in the Town Hall, on the 19th ult. The principal vocalists were Miss Amy Aylward, Mr. Henry Taylor and Mr. O. Christian; and the orchestra, under the direction of Mr. T. E. Aylward (organist of Llandaff Cathedral), consisted of 26 performers. Amongst the most successful pieces were the Overtures La Gazza Ladra, Der Freischütz, and Zanetta, Randegger's vocal Trio, "I Naviganti," was exceedingly well rendered. The performance was a very successful one.

Scarborough—A very brilliant and crowded audience met at Mr. Hunt's spacious and elegant Prince of Wales Assembly Rooms, on Tuesday evening the 2nd ult., when a grand invitation concert was given by the members of the Scarborough Amateur Vocal and Instrumental Society, under the direction of Dr. Sloman, organist of St. Martin's. The principal work performed was Dr. Sloman's new Cantata, Supplication, and Praise, which achieved a marked success. No analysis of the composition can be here attempted, but we may say that the choruses, especially "O sing unto God," "All nations whom Thou hast made," and the concluding fugue, are written with much boldness and freedom; and that several solos, amongst which must be mentioned "Teach me Thy way, O Lord" (chastely sung by Mrs. M. E. Humphreys), and a recitative, "Like as the smoke," and air, "But let the righteous" (so well given by Mrs. Smyth as to be encored) were most favourable examples of melodious and skilful composition. The orchestral accompaniments to the Cantata are almost exclusively for the stringed instruments, supported by the pianoforte. There appeared to be some excellent instrumentation, the passages being well and characteristically scored. They were fairly rendered by members of the Society, ably lead by Mr. Shaw. At the close, Dr. Sloman received the congratulations of many friends, on the successful performance of the composition, which does him very great credit. The second part of the concert was miscellaneous, the performance concluding with the National Anthem.

Sedbergh.—The Choral Society recently formed by Mr. Godfrey, the choirmaster of the Lunesdale Choral Union, gave a most successful performance of Acis and Galatea on Wednesday, the 3rd ult. Miss Kaberry, of Kirkby Lonsdale, sang Galatea's music very ably. Messrs. Tilly and Brewin took the parts of Acis and Damon respectively, and Mr. Godfrey well sustained the part of Polypheme. A short miscellaneous programme, in which Cooke's glee, "Strike the lyre," was one of the most successful items, brought the concert to a close. The whole of the accompaniments were played with much artistic feeling on the pianoforte by Mrs. Watherston.

Sheffield.—The Sheffield Tonic Sol-fa Choral Society gave a very successful performance of Mr. G. F. Root's Cantata, The Haymakers, in the Music Hall, Surrey-street, on the 22nd ult. Although the work does not possess much merit, except in simplicity of construction, it contains one or two fairly written choruses and solos, and as the choir was well acquainted with the music, these were made the most of. The members of the Society mustered about 70 strong, and in their singing evinced a degree of proficiency which must have been very gratifying to Mr. Hadfield, the conductor. The principal vocalists who took part in the Cantata were:—Miss Sara Winder, soprano, from the Leeds Town Hall concerts; Miss Pattie Hargreaves, contralto, from the Yorkshire concerts, Mr. Dumville, tenor, Manchester Cathedral, and Mr. J. Thurley Beale, bass, St. Andrew's, Well's-street, London; accompanist, Mr. Wm. Moxey.

SLOUGH.—Mr. A. E. Bending, organist and choirmaster of St. Peter's Chalvey, gave a concert in the Girls' School-room, on the 9th ult., assisted by Miss Howells, Mr. Smith, Mr. D. E. Wood, Mr. Mellor and Mr. Christian. The programme included selections from the Messiah, Judas, Stabat Mater, &c., followed by some well-known part-songs, and several new ballads, Mr. Mellor was encored in "Cujus Animam," and Mr. Christian was recalled in Barker's song, "Dublin Bay." Mr. E. Bending was loudly applauded in a pianoforte solo, "Home, sweet home" (Thalberg), and Mr. E. Mills lent his valuable aid as accompanist on the harmonium.

STRATHFIELDSAYE.—On the 2nd ult. a successful entertainment of music and reading was given in the School-room by the choir and other parishioners and their friends. Lady Jane Taylor, Miss Samborne, Mr. Boxall, and Mr. A. Orton received much applause for their readings; Mr Willing was encored in a pianoforte solo; and Miss Easton was much applauded in a similar performance. Two overtures were given with good effect, the former by the Misses Walmesley and Griffith (pianoforte), and Mr. Hendy (violin); the latter by Mrs. H. Easton, Miss S. Easton, and Mr. Hendy. Captain Hume contributed a concertina solo and a song in which he was ably accompanied by Mrs. Keate. Mrs. Easton, Miss Boxall, and Mr. White were also highly successful in their songs. The village choir, with assistance from other parishes, sang some good part-songs.

SUNDERLAND.—The Sunderland Philharmonic Society gave the second concert in the Victoria Hall on the 15th ult., when Handel's Acis and Galatea was performed, the principal parts being sustained by Miss Blanche Cole, Mr. Arthur Byron, Mr. Howgate, and Mr. Ferry. The singing of Miss Cole was much admired, and ample justice was done to the solos by the other vocalists. Mr. Byron in "Love sounds the alarm," and Mr. Ferry in "O ruddier than the cherry," being especially worthy of commendation. The second part was miscellaneous, consisting of songs and glees. A duet for pianoforte and flute by Mr. Parker and Mr. Rea elicited warm applause. Mr. Rea conducted with much ability.

SYDENHAM.—A concert was given on the 11th ult., in the Lecture Hall, by Mr. H. V. Lewis, R.A.M., which was highly successful. Miss Ellen Glanville gave in most effective style, "The Naiad's call" and "Una voce." Mr. Lewis Thomas greatly pleased the audience by his singing, and Misses Baxter and A. M. Pearson, Messrs. Thomas Baxter, H. C. Lewis, C. Claridge, and Signor Monti were deservedly applauded. Mr. H. V. Lewis presided at the pianoforte.

WARMINSTER.—The concert given at the Town Hall by Dr. Alcock, the Head Master of Lord Weymouth's Grammar School, on Tuesday the 2nd ult., was highly successful. The principal feature in the first part was Mozart's Quartet, No. 7, which was admirably performed by Mr. Calkin, of Salisbury, and Dr. Alcock (violins), Mr. Frank Spinny (viola), and Mr. W. W. Alcock (violoncello). The second part was devoted to Handel's Acis and Galatea, the characters in which were taken as follows:—Galatea, Miss Hardick; Acis, Mr. Taylor; Damon, Rev. G. Durrell; and Polyphemus, Mr Kenningham. All the solos were well given, and the choruses were carefully sung throughout, reflecting the utmost credit upon the Doctor's training. The accompaniments were excellently played; and Mr. Frank Spinney (the organist of the Parish Church) conducted with much ability.

WESTERHAM.—Mr. Francis Howell's Oratorio, The Land of Promise, was performed in the Public Hall, with much success, on the 9th ult. The bass parts were allotted to Mr. Randoll (Oxted), Mr. J. Liley (Westerham), and Mr. Jones Williams; the tenor to Mr. Berry (Brasted), and Mr. C. Master (Oxted), the latter obtaining a well merited encore; and the soprano to Miss Meek (Godstone), and Miss Charlotte Warde, all of whom thoroughly won the good opinion of the audience. The choruses were excellently given, and the success of the work was decisive, Mr. Howell receiving several rounds of applause at the conclusion of the performance. The pianoforte accompaniments were played with much care and judgment by Miss Kate Warde.

THE NATURAL PRINCIPLES OF HARMONY, with an Appendix, containing numerous analyzed extracts from various classical compositions. By W. W. Parkinson.

In this work many hitherto unexplained harmonic effects, together with the general laws of Harmony and Modulation, are orderly developed from first principles. The simplicity, unity, and universality of these natural laws of harmony, as exemplified in the analyzed extracts, form a remarkable contrast with the inconsistent and conflicting theories of the present schools.

A NEW WORK FOR THE ORGAN.

HANDEL'S CHORUSES

Arranged for the Organ, with PEDAL OBBLIGATO, EXPRESSLY for the use of AMATEURS, by DR. RIMBAULT. Price 3s. each. Nos. 1 to 12 are now ready:—

No. 1. ZADOK THE PRIEST.	No. 5. SING UNTO GOD.	No. 9. FOR UNTO US A CHILD IS BORN.

The present publication has been undertaken with a view to supply a musical want long felt by amateurs and lovers of the organ, i.e., an edition of HANDEL'S CELEBRATED CHORUSES arranged for the organ with pedal obbligato, that shall be effective, combining all the salient parts of the score, and yet at the same time be within the reach of those performers who have not made the instrument their entire study. We have, it is true, many arrangements; some for "Organ or Pianoforte," others by our most eminent organists. The first belong to a past age; the second, in all cases, are only fit for professional performers, and require an amount of skill for their proper execution rarely attained by amateurs. In the present edition, the notation has been carefully studied so as to simplify the reading, whilst the pedals, in all cases of difficulty, have the assistance of the left hand of the performer. Many other points have been considered so as to render the arrangement fitted to the object it has in view—to supply an edition of HANDEL'S CHORUSES for the Organ expressly for the amateur.

"The Melody (la partie chantante) should always be clearly and distinctly enunciated like the tones of a beautiful voice above the subdued accompaniment of an orchestra."—Thalberg.

ARTHUR ALLISON,

110, WARDOUR STREET, LONDON, W.,

HARMONIUM MANUFACTURER.

SOLE LONDON AGENT for RAMSDEN'S (Dawe's Patent) MELODY and PEDAL SUBSTITUTE ORGANS, as supplied to Her Majesty and H.R.H. the Princess Louise.

These Instruments, beside possessing a quality of tone never before obtained in this class of Instruments, have also the extraordinary capability of giving—a perfectly clear and additional melody, or in other words, additional tone to the melody; thus producing the effect of a solo instrument used by a separate player, in addition to the full harmony upon the other stops or portions of the Instrument. The Pedal Substitute imparts to these Instruments the further capability of giving—also automatously—a clear and distinct sub-Bass or Pedal note, in addition to the chords or harmony usually played by the left hand. Thus giving upon ONE MANUAL the effect of TWO MANUALS AND PEDALS.

These Instruments are specially constructed in oak, and toned for Churches, Chapels, and Schools. The advantages to be derived from their use cannot be over-estimated, the melody being so clearly brought out as to render it almost impossible for a choir to sing out of tune when accompanied by one of them.

THE MUSICAL TIMES,

And Singing Class Circular.

JUNE 1, 1872.

MUSICAL SHORTHAND.

Some one says somewhere, in some book or another, at this moment unattainable to the present writer, that the inventions of greatest benefit to man, have been the result of —not so much hard, laborious, and concentrated effort and industry, as of—idleness. While most people ardently echo the wish of the poet:—

> "Could a man be secure
> That his life would endure
> As of old, for a thousand long years" —to the end that arts might be known, and acts done; they know, as the writer of the same poem expressed, that "we have but span long lives," and it is desirable to make the best of our measure of time, by easing by every means in our power the labour which all must carry out, as his share in the inheritance from our proto parent. Familiar examples of machinery and contrivances, having as their several objects the commodious expedition of work, will at a very slight effort of memory present themselves at once to the reader, therefore it will be as well to state that hard, dry and trite disquisitions upon the use and value of machinery as aids to idleness, are foreign to the present purpose, for as the heading implies it is of a very modest method of diminishing work that it is proposed to treat of in this Paper, but one, it is believed, that will not be entirely without interest to the musical reader.

Every system of writing music is more or less a process of shorthand, but the most important of the many attempts to convey by the simplest means the greatest number of musical ideas, is undoubtedly that known by the name of Thorough Bass or Figured Bass, which, without desiring to raise a controversy, may be fairly stated to have been most generally made known by, if it was not the invention of Ludovico Viadana, in 1605. Viadana was at first Maestro di Capella in the Cathedral Church at Fano, a small city situate in the Gulf of Venice, in the Duchy of Urbino, and became organist of the Cathedral of Mantua, during which later period he produced the invention for which he deserves the grateful remembrance of every musician. It is said that he was so skilful a performer that he "was able to raise more admiration in the minds of the hearers with one touch upon the organ, than others with ten." He was the author of many works, the titles of which are quoted by Sir John Hawkins in his "History of the Science and Practice of Music," each one being of interest as containing his great claim to the gratitude of posterity, his invention or rather perfection of figuring a bass; these works bear dates varying between 1612 and 1620. Later enquiry has shown that the practice had been adopted before it is stated to have been used by Viadana, as there exists a work by an Englishman, Richard Deering, published in Antwerp in 1597, entitled "Cantiones Sacræ quinque vocum," in which the bass part is figured with a 6th whenever that chord occurs. Two years later than Viadana is said to have invented figured bass, and but five years before his publications on the subject, namely, in 1607, Gregory Aichinger, a German, printed at Augsburg, his "Cantiones ecclesiasticas a 3 et 4 voc mit einem general bass." Viadana's right to the invention was first asserted some sixty years after by Wolfgang Caspar Printz, and as his testimony has never been called into question, the honour still rests with Viadana, even though a priority of dates of publication may be urged in favour of either Deering or Aichinger. But to whom the credit may rightly belong, musicians of succeeding generations have benefited by the discovery, and, strange as it may seem, have added but little to the original scheme. The other plans of musical shorthand that have been propounded have not been so thoroughly useful or satisfactory, and therefore have been swallowed up in the "great waste-paper basket of the remorseless editor, Time." One of the most remarkable of the propositions for shortening musical notation was that made about the year 1670, by Thomas Salmon, Rector of Mepsall, in Bedfordshire, entitled "An Essay to the Advancement of Music, by casting away the perplexity of different clefs, and uniting all sorts of music, lute, viol, violins, organ, harpsichord, voice, &c., in one universal character;" in which he substitutes in the place of the usual clefs, the letters B for the bass, M for the mean or middle part, and Tr. for the treble, proposing thereby to facilitate the practice both of vocal and instrumental music. The book was published in the name of John Birchenshaw, a noted musician of the time, as it was probably thought that a work suggesting reforms in music would come better from a musician, than a mere master of all polite arts except music. Salmon seems to have concluded that the clefs in ordinary use were hard to acquire, and in this conclusion his scheme for an amended notation was founded. That it was never adopted was partly owing to the fact that it was practically useless, and partly because of the violent and virulent attack made upon it by Matthew Lock, who exhibited all its absurdity, in language that is amusing for its quaintness, and shocking in its coarseness. The treatise; its answer; Lock's "Present Practice of Music Vindicated;" a letter of Playford's printed at the end of Lock's reply, showing that Salmon's scheme would introduce more difficulties than those it proposed to smooth away; together with a scurrilous piece of buffoonery called "Duellum Musicum," written by John Phillips—are only to be met with in the libraries of the curious; and a student of musical literature who can read either work without being ashamed of the licence allowed in controversial language of the time, must be rather more curious in his tastes than the collector who preserves such works. Salmon was undoubtedly a clever man, and was one of the first who divided the octave into correct mathematical proportions or ratios; and it was probably owing to the fact that he was a mathematician that he knew so little about practical music—which is, and always will be, completely independent; and his dogmatic assertion of error provoked the wrath of a musician like Matthew Lock. The failure of his plan seems to have deterred others from trying to reduce music to simpler rules than those in practice, for there are virtually no other propositions towards attaining a short way in music, until the introduction of that system now known as the Tonic Sol-fa. Before saying anything further of this, there is another plan of writing Musical Shorthand to be mentioned, that may serve as a passing amusement, even if it be without profit to the reader.

This work was called "Musical Stenography," and was writen in 1810, by J. Austin, of Glasgow, whose portrait, surrounded by a design similar to the dial of a compass, with quotations from several poets relative to music, in the outer circle between the cardinal points and their subdivisions serves as an illustrated title prefixed to the work. The page is a very large folio, and contains besides the above mentioned matters a list of the qualifications of Mr. Austin, which entitle him to speak on the subject; but as neither here nor in the body of the work can it be gathered that he was anything more than a mere dabbler in music, for he confesses in one place that he is "too general a Practitioner to be master of any one instrument," the worth of his authority is at least questionable. The work was printed from copper plates, and was published in London, at the small charge of one guinea.

Employing the author's own words as nearly as possible, we read that "the design of this work is to represent to the musical world, a new, concise, and universal method of writing music, completely on One Line Only, and adapted to all kinds of vocal and instrumental Music and Musical instruments, whereby an expert writer may note it down as he hears it performed, so that to those who make it their Amusement or Profession, it will be equally interesting, together with the pleasure of improving and profiting by the Art.

"The Stenographic music was at first only intended as an appendix to a new, improved, and universal system of Shorthand writing founded on a Mathematical figure, containing the whole Alphabet, never before exhibited, but having by degrees necessarily swelled to the present size, they are published separately.

"By this new system fewer instructions will be requisite for obtaining a knowledge of performing Music, the price and trouble of writing it considerably reduced, and a new field open for lovers of the art, and those who have occasion to write much; although it is by no means imagined that Old Practitioners will adopt this System of Notation, and entirely reject all former ones, yet it is presumed that at least it will prove itself to be of equal utility in music, as Stenography is essential in various branches of business. Although this system is so simple as to be acquired in four or five hours, even by a child, or any person unacquainted with the art, it includes every Notation in Music, and does away with several inconveniencies which retard and embarrass the Performer, and puzzle the Learner. Several descriptions are plainly illustrated by Mathematical figures, Arithmetical tables, &c., which baffle, and are far superior to other modes of description, even though they occupy numerous volumes.

"Tone is here analysed, new degrees of Temperament discovered are Mathematically proved, which were never before described or even named. Transposition and Temperament are shown by a wheel Tonometer, with the different degrees of acuteness and gravity, besides the sharps and flats for the Complete Major and Minor keys. Many amateurs on seeing them wished for Copies, which could not have been more easily procured than by engraving the whole: this is now done, for those who are pleased to look upon the undertaking as a public Benefit or pleasure, to themselves and their young friends.

"Errors and omissions, though each are sedulously avoided, will not appear surprising, if the Nature of the task is considered; but if Prejudice be mute, and Candour take the lead, imperfections will evanish, and, when observed, be corrected.

"The Author has all his life been fond of musical researches, both of the Theory, practice and mechanism, but he is too general a Practitioner to be master of any one Instrument, yet, as a Subscriber, he has joined, along with the first performers in the kingdom, at the Gentlemen's Subscription Concert, Glasgow.

"To conclude—if the shorthand writer is pleased in taking from the mouth of an orator, the musical Stenographer will be no less so, when catching those dulcet sounds which vibrate through the soul, convincing her that she is more than mortal.

"N.B.—This method of engraving write (sic), on copperplate never before exhibited to the public."

After an introduction setting forth the advantages of accumulating knowledge and of diminishing labour, he proceeds to describe his system, which he says "is made up of the five most simple and distinguishable characters—reversed and inverted into four positions, all made at angles of 45 degrees, or the eighth part of a circle from the centre, the Cardinal points being horizontal and perpendicular." After explaining the use of these characters (not in the clearest manner it must be admitted), he gives what he calls "a Modern Ravallement or general scale, on the complete keys" of a five-octave pianoforte, and then, after describing the mathematical proportions of the notes of the scale, not quite correctly as far as figures are concerned, or lucidly with regard to diction, he shows the method of transposition by sharps or flats by his "Tonometer." This is done by a scale of eight notes distributed at certain distances, to allow for the difference between tones and semitones, engraved in a circle like an ordinary compass; this circle is made to revolve upon a centre pin upon another circle similarly disposed, but of larger diameter. The arc of this wheel is thus described—"When C, the natural major key, on the moveable wheel is set opposite to C, or A the natural minor key is set opposite to A, on the other wheel, the whole of the notes or lines, &c., on both wheels are unison or opposite each other; but when any tune is transposed by C for the major keys, and by A for the minor, and the moveable wheel is set one or more tones or semitones higher or lower, then so far as the notes, or lines upon the fixed or outer wheel, so much more acute or grave those notes on the outer wheel ought to be played or sung, so as to correspond with those on the moveable wheel, in order to preserve the notes of the tune at the same distance from the key when so transposed, as they were when the same tune was performed in the natural key: owing to the variation of the equal, but enharmonical division of the major and minor tones by sharps and flats, which equal divisions do not agree with the perfect calculation of musical sounds, of which the natural scale is composed." This was doubtless very lucid to the author at the time he wrote it, but language changes so rapidly that it is perfectly incomprehensible at the present time. The means of explaining the reason why Mr. Austin's system has never become so general as a "science" which can be easily learned in four or five hours should be, may be found in this description, which is unfortunately no explanation, for if he takes so much trouble to complicate a simple thing, it will be readily inferred that the more difficult matters in music would become hopelessly involved by this system. Later on he gives the signs for the "Accidental musical characters," in which he includes clefs, moods or time signs, bars and marks of expression. The nature of these signs will be best seen in juxtaposition with his notation of the first line of what he calls Psalm cxliv., a tune better known as the Old Hundredth:—

It is scarcely necessary to quote more, as it will be seen that the trouble it would cost to acquire this system is greater than its worth. One great drawback to it is that, while it professes to impart the means of writing down any tune sung or played which "may strike the hearer's fancy," it does not attempt to give any instruction as to how the hearer is to tell the sound of the several notes, the key in which a piece is played, or the relation of the intervals one with another, so that instead of being a means by which the "dulcet sounds which vibrate through the soul" may be transferred in one line in shorthand, Mr. Austin's system was a complicated method of copying music in twice the usual time that an ordinary writer would take. In order that a method of Musical Shorthand should be complete, it is necessary that every musical sound alone or in combination should always present the same appearance to the ear as an ordinary word does; but as every musical chord is capable of as many changes as there are notes, and as the effect of a chord often depends upon the peculiarity of its distribution, and the manner in which it is presented by either voices or instruments, or both, it follows that the permutations of a tone or chord are more in number than the letters of a word can make; and, moreover, as it is only the bare word without permutations that is repeated by ordinary shorthand, the tone of voice being left entirely to the imagination, it is difficult to entertain the notion that any other system of Stenography can be found to be applicable to music than that already in practice.

All attempts at shortening music writing must be based upon the system at present in use, if it is intended that they shall be of general application, whether they be for writing or teaching, and for this reason the Tonic Sol-fa method, excellent as it is to a certain extent, is on the whole unsatisfactory; for although it is available in simple music for single voices and instruments, it is worthless for combinations such as full scores, while for chromatic music, its difficulties are greater than those of the usual method; moreover most pupils taught by the Tonic Sol-fa having arrived at a certain point, and wishing to proceed farther, have often to retrace their steps, and to begin where they should have begun at first, if they really wish to know anything at all about music. The method, therefore, is an incomplete and narrow one, and its success is not owing to its own claims to merit, so much as to the earnest enthusiasm of its teachers.

Busy musicians often long for a quick means of preserving ideas, and would gladly welcome any practical method towards attaining that object, so that with this fact in view, it will not excite wonder when it is told that they have been startled and gratified by the occasional announcement, copied from some scientific journal or another, that an invention has at length been completed in America, of all musical countries in the world, by means of which composers and performers upon the pianoforte may have their improvisations and performances written down for them, without the trouble and labour of putting pen to paper themselves. This invention was to have been exhibited at the Crystal Palace of 1851, again in 1862, and the expectations of the musical world were excited to the highest pitch to behold and become possessed of an instrument that would fix for ever the fugitive thoughts of a composer,—often more beautiful than those rendered permanent by manuscript or print—and perhaps give rise to a possible extension and development of ideas suggested in such wonderful works as Beethoven's Ninth Symphony; but as no mention of the invention is found in the catalogues of either of the exhibitions, it is supposed that it is jealously kept in America, and constantly employed in the manufacture of popular ballads and nigger melodies, and this supposition receives some degree of colour from the fact of the great likeness which all bear to each other, a likeness which could only be the result of a mechanical operation of the most commonplace order.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

The Thanksgiving Festival for the recovery of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, which was given on the 1st ult., was in every respect an unqualified success. That Mr. Arthur Sullivan was commissioned to compose a "Te Deum" in honour of the occasion, could not but give universal satisfaction. Such a ceremonial should be truly national; and assuredly if the voice of England is to return thanks through the medium of a grand musical work, an Englishman is the most fitting person to select for its composition. Mr. Sullivan has approached his task in the proper spirit, and, with the knowledge that he could command enormous resources for the due presentation of his ideas before the public, has written his "Te Deum" for soprano solo, chorus, orchestra, organ, and military band, the latter, however, only being used in the final movement. We will not here attempt a detailed analysis of this elaborate composition — especially as a minute examination of its merits will be found in our reviewing columns—but must content ourselves with saying that it will thoroughly support its composer's reputation. The scoring throughout is masterly in the extreme, and the severest writing in the work is by far the best. The fugue in the first number, commencing on the words "To Thee all Angels," is bold and vigorous; and even finer is that in the last movement, the Mendelssohnian character of which by no means detracts from its merit. The piece which we think produced the greatest effect was No. 3, "The glorious company of the Apostles praise Thee," and most deservedly so, for in our opinion it contains the finest choral writing in the work, the first Gregorian tone being introduced with a variety of harmony in the highest degree interesting; and a very excellent canon, occurring on the words "Thou art the King of Glory," with a skilful orchestral accompaniment, amply proving Mr. Sullivan's power of grappling with the most solid school of sacred composition. The solos (given with much devotional feeling by Madlle. Titiens) formed an effective contrast with the choral portions of the composition; No. 4, "When Thou tookest upon Thee," in B minor, being by far the most successful. The introduction of the military band at the conclusion of the work created much surprise, but there can be no question of the grandeur of the effect; and, the festive character of the occasion taken into account, the innovation could scarcely perhaps be deemed inappropriate. The execution of the "Te Deum" was by no means satisfactory, more especially as far as the choir was concerned; the singing was in many parts slovenly, and several of the leads were sadly wanting in that precision which is essential to the success of a work of this pretension. At the conclusion of the performance Mr. Sullivan was summoned into the orchestra, and warmly greeted by both the audience and the executants. A miscellaneous selection followed, in which Madlle. Titiens, Signori Fancelli and Foli took part. The entire performance was conducted by Mr. Manns with his accustomed care and judgment. The attendance was very large.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

In chronicling the events at this establishment during the past month, the first place must be given to Signor Campanini, who made his début on the 4th ult. as Gennaro, in "Lucrezia Borgia," and achieved a success which, in every respect, was most legitimately earned. The appearance of a pure tenor singer, with a chest voice, which he produces in a perfectly natural manner, even in those passages where great dramatic passion is demanded, seemed at first to take the listeners somewhat by surprise, accustomed as they had long been to the ranting school so carefully nursed by the unreal music of Verdi and his imitators, and it was some time, therefore, before Signor Campanini obtained a firm hold of his audience; but the applause, at first encouraging, gradually grew into a spontaneous expression of admiration; and in the scene where Lucrezia presents to him the poisoned cup, there were not two opinions in the house as to the new comer's exceptional capabilities. Not only the lessee of Her Majesty's Opera, but the musical world in general, may be warmly congratulated on the advent of Signor Campanini, for he brings to us the true method of vocalization which we feared had departed with Signor Mario, and will, we trust, teach the public to demand in future some higher qualifications from a great tenor than the possession of a good ut de poitrine. As Edgardo, in "Lucia di Lammermoor," Signor Campanini again proved his right to the position which he obtained on his first appearance; but his voice had suffered slightly from the effects of our "balmy May," and, although highly successful, he perhaps scarcely did himself full justice. On the production of "Lucrezia Borgia," another début was that of Signor Rota, as the Duke. With a powerful voice, he seems to possess much dramatic faculty, and will no doubt, when a certain amount of nervousness wears off, become a valuable member of the company. He has since appeared as Antonio, in "Linda di Chamouni," and sang the whole of the music so well as to elicit the warmest applause, and an unanimous recall after the "maledictione scene." In the same opera Miss Kellogg (who will be remembered as having held a high position at Her Majesty's Theatre some few years since) re-appeared as the heroine, and was received with unqualified marks of approval, "O luce di quest' anima" being enthusiastically encored, and the audience insisting upon several "recalls." This success she has followed up as Lucia, in Donizetti's opera, and there appears every probability that she will continue a favourite during the remainder of the season, in spite of her many rivals. The début of Madlle. Roze, as Margherita, in Gounod's "Faust" did not create a sufficiently good impression to warrant us in anticipating that she will take a permanent position at this establishment. We think that she scarcely acted wisely in selecting for her first appearance a part so intimately associated with the triumphs of the greatest artists; but she must, of course, abide by the result. Madlle. Titiens and Madlle. Marimon have appeared during the month with much success in their well-known characters; but, with the exception of those for which Signor Campanini is cast, the tenor parts in the operas are still weakly supported.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The first appearance this season of Madame Adelina Patti attracted one of the largest audiences ever seen at this establishment. Meyerbeer's "Dinorah" was the opera selected for the occasion; and as her impersonation of the heroine is not only one of her very best, but one universally known and appreciated, it is needless to do more than record that she returns to us with even an increased power of voice and facility of execution, both of which qualities were so conspicuously displayed in the "Shadow Song" that she was literally overwhelmed with bouquets, and twice recalled to receive the enthusiastic applause of her delighted listeners. She also created a profound impression by her performance of Leonora, in "Il Trovatore," which was announced to be "for the first and only time this season;" and although her warmest admirers can scarcely accord her the highest place on the lyric stage as an exponent of the deepest passion, it is impossible not to award unqualified praise to an artist who can so successfully essay a tragic part on one evening, and, on the next perhaps be coquettishly patting Masetto's cheek in the "Batti, batti" of the peasant girl Zerlina. Madame Pauline Lucca has also re-appeared in some of her most favourite characters, Meyerbeer's "Africaine," again affording her the opportunity of proving, as Selika, that she is a greater artist than many might imagine from seeing her only in the merely "pretty" characters which opera-frequenters are so fond of associating her with. Madlle. Albani has fully confirmed the favourable impression produced on her first appearance, although perhaps Gilda, in Verdi's "Rigoletto," scarcely displays her highest qualifications, a fact which she will hardly become acquainted with if she accept the applause with which she was greeted as the true criterion of success. The re-appearance of Madame Monbelli, as the Countess, in "Le Nozze di Figaro," has created surprise with those who imagined that excellent as her singing was, she had but small qualification as an actress. Her powers in both these requisites for lyrical honours are now considerably improved, and her reception was most enthusiastic. We need do no more than chronicle the débuts of Madlle. Brandt, as the heroine in "Fidelio," and of Madlle. Saar, as the Queen, in Ambroise Thomas's "Hamlet;" both were quasi failures, and their after appearance in "Don Giovanni," the former as Elvira, and the latter as Donna Anna, by no means improved their position, especially associated as they were with such consummate artists as M. Faure and Madame Patti. Signor Bettini, who has been put forward in so many leading parts, can scarcely be recognised as a satisfactory first tenor by the many who remember better days; but he is invariably painstaking and earnest, and makes the most artistic use of his powers, limited though they may be. Signor Graziani and M. Faure impart material strength to the operas in which they are cast, the latter giving one of the most perfect assumptions of the gentlemanly libertine, Don Giovanni, both vocally and histrionically, ever seen upon the stage. Prince Poniatowski's new opera "Gelmina," with Madame Adelina Patti in the principal part, is announced for production too late for notice in our present number.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

If the first of the series of Choral Concerts, given here on the 8th ult., may be accepted as a specimen of those which are to follow, it becomes an important question whether the art which this grand, aristocratic temple was intended to foster (as we were positively informed by its promoters) will not seriously suffer by its influence; for Fashion is so ruthless a tyrant that few who follow her care whither she leads. That M. Gounod should have been appointed director of an English choir in a building under Royal patronage is of itself a sufficient grievance to those who see around them a number of native professors thoroughly qualified by talent and experience for the task; but when we find that a programme is put forward at the opening concert with every piece either "harmonized" or "arranged" by the conductor (with the exception of the "Hallelujah Chorus," which he has kindly left untouched), and that compositions have been selected which by no means test the powers of the choir—the only really difficult portion of Bach's Motett, "I wrestle and pray," having been omitted—it cannot but force upon us the conviction that M. Gounod and his choir desire to create a new world of art in South Kensington, into which the inhabitants of the old world are not presumed to penetrate. In confirmation of this idea, we may record that the applause was loud and frequent, even when the "Old Hundredth" psalm, with the conductor's grim chords, was sung—nay, even when the "National Anthem" was given, with some harmonies of M. Gounod's, upon a dominant pedal, which by our conservative English ears could scarcely be tolerated, if only as an ingenious exercise—and we may therefore conclude that the fashionable audience present, headed by Her Majesty, had assembled for worship, and not for criticism. We may add that the programme included a Catholic Hymn, "Adoro Te," a "Kyrie" from a mass by Palestrina, Mozart's "Ave Verum," the "Sicilian Mariner's Hymn," and a chorus by Leisring, "O Filii et Filiæ," all "arranged" by M. Gounod, even, strangely enough, those by Palestrina, Mozart, and the before-mentioned movement by Bach. We are glad to be able to speak highly of the conductor's "Te Deum," which commenced the concert. It is a good solid piece of writing, clearly voiced, and highly effective. As a rule, the singing was praiseworthy; but, with such comparatively simple music before them, the capabilities of a large body of vocalists can hardly be estimated. The Hall was full; and, as we have said, if any were dissatisfied with this inaugural Choral Festival, they did not venture, by any audible demonstration, to ruffle the feeling of contentment which prevailed.

MR. HENRY LESLIE'S CHOIR.

The last subscription concert of the season was given at St. James's Hall on the 2nd ult., before a large audience. An interesting feature in the programme was the repetition performance of Carissimi's "Jonah," the principal parts being excellently sustained by Miss Ellen Horne, Miss Alice Barnett, Mr. Maas, Mr. Henry Regaldi, and Mr. Maybrick. The whole of the music assigned to the choir was finely rendered, Marcello's Psalm, "The heavens show forth the glory of God;" Leslie's part-song, "The Pilgrims;" and Mendelssohn's Psalm for double choir, "Judge me, O God," in the sacred part, being sung with a precision and refinement which cannot be over-praised. Amongst the secular choral pieces mention must be made of Sir John Goss's noble composition, "Ossian's hymn to the sun;" Sir W. S. Bennett's part-song, "Come live with me" (one of the most melodious and effective of the late contributions to this class of music); and Walter Macfarren's "You stole my love," which elicited an enthusiastic encore. A "Sleighing chorus," by Virginia Gabriel, given for the first time, and accompanied by the composer, did not tone with the artistic compositions by which it was surrounded. A new song by Blumenthal (also having the advantage of the composer's accompaniment), well sung by Madame Patey, was much applauded, and solos by Miss Edith Wynne, Mr. Maas, and Mr. Maybrick, were deservedly received with much favour; but the real attraction of the concert was the singing of the choir, and we are glad to find that this feeling was unmistakably expressed by the audience.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The third concert of the season was given on the 29th April, when Sir Sterndale Bennett's Symphony in G minor commenced the performance, the first movement, in consequence, merely playing the people into their seats. So fine a work as this, and moreover one written especially for the Society, deserves, we think, better treatment; but as soon as silence could be obtained the beauties of the composition were thoroughly recognised, the trio of the second movement (for brass instruments) receiving an enthusiastic encore, and the melodious Romanza, in which the violas have so important a part, being received with the warmest demonstrations of applause. Beethoven's "Coriolan" overture, the "Eroica" Symphony (finely played throughout), and Spohr's overture to "Jessonda," were the other orchestral works. Madame Camilla Urso created a marked effect in Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto. The slow movement, especially, was rendered with a truth of expression which charmed every hearer; but the last movement was taken too fast, and the tone became thin in the effort to keep up the speed at which it was commenced. Madame Urso was unanimously recalled at the conclusion of the Concerto, and greeted with well deserved applause. Madlle. Colombo exhibited facile execution in "Bel raggio," but that Mozart's works are infinitely more difficult to succeed in than those of Rossini, was proved by her singing of the scena and air from Don Giovanni, "Mi tradi," which by no means satisfied the critical listeners. How much M. Gounod's new song, "The Worker," was shorn of its effect by being entrusted to Mrs. Weldon we cannot say: we are inclined to believe, from our high estimate of the composer's powers, that there may be beauties in this piece which have still to be developed. But apart from M. Gounod (who tacitly expressed his favourable opinion of the executant by conducting the work), the subscribers to the Philharmonic, who previously knew nothing whatever of Mrs. Weldon's qualifications, have a right to ask whether her reputation has already been sufficiently established to warrant her appearance at concerts where hitherto it has been understood that none but first-rate artists could gain admittance. At the fourth concert, on the 13th ult., the two movements from Schubert's unfinished Symphony in B minor, and Beethoven's in F (No. 8) were played with excellent effect. M. Delaborde performed with marvellous energy and precision Beethoven's Concerto in E flat, and elicited the warmest applause by his rendering of Bach's Toccata in F, on Broadwood's Pedal Pianoforte. The vocalists were Herr G. Walter and Madlle. Carlotta Patti, the latter of whom was more at home in Bellini's "Ah non giunge" than in Mozart's aria "No, che non sei capace."

We are pleased to be able to inform our readers that the Henry Blagrove Testimonial Fund has now reached nearly £1,500. As it is possible that there may be friends of Mr. Blagrove who have not yet added their names to the list of subscribers, and who might regret missing the opportunity of so doing, we just mention that subscriptions are still received by the Hon. Treasurer, Edward Thurnam, Esq., Norfolk Villa, Reigate, Surrey. The list will close shortly.

Mr. Adolphe Schloesser gave a concert on the 8th ult. at the Hanover Square Rooms, when an excellent selection of chamber music was provided. One of the most important concerted pieces in the programme was Brahms's Quintet, in F minor, played to perfection by MM. Schloesser, Straus, Wiener, Zerbini, and Daubert. As a specimen of the writing of one of the ablest disciples of the modern German school, this composition is entitled to take high rank; and that its many beauties were fully enjoyed by the audience was evidenced by the attention with which so long a work was listened to, and the spontaneous applause with which the performers were overwhelmed at the conclusion. Schubert's Quartet, in A minor (Op. 29), Joachim's "Ungarische Tänze," for violin and Pianoforte, "after Brahms" (in which Mr. Schloesser was assisted by Herr Straus), and Moscheles' Quartet for four performers on two pianofortes (well played by MM. Macfarren, Dannreuther, Beringer, and Schloesser), were also interesting items in the programme. The concert-giver created a marked effect by the performance of his clever "Suite" (recently reviewed in this journal), several of the movements narrowly escaping an encore. The "Courante," "Gavotte," and "Gigue," especially drew forth the warmest demonstrations of approval, and the composer was unanimously recalled to receive the renewed applause of the audience. Three graceful trifles by Schumann were also played with excellent effect by Mr. Schloesser, and although coming late in the evening, they appeared thoroughly appreciated. Madlle. Carola and M. Waldec were the vocalists, and Mr. Zerbini was an able accompanist.

The annual performance of the "Messiah," in aid of the funds of the Royal Society of Musicians, took place at St. James's Hall on the 10th ult., before a crowded audience. The principal vocalists were Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Edith Wynne, Madame Patey, Madame Poole, Miss Ellen Horne, Mr. Cummings, and Mr. Lewis Thomas. The band, led by Mr. J. T. Willy, was thoroughly efficient, and the whole of the choruses were excellently rendered. Mr. W. G. Cusins conducted with his usual decision and intelligence.

We perceive that Messrs. Puttick and Simpson intend to include in their sale of this month the remaining copies of Handel's "Messiah," from the composer's MS. in Buckingham Palace, which were executed in facsimile for the Sacred Harmonic Society.

The present year being the fiftieth anniversary of the foundation of the Royal Academy of Music, it is intended that the event shall be commemorated by a dinner on an extensive scale. Not only the professors and several of the former pupils of the Academy, but many amateurs and patrons of music are expected to be present to celebrate the Jubilee year of an Institution which has done so much for art and artists in this country.

The members of Brixton Church Choir met at the residence of the organist, Mr. W. Lemare, on Thursday evening, the 16th ult., and presented him with an elegant ivory baton, mounted with silver, as a mark of their respect. We learn that Mr. Lemare now resigns the appointment of Organist to Brixton Parish Church (which he has held for five years), and has accepted that of Organist and Choirmaster to St. Saviour's, Herne Hill.

The 218th Anniversary Festival of the Sons of the Clergy was celebrated in St. Paul's Cathedral on the 17th ult. The full Cathedral service, under the direction of the new organist, Dr. Stainer, was on the whole finely rendered, the choir being strengthened by many singers from Her Majesty's Chapel Royal, Westminster Abbey, St. George's, Windsor, Canterbury, Winchester, Eton College, &c. The music of the Suffrages was by Tallis, and the Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis from Smart's service in B flat. After the third Collect Gibbon's Anthem, "Hosanna to the Son of David," was given, and before the sermon Sir John Goss's fine Anthem "Brother, thou art gone before us," Mr. Winn singing the bass solos in the latter with excellent effect. The first part of the service was accompanied by Mr. G. Cooper, and the second by Dr. Stainer. Mendelssohn's Prelude and Fugue in G, and Handel's "Worthy is the Lamb" were played as voluntaries, the former by Dr. Stainer and the latter by Mr George Cooper.

The foundation stone of the Festal Theatre erected in honour of Herr Wagner, has been laid, and the three days' festivities in connection with the event are pronounced by correspondents in Bavaria to have been in the highest degree successful. 250 vocalists, 100 musicians, and 1,000 guests are said to have been present; and the great composer, addressing the assembly in the Opera House, expressed his delight at seeing such a purely German demonstration, and a hope that the new Theatre might prove a nursery of dramatic and musical art. The festival was concluded by a banquet, which Herr Wagner attended. 100,000 thalers are stated to have been already subscribed, but double the amount will be necessary.

The third concert of the Schubert Society (under the able direction of Herr Schuberth), which took place on the 9th ult., at the Beethoven Rooms, was in every respect highly satisfactory. The programme included Weber's pianoforte Sonata in C major, and a Trio Concertante by Feska, for pianoforte, violin and violoncello; and amongst the prominent pieces may also be mentioned a violoncello solo by Herr Schuberth. The vocalists were Miss Louisa Cafferata, Miss Letitia Frenfe, Herr Carl Bohrer, Mr. Stedman, Signori Rizzelli and Federici, and the instrumentalists, in addition to the Director, Herr Enzian (piano forte), and Herr Steffen Armin (violin).

Mr. Hallett Sheppard gave his annual concert on the 6th ult., at the Beethoven Rooms, when he performed with much effect several pianoforte works. He was assisted in the instrumental department by Herr Louis Ries (violin) Mr. Matthews (violoncello), Herr Oberthür (harp), Mr. Dow (flute), Mr. Oscar Edwards (harmonium), and the "infant pianists," Violet and Agnes Molyneux; the vocalists were Miss Katharine Poyntz, Madlle. Barthowska, Madlle. Drasdil, Madame Thaddeus Wells, Madame Osborne Williams and Mr. Stedman. The concert-giver's "Ave Maria," excellently sung by Madlle. Drasdil, was one of the principal successes of the evening.

Mr. Charles K. Salaman's concert at St. George's Hall on the 7th ult., attracted a large audience. The programme was well selected, but we could have wished that Hummel's fine Septett in D minor had not been divided—a portion being played in each part—and that the concert-giver, whose powers as a pianist are well known, had performed an entire work of Beethoven, instead of detached movements. In a Prelude and Gavotte of his own composition, dedicated to Dr. Hiller, Mr. Salaman was highly successful; and some specimens of the virginal and harpsichord music of William Byrde, John Bull, and Henry Purcell, were exceedingly interesting, and elicited much applause. Several compositions and arrangements by Mr. Salaman were also included in the programme, all of which were warmly received. In Hummel's Septett, Mr. Salaman had for his coadjutors Messrs. Alfred Wells, Peisel, Wendland, Richard Blagrove, Albert, and Progatzky; and in the vocal department he was assisted by Madame Conneau, Madlle. Anna Regan, Madame Talbot-Cherer, Miss Fennell, Messrs. Graham and Theodore Distin, Signori Rizzelli and Federici, and M. Valdec. Mr. Salaman's two songs, "Love's Philosophy," and his recent composition, "Perdita's Song" (the former sung by Mr. Graham, and the latter by Madame Talbot-Cherer), were thoroughly appreciated. The accompanists were Messrs. W. Ganz and Francesco Berger.

Mr. Edwin Gray gave his fourth triennial concert on Tuesday evening, the 21st ult., at the Assembly Rooms, Defoe Road, Stoke Newington. Artists—Mesdames Blanche Reives, Ellen Horne, Adelaide Bliss, Beryl, Marienne Potter, and Palmer; Messrs. Albert James, F. H. Cozens, Farquharson, and Chaplin Henry; grand pianoforte, Miss Ellen Bliss (pupil of Sir Julius Benedict). The concert was highly successful, and gave much gratification to a numerous audience.

The last Oratorio Concert of the Brixton Choral Society for the season was given on Monday the 13th ult., when Handel's "Samson" was performed, with the assistance of Miss Ellen Horne, Madame Poole, Mr. Henry Guy, and Mr. Thurley Beale, in so satisfactory a manner as to make a good finale to the already very successful season. The members, the managers, and, above all, the conductor, deserve much credit for the energy displayed in organizing and carrying out concerts of such high-class music with results so beneficial, when it is remembered that this last session the "Messiah," "Lauda Sion," "Ancient Mariner," "Creation" and "Samson" have been successfully produced. An association so ably conducted, and more especially so faithfully fulfilling the promises announced in the prospectus of the season, must be a great boon to the local inhabitants, and deserves the hearty support of all lovers of the art. We are glad to find that Mr. W. Lemare has enrolled his Society for the forthcoming competition at the Crystal Palace.

Mr. Silas gave a concert at the Eyre Arms Assembly Rooms on the 15th ult., before a numerous audience. The concert-giver's talents as a composer of the highest class music were sufficiently evidenced by two trios, the first for clarionet, violoncello and pianoforte, and the second for pianoforte, violin and violoncello, both of which were well played and elicited warm applause. Mr. Silas (whose pianoforte performances were a distinctive feature in the programme) was assisted in the instrumental department by Mr. Henry Holmes (violin), Mr. Park (clarionet), Signor Pezze (violoncello), and M. Delaborde (pianoforte). The vocalists were Madlle. Drasdil, whose song "Herbslied" (Mendelssohn), was re-demanded, Miss Trevanion, and Mr. Arthur Byron, who sang in place of Mr. Vernon Rigby, and obtained a deserved encore for Mr. Silas's ballad "I think of thee."

A concert of sacred music, including several original compositions, was given by the members of the Southwark Choral Society, on Tuesday evening the 30th April, in the Southwark Congregational Church, New Kent Road, in aid of the Church Improvement Fund. After a harmonium solo from Sir M. Costa's "Naaman," an original part-song of the conductor's, called "Christian Mariners' Hymn," was admirably rendered and equally well received. The anthem, "Daughter of Zion," and a very pleasing duet by Miss Giblett and Mrs. Stapley, called "Sabbath Evening Bells," were also highly successful. An anthem, "O, taste and see how good the Lord is," composed by Mr. W. H. Harper, who very efficiently presided at the harmonium during the evening, elicited well deserved applause. The principal solos of the evening were rendered very satisfactorily by Miss Jenkins, Mrs. Underwood, and Mrs. Shoveller.

At a Congregation held at Cambridge on the 10th ult., the degree of Bachelor of Music was conferred on Mr. Edwin John Crow, Fellow of the College of Organists, and organist of St. John's Church, Leicester.

A highly attractive programme was provided by Miss Zimmermann at her concert on the 30th April, at the Hanover Square Rooms. The artistic taste shown in the selection of pieces was fully equalled by the refined and thoroughly classical style with which this excellent pianist interpreted the whole of the music entrusted to her. Mozart's Sonata in F, for pianoforte and violin (in which she was ably assisted by Mr. Henry Holmes), and Beethoven's pianoforte sonata (Op. 90), gave Miss Zimmermann a favourable opportunity of displaying both her executive power and her intellectual appreciation of what may be considered representative works of these two great masters. The concert-giver modestly introduced but one composition of her own during the evening—a "Suite," for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello—which elicited the warmest demonstrations of approval. This piece consists of five movements, an "Introduction and Allegro," a "Canon à la 7ieme," a "Gavotte," an "Air," and a "Gigue." All these are written with the skill and fluency of an experienced composer, and replete with a melodic grace which cannot fail to charm all hearers, especially when they are so perfectly rendered as they were on this occasion. The "Canon" which is given to the stringed instruments, with a clever accompaniment for the pianoforte, is exceedingly ingenious, and created so marked a sensation as to be enthusiastically re-demanded. The "Gavotte" and "Air" (the former having an effective change from minor to major) are charmingly conceived movements; and the final "Gigue" is based on so happy a theme, and is so full of joyous and exhilarating passages for each instrument, that it produced a perfect storm of applause, which did not subside until the composer returned to the platform. In the performance of this "Suite" Miss Zimmermann was associated with Mr. Henry Holmes (violin), and Mr. Robert H. Reed (violoncello), whose finished performance contributed materially to the success of the work. Schumann's Quartet in E flat, for pianoforte, violin, viola, and violoncello, was the other concerted piece in the programme, and was finely rendered by Miss Zimmermann, Mr. Henry Holmes, Mr. Burnett, and Mr. R. H. Reed. Songs by Schumann and Mendelssohn were given with excellent effect by Madlle. Anna Regan, accompanied most sympathetically on the pianoforte by Mr. Walter Macfarren.

The St. George's Glee Union gave its usual monthly concert at the Pimlico Rooms, on the 3rd ult. The most successful of the choral pieces were the "Tramp Chorus," (solos by Miss Horder), "O, hush thee, my babie," "In a Wood," and "Now is the month of Maying." The programme was agreeably varied with songs by Miss Horder, Miss Janet King, Miss Lennox, Mr. Charles Stanton, and Signor Corelli; harp solos by Miss Wade, and pianoforte solos by Miss Augarde and Miss Pritchard.

The first of three concerts of classical chamber music was given by M. Sainton on the 10th ult., at the Hanover Square Rooms. The programme contained two quartets for stringed instruments—Haydn in D major, Op. 17, No. 6, and Beethoven, Op. 130—both of which were excellently played by M. Sainton, Messrs. Amor, Zerbini, and Lasserre. Bach's Sonata for the violin (with pianoforte accompaniment by Herr David) gave M. Sainton ample opportunity for the display of his high qualities as a solo player, and he was much and deservedly applauded. M. Delaborde gave an effective rendering of Beethoven's Sonata, Op. 111, and also performed some pieces upon Messrs. Broadwood's Pedal Grand Pianoforte, the qualifications of which he displayed to the utmost advantage. Miss Julia Wigan (a pupil of Madame Sainton-Dolby) created a highly favourable impression by her careful and refined singing of Mozart's "Non mi dir," and Spohr's "Bird and the Maiden," the effect of the latter piece being much aided by M. Sainton's violin obbligato. The accompanist was Mr. Thouless.

The "Musical and Literary Entertainments" which have been held in the Pimlico Rooms every Monday evening since October last, under the management of Mr. J. Baucutt, concluded for the season on the 13th ult. The entertainment appeared to afford much satisfaction to a densely crowded audience. The vocalists were Mesdames Fielding, Rolfe, and Scott, and Mr. Pallant. Miss Fielding received deserved applause for her two songs, one of which was encored. Mrs. Rolfe gave a very excellent rendering of several Scotch ballads, and "Speed on, my bark" was sung by Mr. Pallant with care and precision. The Misses Mahon and Giles and Mrs. Graham presided at the pianoforte, and played some effective solos during the evening. The literary portion of the programme was ably sustained by Messrs. H. Laker and T. C. Green. An epilogue, spoken by Mr. Baucutt, brought these pleasant réunions to a close.

Mr. Santley's concert at St. James's Hall, on the 21st ult. attracted a numerous audience. Being his first appearance since his return from America, his reception, as might be anticipated, was most enthusiastic—indeed, the applause was so prolonged that it was some time before he could commence his first song, "O, ruddier than the cherry," his rendering of which at once convinced the audience that he was as great as ever in all those qualifications which have won for him the high position he has for so many years held before the public. Being encored, he substituted "The Yeoman's Wedding," and, later in the evening, gave Wallace's "Bellringer," Boyce's "Heart of Oak" (encored), and "The Stirrup Cup," all of which elicited the warmest applause. Mr. Santley was assisted in the instrumental department by Madame Norman-Neruda (violin) and Mr. Charles Hallé (pianoforte), both of whom performed solos with much success, and also united their talents in the Andante and Rondo from Dussek's Sonata in B flat. The vocalists were Madlle. Carlotta Patti, Mesdames Pauline Rita and Florence Lancia, Misses Enriquez and Abbie Whinery, Messrs. Edward Lloyd and Maybrick.

Mr. Frank Elmore gave a concert at St. James's Hall on the 6th ult., before a crowded audience. Madame Strindberg-Elmore, who is an excellent pianist, achieved a marked success in all her solos (especially in one of her own compositions, called "Dreams"), and also in Osborne's duet from "Faust," and Schumann's Andante with variations, in which she was associated with Madlle. Lindberg, a pupil of Liszt, who also displayed talents of a very high order. Much applause was gained by Miss Florence Sanders (a pupil of Madame Elmore), who, considering that she is only twelve years of age, gave a fair rendering of Mendelssohn's "Rondo Capriccio." Mr. Elmore's singing was thoroughly appreciated, two of his songs, "Non è ver" and "The Death of Nelson," pleasing so much as to elicit an enthusiastic encore. The other vocalists were Madlle. Liebhart, Madame Florence Lancia, Madlle. Drasdil, Miss Purdy, Miss Alice Fairman, Herr Carl Stepan and Signor Caravoglia.

Madame Henrietta Moritz (a niece of Hummel, and daughter of Roeckel, the original Florestan, in Beethoven's "Fidelio") gave an intesting concert of classical music on the 2nd ult., at the Hanover Square Rooms. In the performance of several compositions by Beethoven, Bach, Mendelssohn, and Schumann, Madame Moritz evidenced the possession of a refined musical feeling, united with an executive power which should place her in the foremost rank of intellectual pianists. These qualities were especially observable in her rendering of Hummel's Trio in E major, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, and Beethoven's Sonata in A minor (Op. 23), for pianoforte and violin, both of which elicited warm and well-deserved applause. She was ably assisted in the instrumental department by Herr Straus (violin) and M. Paque (violoncello), both of whom performed solos with much success. The vocalists were Miss Katharine Poyntz and Madlle. Drasdil. The concert was attended by a thoroughly appreciative audience.

The Welsh Choral Union has already given two of the four subscription concerts announced, and with a success which fully justifies us in hoping that its migration this season to the Hanover Square Rooms will bring the association as prominently into public notice as it deserves. Sir Sterndale Bennett's "May Queen" was performed with much effect at the first concert, the principal singers being Miss Edith Wynne, Miss R. Jewell, Mr. Cummings, and Mr. Lewis Thomas; and a harp and pianoforte duet, excellently played by Mr. John Thomas and Mr. W. G. Cusins, was an interesting feature in the programme. At the second concert Welsh music formed, as it ought to do, the chief attraction, and the singing of Misses Wynne and Watts of some of the national melodies was much admired. We should add that Mr. John Thomas (under whose able direction the Society is steadily advancing) contributed some harp solos with marked success.

Madame Lemmens-Sherrington gave a Matinée at the Hanover Square Rooms on the 23rd ult., before a full and fashionable audience. Her "Scale Waltz" and "Shake Waltz," which she sang for the first time, are chiefly remarkable as good specimens of vocal studies; and we presume that having been duly introduced in public, they will in future be exclusively kept for private practice. That the composer did them ample justice may be relied upon by those who know her exceptionally high vocal powers; but we think that her numerous admirers would have been glad to hear so great an artist in some music of a more exalted character than either these two clever solfeggios or the common-place ballad of Mr. Molloy, which she afterwards sang. The concert-giver was assisted in the vocal department by Madlle. Jose Sherrington, Madlle. Drasdil, Messrs. Cummings, Nelson Varley, and Whitney, MM. Jules Lefort and Valdec. A feature in the programme was the comic duet, "Comment voulez-vous que je chante," in which Madame Sherrington (who was associated with M. Lefort) by her brilliant singing and excellent acting, proved how high a position she might have assumed on the lyric stage had we such an establishment as a National Opera. The vocal music was agreeably varied by the clever flute playing of Monsieur A. De Vroye, the able performance of M. Lemmens on the Mustel Organ, and the refined execution of two pianoforte pieces by Madlle. Emma Brandes, who on being encored in a Valse by Chopin, substituted Mendelssohn's "Lied ohne worte," No. 4, Book 6, usually known by the absurd title of "The Bee's Wedding." Mr. Vernon Rigby was announced in the programme, but did not appear.

The second concert of the St. John's Wood Society of Musicians, under the direction of Mr. Lansdowne Cottell, was given at the Store Street Rooms on the 11th ult. Miss Alexandrina Dwight, in "Il Bacio" and "Tell me, my heart," Miss Crichton in "Bid me discourse," Miss Marie Klein in C. F. Weber's "Farewell, if ever fondest prayer," Madlle. Marie Christine in "The Blind Girl's Dream," and a débutante, Miss Jessie Gordon, in "The Beacon," by Wellington Guernsey, achieved a marked success, and give promise of future excellence; and Messrs. Charles A. Sleigh and Alfred Bennett (tenors), Messrs. Charles Bell and Montelli (basses), were also most favourably received. Amongst the pianists mention must be made of Miss Elcho, Miss Madeleine Meade and the Misses Molyneux, who are styled in the programme "Infant pianistes."

Mr. W. H. Cummings's Cantata, "The Fairy Ring," produced at his concert at St. James's Hall on the 24th ult., well deserved the success it obtained; for although aiming at no exalted school of art, it is bright, tuneful, and earnestly written throughout. The choruses are well studied, and in every case appropriate to the words they illustrate, the best being "Round about the fairy ring," in which, in addition to some graceful vocal themes, we have some highly effective instrumentation, and the finale, "Away, away," the concluding portion of which has much dramatic feeling. A quartet, "Peace to the dreamer" (encored), is well voiced and effective, but too long for the nature of the movement; and a six-part madrigal, "Love is a sweet, yet a cruel thing," may also be commended for its careful and unpretentious writing. The composer has certainly not appropriated the best solos in the work, although, by his excellent singing, the air, "By the fair river" elicited a large amount of approbation. The gem was given to Miss Edith Wynne, "In a rosebud I was lying," which was deliciously sung, and enthusiastically encored. The "Forge" song, rendered with characteristic energy by Mr. Lewis Thomas, reminded us too much of the Boston "Peace Jubilee;" but the contralto air, "Happy fays and fairies all," is extremely melodious, and won another encore, not only from its intrinsic merit, but in recognition of the fine interpretation it received from Madame Patey. At the conclusion of the Cantata, Mr. Cummings was called forward, and warmly greeted by a large audience. We must not omit to mention that the choruses were well given by the members of Mr. Barnby's choir (under the direction of Mr. F. Stanislaus), and that the harp obbligato was excellently played by Mr. John Thomas. The second part was miscellaneous, and included Beethoven's "Choral Fantasia" (conducted by Mr. Barnby, with Madame Arabella Goddard at the pianoforte), and vocal solos by the singers above named, with the addition of Madame Lemmens-Sherrington.

Novello, Ewer and Co.

Te Deum Laudamus, for Soprano solo, Chorus, Orchestra, Organ, and Military Band (ad libitum). Composed for the Festival held at the Crystal Palace, May 1, 1872, in celebration of the recovery of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, by Arthur S. Sullivan.

It would seem as though the time had at last arrived when music and its professors were taking their rightful position in social, as well as in intellectual status. Time was, and not long ago, when it was not thought odd for a Painter, in the midst of an assembly of Painters, to deny to music the right of being considered a fine art. The musician at the same time was everywhere, and by everybody looked upon as one who followed a calling which demanded powers very little, if at all superior to those of an ordinary mechanic, and he was treated accordingly. The cause of this might perhaps be found equally divided between himself and the times he lived in—for the musician of thirty or forty years back was not always a very presentable individual, and society had not yet arrived at the intermixture of the aristocracies of intellect, birth and wealth, to which we are now somewhat accustomed. That the lot of music and musicians, however, has fallen upon fairer ground in these days is undeniable, and for this happy consummation the musician has first of all to thank himself—he who respects himself is respected of others, and it is equally true that art is what its professors make it. We have now therefore arrived at a time when the musician is brought into prominence, and made of use—called upon to celebrate a victory, or bewail a defeat; compose a thanksgiving for the recovery of a Prince, or a dirge on the death of a warrior. In parenthesis we may perhaps be allowed to say that the restoration to health of the Prince of Wales, has given an impetus to this species of musical rejoicing which would lead us sometimes to doubt the sincerity of those who call down blessings upon the head of the Heir-apparent (at a published price of Four Shillings; sold at half-price). It was undoubtedly a happy thought on the part of the authorities at the Crystal Palace to commission one of the most eminent of English composers to furnish a Te Deum, to be performed at a Thanksgiving Festival with all the vast resources belonging to the place; and the endeavours thus made to fix and hand down to future generations, a memorial of the gratitude of an entire nation, was equally honourable to the one and the other. The remembrance of the victory of Dettingen would have passed away but for Handel's immortal celebration music, and though it would be unjust to institute comparisons, this at least may be said, that Mr. Sullivan has boldly gone to work and manfully determined to do his best, regardless of what great man may have preceded him, or what unborn genius may follow in the same path.

Considering that the tendency on the part of composers for many years past, has been the cultivation of almost microscopic detail to the disadvantage of outline, the most surprising thing about this work is its stately breadth and dignity, the whole treatment being, with but slight exception, Handelian. If we cannot agree with the principles upon which Mr. Sullivan has divided his libretto into movements, we must at least admit the difficulty that exists in making any division which would be likely to satisfy all parties. Still we cannot consider in any other light than as an error of judgment the separation of the antithetical verses, "To Thee all angels" and "To Thee, Cherubin."

As, however, a work of this character demands a more detailed analysis than nine-tenths of the compositions usually sent for review, we may begin by stating that the first chorus which embraces the first three verses of the Canticle, is in its early phrases bold, bright and dignified—just what the opening movement of a work of this character should be. The fughetta upon the words "To Thee all angels" is not altogether happy in its subject, or remarkable in its working out; but an episode, introduced twice, on the words "The Heavens and all the Powers therein," may be cited as being decidedly striking and original.

The Sanctus is introduced by a phrase for soprano solo—graceful in itself, and otherwise admirable as affording a contrast to the solemn thrice repeated "Holy." And here we may say that whenever the initial words of the Sanctus are repeated, the music is such as to suggest almost beyond any other setting of this subject, an utter prostration both of body and soul before the "Majesty of His Glory." As abstract music this may not be the strongest number in the work, but considered as a piece of musical colouring in relation to its subject, it is unquestionably the most impressive.

In No. 3, Mr. Sullivan shows signs of warming to his work, and whether we consider his admirable treatment of old subjects, or the freshness and vigour of the new ones, it is impossible not to recognize in this movement the hand of a master. The thrice repeated tonic followed by ascending arpeggios and a syncopated descending passage, subsequently repeated in double counterpoint, the moving the accent on to the second measure of the bar, and the quaint cadence just before the introduction of the eighth Gregorian tone by the voices—all these go to prove that the author felt he had been happy in the conception of his subjects, and that his satisfaction had remained until he had completed their treatment. As a matter of construction it was perhaps hardly wise to make so important a verse as "Thou art the King of Glory," a mere episode in the middle of this number, but a curious orchestral figure in the accompaniment serves to give it prominence, if at the cost of a trifling loss of dignity.

The salient characteristic of No. 4 (soprano solo) is a breadth of phrase which can leave no doubt that the air was written specially for Madlle. Titiens. It is throughout of a very elevated character and the fine burst into the key of B major at the words "Thou sittest at the right hand of God," is grandly conceived and most successfully carried out.

No. 5, although full of charm and graciousness (to coin a phrase), is probably the weakest number in the work. But even here there is much to reward the student in the easy flow of the voice parts, and the graceful form of the accompaniment. In regard to the latter, we would wish to call particular attention to the charming effect gained by slurring two notes in the violin figures, page 45 of the vocal score.

The few introductory phrases of No. 6, "O Lord, save Thy people," are hardly to be called interesting—unless we consider them in the light of a foil to the succeeding brisk fugal point, "Day by day we magnify Thee," the interest of which is kept up with unflagging vivacity to the end of the movement. Especially commendable is an effect where the voices in unison are singing a broad phrase, the orchestra meanwhile keeping up the original subject with infinite force and animation.

In No. 7 we have a repetition of the opening phrases of No. 1; the soprano this time taking the canto fermo, which in the earlier instance had been given to the orchestra. The subject is then repeated pianissimo by the voices in four-part harmony, unaccompanied, after which a counter subject is led off by the basses and treated with great dexterity and musicianly skill; each phrase of the canto fermo being introduced in turn by the brass instruments and, as it were, superimposed upon the fugue which is being quietly unravelled beneath. But Mr. Sullivan does not here reach the end of his resources, for presently we have a March of a most piquant, if not secular character, the latter feature being brought into stronger relief by the fact that it is given to a Military Band. Surely nothing could be more glaringly in contrast than the chorale with which the movement commenced (known to every one as the common measure tune St. Anne's), and the gay, even sprightly, march immediately following it. Yet it is not long before we find the Tenors and Basses leading off the first phrase of the Psalm Tune, with the march still going on soon to be joined by the organ, which taking the fugal subject previously mentioned for its share, forthwith proceeds simultaneously to work its way without the slightest reference to the march or the chorale; and yet there is no discord. Each of these three subjects—apparently divided in feeling wide as the poles asunder—retaining its marked characteristics, merges with the others into an unity of effect as musically harmonious as it is grandiose.

Thus ends a work which despite the somewhat unfavourable circumstances under which it was first heard, cannot fail to live.

Its few short-comings, viz., want of individuality and modern feeling, disappear altogether before its great merits. With much of the breadth of Handel, some of the grace of Mozart, and an orchestral colouring almost unique in its masterly handling, this Te Deum ought to serve as a gratifying promise that English Music is blossoming into a Spring to be succeeded by a Summer, such as this land has not experienced since the death of Purcell.

The Organist's Quarterly Journal. Edited by Wm. Spark, Mus. Doc. Nos. 11, 12, 13 and 14.

Here is a year's issue, namely, from July 1, 1871, to April 1, 1872, of a serial that is steadily growing in esteem. Its value to art is to be regarded from two sides, on one of which organ players are ranged, while composers for the organ stand on the other. The instrument in which both these classes of musicians interest themselves—for they are two classes, though many an individual belongs to both—has come into far greater use in recent years than it had, even in the memory of those who are not the oldest among us. A few years back, it was rarely to be met with out of a church, or of a private house where it served devotional purposes, and, whether a community or a single person, its owners were nearly always among the wealthiest. Now, the places of worship are few, even of Dissenters, that are without an organ; most of our concert rooms possess one; many a town hall is enriched in appearance, in property, and in the power to draw together and gratify large masses of the population, by the largest of musical instruments; and in the domestic circle a specimen is now more frequent, than was a pianoforte fifty years ago. The multiplicity of organs is induced by the multiplication of players, and their mutual product is a large amount of organ music. The best organists agree that Bach, the mighty, the unapproachable, has left works, that, as studies, are as far superior to everything else that has been produced, and that probably can be produced, as they are superior in merit. But organists, who are not the best, find Bach, in another sense than his matchless excellence, also unapproachable, and these require music of less difficulty than his, through the practice of which to fit themselves to approach him; and even they, who may be said to have mastered the master, are not content to play in but one style though this be the noblest, and of but one author, though he be the greatest. The demand for music less creates composers, than gives opportunity to those, who have already come into being, for the exercise of their ability; and they who have written and would continue to work in other fields of art, rejoice to develop their talent in a style of writing which has scope for erudition at once with the loftiest imagination, and comprises within its range almost every variety of musical productions. The two classes, players and writers, act and react upon each other; the more music is played, the more will be written, and the more is written, the more will be played. Up to the date of the first part of the "Organist's Quarterly Journal," January, 1869, music for the organ was printed here, indeed, but it consisted mainly of arrangements from Oratorios and instrumental works, with some occasional and admirable productions of a very few original writers, whose high reputation as executants stimulated interest in what they might compose for their instrument. The periodical under notice is then to be regarded as yielding to players an ever fresh supply of music in many styles and of many degrees of difficulty; and as opening to composers a medium through which they may address the world in their productive capacity without recommendation from their practical renown. In respect to these latter, another point claims consideration; the work is an arena for the exhibition of music from all sources, and the productions of Englishmen are set side by side therein with those of artists of other lands, which present the means for comparing their relative merits, and perhaps of assigning a standing to either to which they might not have been thought entitled when reviewed singly.

It would be interesting and gratifying minutely to discuss the merits of each piece in the four times twenty pages now under consideration, but the interest and gratification would pertain wholly to the writer, who had the music before him, while the discussion would be just as tiresome to the reader, who had any amount of time and space between him and the said music which alone could throw light on the remarks. All the pieces shall be named, then, to show how far and wide, and how totally without prejudice for name or nation, the editor has recruited for contributions for his journal, and to show with what liberality of purse and opinion he seems to have thought but of the diverse wants of his various subscribers, and to have sought to meet these with specimens of organ music in the contrapuntal style and the free, in the severe style and the light, in pieces of practical difficulty and pieces more facile, in some with a florid part for the pedals, and others with but an occasional note for the feet—a foot-note that may strengthen the sense of what stands above, but is not essential thereto; and even in pieces with no independent part for that portion of organ mechanism, which as greatly complicates the practice of a beginner as it enriches the resources of an accomplished player, and of a composer who writes for his use.

The July number of 1871 contains six of these organizations—or, better to speak, and still keep within scientific terminology—organisms. A Voluntary for the Communion, by Patrice Valentin, organist of Toulouse Cathedral, exemplifies the present state of organ music in France, and shows it to incline somewhat to grace and sweetness, to the suavity of progressions in thirds or sixths, and to the sensational effect of dropping rather than modulating into the key of the major third below that in which a cadence has been made. A Prelude, by Walter Macfarren, has a melody so definite as to arrest the attention, and so pleasant as to gratify it. The want of definition in its melodies, principally resulting from rhythmical diffuseness, is more common in modern organ music than in other classes of composition; and on this account a piece is the more welcome whose interest is integral to the notes, and springs not alone from the sustension of the sounds and the variation of the stops. When, after an effective digression, the first strain is resumed, a counter melody is added, which gives new zest to its previous charm; but in this, a certain G against the G sharp of the original theme, though perfectly accountable to harmonic laws, is perhaps an extreme case that may displease some squeamish listeners as much as it may delight others of broader views. A Fugato, by Ph. Tietz, has more of the fugal form than its spirit, but perhaps enough of this too to content hearers unable to penetrate the elaborations of a more masterly work. Is not its title a misnomer, signifying rather "fugued" than a small fugue? but, here is no place for investigating the past tenses and the diminutives of the Italian language. Herr Tietz is organist of the principal church of Hildesheim in Hanover, where he is much esteemed. Praeludium et Fuga, by the Rev. Sir Fred. Gore Ouseley, is a composition of another stamp. The fugue is really well written, having many points of musicianship, especially a stretto (page 55), where the subject is answered in the 7th below, then in the 5th, and then in other intervals, after very short periods. The prelude is more modern in harmony, and consequently in phraseology, but it is less happy in its ideas. A Prelude by Arthur Dyer, relies chiefly for effect upon the specialities of the instrument, with which the writer appears to be thoroughly familiar. An Andante, by Hamilton Clarke, Mus. Bac., savours more of labour than inspiration. The long prevalence of four-part harmony and the uniformity of motion give it an air of monotony; the latter is relieved indeed by an accompaniment of quavers when the opening theme is repeated, but even then, the original accent is unvaried. The harshest of all discords—the appoggiatura over the minor 9th sounded against the major 3rd of the dominant, with which it makes the interval of the diminished 8th—occurs frequently in the movement; this extreme combination is to be found, though most rarely, in the music of the greatest writers, but then only in extreme cases as a means of the strongest expression; whereas, here it has little to make it noticeable but its harshness.

The part for October contains eight pieces in almost as many styles. It begins with a Larghetto, by T. M. Mudie, which is brief but full of meaning. It is remarkable for the frequent and effective use of one chord, and for the different notation of this when it appears in the major key and in the minor; this, in D minor, is written $\frac{C}{A}\frac{F}{\sharp}$; in F, it stands as $G\frac{\sharp}{E}$; it seems inconsistent that, in the one case we should have C an augmented fifth from the bass, while in the other there is a minor sixth, the harmony being in other respects the same. To have called the upper note A flat, where C was the root, would have made the one chord an exact transposition of the other. The question is too intricate to be discussed in a few words, and the present space is too limited to admit of many; it must be dismissed therefore for the nonce, but may be opened on some future occasion. A Postlude, by Henry Smart, is a piece of far more pretension, and it fulfils all to which it pretends. It might be wished that some other phrase had been written than that from one of the songs in Mozart's Figaro which provokingly will remind one of the situation wherein it is already familiar. The treatment of the theme throughout, especially when it occurs in the key of G minor, is so clever as to make one doubly regret its likeness to an old friend. The subject in A admirably diversifies the character of the movement by the passages without harmony that alternate its melodious phrases; some of the contributors to the work too little think of this valuable resource, of heightening the effect of harmony by its occasional absence. An Andantino, by Gustave Merkel, is singularly attractive. The composer is organist of the Court Church in Dresden, and is highly reputed for his playing and for his musical erudition. The piece bears strong resemblance to two of the Seven Characteristic Pieces, by Mendelssohn, both in the same key as this, E minor, and even they may be supposed to have had their origin in a movement, also in E minor, by Bach. Let not this remark be read in disparagement of Herr Merkel's truly charming little composition, which has merit enough of its own, and which owes perhaps its similarity to others to the unaccountable influence of the key in which they are all cast. There is little to be said of the Allegro Vivace, by F. W. Hird, but that it shows familiarity with the manuals, and has so little difficulty for the pedals that players of moderate skill on this portion of the instrument may make a good effect with it. An Introductory Voluntary, by W. H. Barnett, makes still less demand on the pedalist; its constant four-part writing becomes a little tedious, (it is curious what difficulty organ players have to take their fingers off the keys,) but its effect is smooth. A Prelude and Fugue, by Ch. Graedener, shows greater amount of facility than of matter, and greater tendency to extreme modulation than power to make any key interesting. Herr Graedener has published many pianoforte sonatas and other pieces in Hamburg, where he dwells, in which, let it be hoped, there may be more true musical ideas than are here set forth; the whole piece, particularly the prelude, might easily have been extemporised, and was not quite worth the committal to paper. Then follows an Andante, by Walter Sangster, Mus. Bac., Oxon, in which the first two bars are luckily melodious—luckily, because their development may almost be said to constitute the entire piece. A Prelude, by Alex. S. Cooper, is short enough to make one wish for more of it, so charming as it is during its brief continuance. The break in the fulness of the harmony makes a good relief in the middle of this piece, which is strengthened by the successive entry of the parts with a phrase in imitation.

We now come to the part for January, and this presents seven pieces to our consideration. First of these is a concertstück by H. F. Degenhardt, organist of St. Catherine's, Hamburg—an anomalous definition, surely, since it can be but most rarely that a composition for the organ can be played in a concert. It was well enough for Weber to give the same title to his famous piece for pianoforte and orchestra, which has not the form of a Concerto, and is yet more regularly constructed than a Fantasia, was expressly designed for concert performance, and could not be classed with or named after any prototype. The last justification only can apply to the piece before us, which may be described as formless in its wanderings from key to key, and as aiming at far more than it strikes. A theme which appears first in A flat and afterwards in F, is really pretty; but there is little else to redeem the ostentatious manner of the whole, which culminates in a plagal cadence on the grandiloquent Tierce de Picardie. A Prelude by the editor, is welcome. It is a worked phrase rather than a theme, but the work is skilful. The reticence is to be respected of Dr. Spark, who evidently writes with ease, who has the whole volume at his command, and who yet puts forth most sparingly his own productions. Another composition by Ph. Tietz is the Fantasia which follows. It is rambling in character, but there is some merit in the melody which appears at page 90 and is repeated at page 92. An Introductory Voluntary by A. Page should have begun on the fourth quaver of the bar instead of on the first. An Impromptu, by C. J. Frost, is a result of organists' habit of extemporising; the whole piece is made up of one bar, which is worked throughout with some ingenuity, but scarcely constitutes a musical idea. Two pieces by Dr. R. Papperitz, organist of St. Nicolai, Leipzig—Choral Vorspiele, Nos. 1 and 2, zu "Ich grüge mich an"—are, in plain English, preludes to the Choral tune named in the title, and they will be less interesting in England where the tune itself is unknown, than in Germany where it is generally familiar. In No. 1 the tune is assigned to the pedals, and it supports a somewhat laboured, very chromatic, and a little tedious progression of harmony in ceaseless quavers. No. 2 may be styled a variation on the tune; it is more diatonic and less monotonous than the other, but still is not exempt from dryness. The author is a professor of harmony in the Leipzig Conservatory. The last piece an Andante, Cantabile, by W. Wright, organist of Christ Church, Croydon, is harmonious.

Part 14, that latest issued, appeared in April last, and contains no less than ten numbers. There are two pieces by E. Silas, a Prelude and a March. The former is a cantilena accompanied by chords repeated in quavers, and supported by a pedal part mostly in sustained notes. The latter is bold, full of contrast, and highly effective; the point of imitation that constitutes the second strain stands out well and particularly associates the composition with the instrument. A Pastorale by T. Mee Pattison is not conspicuous among its fellows. A Religious March by G. A. Macfarren justifies its appellation by having the Hundredth Psalm treated canonically for its trio. An Easy Prelude for M. F. stops, and an Easy Prelude for soft stops, both by Henry Smart show the usual skill of this capital musician, in their adjustment to the capabilities of the instrument, and in their interest as music. The second is perhaps the more attractive, but both will please hearers as much as executants. A Prelude and a Motivo by Frederic Archer—inventions run much in couples in this Part before us—have much charm. A curious coincidence is in the likeness of the first phrase of the Prelude to that of the piece for soft stops by Mr. Smart, which is strengthened by their both being in the same key of G; it is one of many proofs that musical resemblances need not be plagiarisms, when two composers, who can neither have seen the other's production, light upon similarities. Yet another two pieces by one composer conclude the collection. These are a Moderato and a Pastorale by Gustav Merkel, which, if not equal in beauty to the number by Herr Merkel before mentioned, are at least so in musicianship, and they are both sufficiently attractive to be often played with pleasure.

In taking leave, for the present, of the "Organist's Quarterly Journal," we strongly recommend it as an interesting exhibition of the abilities of living composers, and as a proof of the great amount of talent that is now afloat in the world.

Save, Lord, and hear us (Ave Maria). Motett, for Soprano or Tenor solo, with chorus.

O saving Victim (O Salutaris). Motett, for Soprano or Tenor solo, with chorus.

Composed by J. Faure.

It might be confidently expected that any compositions of so consummate an artist as M. Faure would be in the highest degree interesting; but we were by no means prepared for so much originality of thought and clearness of design as are exhibited in the group of vocal pieces before us. The Canzonette, "Wherefore," in B flat, commences with a short and eloquent symphony of eight bars, starting, quaintly enough, with the third inversion of the dominant seventh, in E flat, and proceeding by a chromatic descending progression to a close in the key of the song. The effect of this phrase gains on the ear by repetition between the verses, and is cleverly woven in with the voice-part at the conclusion. The melody is charmingly simple, and expresses the poetry with remarkable fidelity; the words, "Ah, why?" especially, being set with true musical appreciation of the feeling with which the interrogation is uttered. The next composition, "Far from thee," is we are inclined to think the best of the series; and indeed is one of the most exquisite love-songs we have seen for many years. The rhythm of the melody changes every bar, alternating between triple and double, the voice-part being preceded by a melodious symphony in $\frac{6}{8}$, which, breaking in at the conclusion of each verse, has an indescribably beautiful effect. The accompaniments are in thorough keeping with the unstudied and spontaneous outpourings of a lover's grief in solitude; and vocalists who can appreciate and give expression to so pure and unpretending a vocal piece will thank us for directing their attention to its merits. The "Son of the Prophet" is a more elaborately constructed song, commencing with a recitative, in C minor, leading to an andante, with a flowing triplet accompaniment, which again breaks into a quasi recitative. There is much dramatic power shown in this composition, but it is of a more conventional character than that which distinguishes the songs already noticed. In "The Star" we have again much beautiful thought. Beginning with a recitative, we are led to a charming bit of placid melody for the pianoforte, a good effect being afterwards gained by the voice singing in $\frac{6}{8}$ against $\frac{2}{4}$ in the accompaniment. The sostenuto phrases after the double bar, with a tremolo accompaniment, conclude the song with much sympathetic feeling for the words. The two Motetts are excellent examples of calm religious music. If we have a preference, it is for the second on our list, "O saving Victim," a quiet devotional piece which cannot fail to enchain the attention of listeners. "Save Lord, and hear us" is also extremely melodious; and the solo portions of both pieces are in every respect equally well suited for soprano or tenor voices.

Masaniello. (The Dumb Girl of Portici.) An Opera, in five acts. Composed by D. F. E. Auber. Edited and translated into English by Natalia Macfarren.

The "Editor's Note" to this edition of Auber's most popular opera informs us that it "has been delayed in publication partly because it was found necessary to re-arrange nearly the whole of the accompaniment, the existing arrangements being either wholly inadequate to represent the score, or else impracticable for the pianoforte." The care which has been exercised in preparing this new version, not only as a reliable hand-book for use during the performance of the work, but as a faithful transcript of the composer's original intention in the minutest particulars, deserves the warmest commendation, the accompaniment throughout lying well under the hand of the pianist, and (with the profuse indications of the instrumentation) giving a very excellent idea of the score. The translation, in many parts an extremely difficult task, evinces a laudable reverence for the music; and in several pieces moves so perfectly with the notes as to make us look forward with longing to the time when lyrical works shall be sung in the language of the country in which they are performed, which assuredly is the next best thing to hearing them in their native tongue. We are glad to find that the dances, which form so prominent a feature in this work, are here printed for the first time without curtailment, and that the coda of the Tarantella in the third act is also given, an addition which will enhance the value of this piece for performance, apart from the Opera.

Four-part Songs by Walter Macfarren.

In the notice, in last month's issue, of the volume of 24 four-part songs by Mr. Walter Macfarren, allusion was made to the other compositions of the class by the same author, which are not included in that collection. This has elicited enquiry as to the pieces in question, which, it is hoped these remarks will satisfy.

The first series of "Novello's Part-Song Book" first claimed and duly received the world's attention at the beginning of the present half century. A part of the plan of the work in the first stage of its career, was to award prizes for the best settings of certain poems, which were offered by the publishers as incitements to the endeavour of whomsoever might choose to compete for the same. Two of these prizes were gained by the composer whose productions are here under consideration, and these two are the first to be considered. The "Harvest Song" is set to a characteristic poem by Mrs. Newton Crosland; to our fancy the music is more chromatic, or, in plain English, more strongly coloured than the subject warrants; the assumed freshness of country life and the vigour needed for the harvest field, we deem to be better expressible in the broad simplicity of diatonic intervals than in the semi-tonic progressions and frequent changes of key that abound in this piece; but our opinion is stultified by that of the public—for the part-song had a great success, which continued for several years after it was a new one—and public opinion is justified by the bold, hearty refrain, "Hey! for the Harvest Home," in the enjoyment of which we will dispute with no audience that ever encored it. How strange is the evanescence of popularity! Time was, and that not far gone by, when this was one of the standing pieces in Mr. Henry Leslie's and many other concerts; it is not a whit less pleasing now than it was; but yet it has no chance of pleasing since it is never heard. It would be politic in any director of a choral institution to restore the "Harvest Song" to public favour, and to prove again, but not reprove, the justice of the awarded prize. "An Emigrant's Song" is the other lasting record, to which allusion has been made, of how "Novello's Part-Song Book" once "prized" its contents. It has less likelihood than its companion of the broad popularity that the other enjoyed, but it has great feeling, which is saved from becoming pathetic by the cheery brightness of its last strain, for which the major form of the key is happily introduced, and it is set to a charming poem from the same fair hand as the foregoing piece.

"A lapse of twenty years," to quote the playbill of a sensational drama, occurred between the last part-song and the next we have to notice, during which interval several of those appeared that were mentioned last month. The collection of six, now to be considered, completes the author's productions of this class with which the public is acquainted. A series of songs for the seasons, set to verses by Mrs. Cowden Clarke, once Miss Mary Novello, begins of course with "Spring" and therein shows as blithe a front as will bear up against the snow blossoms of the severe May just ended, and prove a hardihood to resist the blandishments alike and the fierceness of the ensuing periods. The song is vigorous as cheerful, and it is no less tuneful. Following in the year's train, comes "Summer," which maintains the gaiety of her forerunner, though under a somewhat softer aspect. This, to our fancy, is the fairest flower of the series; but reviewers should not indulge in fancy, the true domain of those reviewed; and having no firmer ground on which to base the preference, we surmise that other hearers may admire the other three songs as much, and then they will think excellently well of the whole four. "Autumn" is ushered in by a sturdy passage for basses alone, which seems written to show the fallacy of the common assertion, that the minor key is characteristically mournful, for a jollier spirit could not be breathed than glows in every note of it; true, there is a spice of the major for the ending of each verse, as if one turned to autumn's fruits after feasting on his savoury fare, and regaling on his fluids, nut brown and purple; but the manner of the whole is a merry one, and whether the dimensions of the third be "lesser" or "greater," the key of D never turned a tune more hearty than the present. The cares of "Winter" are all shut out of doors in the representation of him which follows; here sits he by his fire-side, laughing all over, and inoculating every hearer with his jocund humour. None can gainsay such evidence as this song affords of the sympathetic charm of music, for singers and listeners must be very sound asleep not to be impregnated with its festal character.

After these four seasonable acts of homage to the modern muse, the composer turns his thoughts backwards, and selects two charmingly quaint specimens of our elder poets. It may or may not be worth notice, but it is obvious that the average of verses appropriated to part-songs is of a far higher order than that of the "words" (we use the accepted term) to which songs for a single voice are mostly written; and we observe this as prompting an inference that, when unchecked by the proscription of schoolmistresses or other arbiters of feminine taste, a musician, having the whole garden of poetry from which to choose, is likelier to gather his honey from the healthier and the sweeter flowers; many may sing of their loves, while the theme is forbidden to each one of the choir. William Wager, who flowered at the dawn of the sixteenth century, has left a sweet little ditty, telling of a maid who came out of Kent, and interlined with such ejaculations as "Dainty Love!" "Dangerous she!" and the like; the music to this is aptly divided into alternate phrases, respectively for the two male voices and for the whole chorus, the first having the narrative, the latter having the comments this calls forth. It is right pleasantly disposed, and its simplicity of melody with its naturalness of harmony joined to its pretty vocal disposition, makes a capital effect. Half a hundred years later, Anthony Munday was in his ripeness, and a specimen of his fruit, "You stole my love" is the last we have here to record of the sources whence the composer drew his suggestions. Love stealing is no act of felony, for it gives as much as it takes, and brings no more joy than it makes; so the full chorus chuckle over their pilfering, and are as merry mouthed about their wrongs—or rights, it may be—as if each were certain of being the winner by the interchange of loves. It would be a pleonasm, or any other asm that means extra to the purpose, to speak of the music to this dainty little poem; go from county to county, from concert to concert, and from one private circle to another, and you will hear it sung, by many or by four, as it would be impossible to sing if each singer took not thorough pleasure in the task; it is as great a favourite now as erewhile was the harvest song, and when the public has given a verdict, to echo this would be as redundant as to dispute it would expose a want of judgment.

Cramer, Wood and Co.

Mendelssohn's Lobgesang. Paraphrase for the Pianoforte by J. Rummel.

The word "paraphrase" disarms any adverse criticism which we might feel it our duty to make upon this piece, were it simply issued as an arrangement of Mendelssohn's work for the pianoforte. So far from wishing to discourage the publication of portions of the great compositions of the great masters, we are decidedly of opinion that the more they are multiplied the better, for good music cannot be heard too much; but when such arrangements are intended to lead credulous purchasers to believe that an unmutilated work is before them, critics should exercise the power they hold to warn the public against countenancing a system detrimental alike to art and artists. Mr. Rummel's paraphrase on Mendelssohn's "Lobgesang" may be conscientiously recommended to amateurs as a well written and effective piece for drawing-room performance. The subjects are well chosen, and follow in good order, so that, although the sequence of the numbers in the original work is not observed, there is no undue effect of patchiness. The beautiful duet, "I waited for the Lord," is exceedingly well arranged; and an air of completeness is given to the piece by the repetition of the majestic opening phrase at the conclusion. We think it would be an improvement in a "pot-pourri" like this if the names of the several movements and airs were placed at the head of each; as amateur executants, for whom these compositions are especially intended, have but a very indistinct knowledge of the works from which they are taken, and it would also be the means of satisfying many an enquiring listener.

Andante from Mozart's Quartett in D minor.
Minuet from Schubert's Quartett, Op. 29.
Transcribed for the Pianoforte by J. Rummel.

These are pure transcriptions, the name of Mr. Rummel merely appearing as the adapter of the thoughts of Mozart and Schubert to our household instrument. Pianists who do not desire to idle away their time by practising rapid arpeggios to ornament a flimsy theme, will delight in reproducing the ideas contained in these quartetts upon the pianoforte; for it is one of the great merits of arrangements of works written for instruments not usually available in a drawing-room, that students can linger over their many beauties for a sufficient length of time to thoroughly appreciate their worth. Mozart's "Andante" is based upon a subject of extreme beauty, which must delight every lover of pure and legitimate writing; and the Minuet from Schubert's Quartett, although in a different school, will also be found available as a reminiscence of the original. The arranger has well and reverently accomplished his task, and will add to his reputation by multiplying these extracts from the compositions of the best masters.

Composers' Publishing Company.

It is no Song, but I. Song. Words by Capt. Bedford, R.E. Music by W. J. Chatfield.

A placid and melodious subject, appropriately and carefully harmonised. An expressive singer may create an effect from these simple materials, for the phrases evince the possession of musical feeling. Lest an accompanist should startle the singer by a chord, we presume not intended, let C be played instead of D, in the third crotchet of the 7th bar, page 2.

Augener and Co.

Sonata for the Pianoforte. Composed by Charles Henry Shepherd, Associate of the Royal Academy of Music.

Mr. Shepherd's resolve to throw his ideas into a classical shape should predispose critics in his favour, even were his composition less deserving than it is of commendation. There is much good writing in the first movement, although the principal subject has scarcely sufficient interest for so important a work. We like the second movement better; the theme, an "Andante Religioso," is melodious and well harmonised; but the introduction of the "Recitative," breaks the continuity of feeling with which it opens, and, in our opinion, detracts from the placid character of what we should expect as a musical illustration of the verse with which the movement is headed. The "Minuet," and "Trio," are graceful specimens of careful and conscientious writing; and the "Finale," is clear and well defined, the chief theme having sufficient melodic character to make its recurrence welcome, and the subordinate subjects being well contrasted. The Sonata is appropriately dedicated by Mr. Shepherd to "his esteemed master and friend, G. A. Mac-farren, Esq.," whose valuable counsel and advice may still be of infinite service to the young composer.

BOOSEY AND CO.

Madame Sainton-Dolby's Tutor for English Singers (Ladies' voices). Part 3.

IT is difficult to say why the third part of this work is sent to us for review, more especially as it contains "Songs from Oratorios and Ballads, Ancient and Modern," all of which are too well known to need comment. Some sensible remarks precede the specimens of vocal music, and we can only express a hope that the two parts which have not been forwarded to us, sufficiently prepare the pupil for the study of the advanced pieces here given. Madame Sainton's high reputation would fully warrant us in conjecturing this to be the case; but to adapt a popular adage to the present matter, we can but "speak of a book as we find it."

DUNCAN DAVISON AND CO.

A Cloud with a Silver Lining. Cantata for female voices, with Pianoforte accompaniment. Words by K. L. C. Music by Francesca Jessie Ferrari.

THIS unpretending Cantata should, we think, find its way into drawing-rooms where musical evenings are not exclusively devoted to solo singing, for it is melodious, and so simply written in the voice-parts as to demand but a small amount of trouble from the executants. Preceded by an effective little overture, arranged as a pianoforte duet, the composition opens with a choral recitative, followed by a chorus in $\frac{6}{8}$ rhythm, the subject of which is flowing and attractive. The change to the tonic minor well expresses the words; but the sudden transition from A minor to E major is somewhat abrupt. The two succeeding solos and chorus are rather fragmentary in effect, especially the prayer, in F minor, which might have been more developed with advantage. The trio is pleasing, and the duet and final chorus contain some points which convince us that the composer may achieve something of higher importance with perseverance and attentive study. At all events she has not attempted to soar beyond the limits of her powers in this, which we presume to be her first essay, and that, at least, is a hopeful sign.

ORGANISTS' SALARIES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—I have been in hopes that some clergymen more competent than myself would before now have taken up the church side of the question involved in the erroneous theory of "Clericus," that "when an organist is paid at the same rate for church duty as for secular work he has no ground of complaint." I believe that the general acceptance of such a principle would be disastrous to the cause of church music, because it would tend to discourage professors from devoting any considerable share of their time to organ practice, and would make it to the pecuniary advantage of the busiest—that is, the more successful—members of the profession to decline such engagements altogether. The theory, as stated by "Clericus," sounds specious at first hearing to the non-professional man, but, the more it is considered, the more it will be seen to be founded on a series of false assumptions.

It assumes, in the first place, that the best musicians are sufficiently paid for their secular work. There are many "teachers of music" destitute of sound musical education, who are no organists, some of whom would wisely shrink from a public performance of any kind, and yet are engaged in professional duties and affecting the scale of remuneration. But the very power to accept the appointment of organist places a man in a class above them. And this is what we mean by "position." "Clericus" is right in attaching value to the "position" of organist. But, to whom does the position belong—to the church authorities or to the musician? The organist is not raised above his brother professionals in the same town by the accident of his selection by the minister and churchwardens, or by some supposed magnetic influence from his rubbing against these dignified persons, for then the presiding genius of the barrel organ would be likewise advantaged in his sphere of secular work, but by the sensible guarantee which the public have of his ability as a musician. The professional respect accorded to him is due, not to his employers, but to his own brains and toil. And, therefore, I contend that to offer an organist a salary of £40 and a good "position" would be as straightforward and honest a proceeding as to pay the physician's expected fee in the form of half-a-guinea and his own hat.

In the second place, the theory of "Clericus" assumes that proficiency on the organ is entitled to no higher remuneration than proficiency on the pianoforte. The average professor of music has twelve pupils on the latter instrument for one organ pupil, and his engagement as organist is generally for one day in seven. To adopt, therefore, the same scale of payment for organ work as for pianoforte work would be to expect musicians to undertake this distinct branch of the profession, with the increased outlay of time and money, for a fifth or sixth part of the remunerative return which they would receive for the other branch of study; under ordinary circumstances, organ practice being more expensive and more inconvenient than pianoforte practice. Supposing, then, that for the sake of the "position" a professor thought it worth his while to qualify as an organist, the scale of payment would present a strong inducement to him to devote his whole after-study to the pianoforte. A few years ago a relative of my own was articled to one of the leading professors, and we were desirous to arrange for part of his time to be devoted to organ study. The professor, on the other hand, advised him to devote the whole of his time for instrumental practice to the pianoforte, for that, he said, was what he had to live by. And accordingly he picked up his organ-playing and discharged the duties of deputy-organist as best he could. I will put it to any man who has the cause of church music at heart whether it is desirable that our young musicians should be obliged to regard organ study and organ practice as a branch of the profession too unremunerative to be put on the same level as pianoforte practice. And with whom does the fault lie?

Another false assumption in the theory propounded by "Clericus" is, that public performance need not be paid at a higher rate than private routine work. He contends, indeed, that organ-playing is to some extent routine work; it may be to the cathedral organist, but scarcely so to the man who is at work only on Sundays. A good organist is laying his plans for Sunday during the week, and when the time of performance comes the tax upon his energies is altogether different from that entailed by private lesson-giving. And then there is the responsibility. In a sharp attack of illness, the pupils may be put off, but would the congregation be so accommodating? An attack of tooth-ache, not quite wholly disabling, is aggravating enough in the daily routine of musician-life; but what is it on the Sunday, when the organist must be up to the mark, or some sharp critic (not impossibly the curate) will be denouncing in the next Musical Times the vileness of harmonies which, after all, had their "root" in a carious tooth? The general rule amongst musical men seems a just one—that public performance shall be paid at a higher rate than duties of a private nature.

I am regarding this subject simply from the Churchman's side of it. We need the best skill of our best musicians in town and in country. And in the main we get it, or there would be no such good music as we have. But we have no right to adorn God's worship with half-remunerated talent. We have clearly no right to expect men to qualify themselves as organists, and to remunerate themselves by the pianoforte. We should inevitably fail to secure from them the incessant care and attention which we require, and for which we ought to pay with liberality worthy of the service of God. It has been my privilege to have been interested in church music for the last five and twenty years, and to have witnessed a marvellous improvement in every department of it save one. The organist's work has increased; the tax upon his time and skill is much greater; but his salary, as an average, has certainly not increased. I cannot suggest a remedy to meet every case; but I think we ought not to shut our eyes to the fact, still less to recognise any principle of payment unworthy of English Churchmen.

I am, Sir, yours very truly,
HENRY GREEVES, Curate of Selby,
District Secretary to the York Diocesan Choral Association.

Selby, May 17, 1872.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—Although I am by no means competent to give an opinion either way upon the musical question now disputed between your correspondents Dr. Stainer and Mr. Archer, allow me to inform the latter gentleman that it is quite unnecessary to write θέσις as he does, in order to distinguish it from θῆσις; for the simple reason that this last word does not, and could not (for reasons well understood by all Greek scholars) exist in the language. The distinction between arsis and thesis in scanning is familiar to every tolerably advanced schoolboy, and the words are never, so far as I am aware, printed in Greek characters when used in the sense referred to.

I am, Sir, yours faithfully,
Windlesham, Surrey. C. S. Jerram, M.A., Oxon.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—I have read with much interest your critique on "Novello's Part-Song Book," vol. IX., in the current number of the Musical Times; but your remarks on the songs for men's voices have revived a standing difficulty with me, viz., how to get the upper part of such music sung; and I venture to ask you a few questions on the subject, and should esteem it a favour if you would kindly inform my ignorance thereon.

1st.—a. Is the "counter-tenor" a distinct voice, as the tenor is a distinct one from the bass?
b. If so, how is it distinguished?
c. Are there many such to be met with now-a-days?

2nd.—If not a distinct voice, but a result of special training, what is the kind of training needed, and what register is to be employed?

3rd.—Can you refer me to any books where this subject is fully treated?

I heard recently that a glee club was started not long ago by a number of the best male voices in the town where I live, but, after a short time, it had to be given up, as the tenors—some of whom I know are very good—could not get up to the high notes, or at least sustain the upper part; and among my acquaintance I know none who can sing this part. A few years ago, I remember I used occasionally to hear in church a male voice (a grown person) singing the alto part, in a squeaky sort of voice, which I was always taught to regard as unpleasant and unnatural, and which certainly appeared so to me, compared with the alto of women or boys.

And yet, I suppose in the times of the glee writers, there must have been a larger number of "counter-tenor" singers (whatever this means). If I remember rightly, Hogarth, in his Musical History, speaks of Weber having been taken to hear some of this singing when in England, and having spoken disparagingly of it.

Then, again. Wherein does this voice differ from that used so largely on the Continent for the 1st tenor in men's music? The whole subject is rather mysterious to me as yet, and I have scarcely met with any who could explain it thoroughly to me.

Please excuse the liberty I have taken with you, and believe me, Yours respectfully,
May 10, 1872. R. S. O.

[The music of Tallis, Bird, Wilbye, Gibbons, and their cotemporaries, shows that the alto voice of that period was what we should now call a high or light tenor. The parts for it seldom, if ever, proceed above G, and were therefore, though the Church pitch of that time was a whole tone above the secular, within the chest register of voices of our own time. The tenor voice of those days is represented by the low or robust tenor of our own. The music of Purcell shows that, after the Restoration, a vocal register was developed which had not previously been in use. This consists of what is ordinarily called the "falsetto," or "head voice," and belongs to all classes of voices, male and female. The male singers, who employ this quality only, are called indifferently counter-tenors or altos; and they, from greatly exercising the particular register, obtain a power in its tone and a facility in its use beyond what is possessed by singers who fully develop other parts of the vocal compass. Many of the best counter-tenor singers have been natural basses, and it has seemed somewhat anomalous to hear the tone, which R. S. O. describes as "squeaky," proceed from the lips of a fine portly person, who might be expected to give utterance to sounds of far lower pitch and grander character. In some very rare instances, the natural or chest range of a light tenor extends upwards, so as to include the notes that can usually be obtained by men but in falsetto. For a good round century and a half, the counter-tenor voice was employed as the second from the top in a vocal quartet that included a treble, or as the top part if the music were for adult male voices only. During that period, were written so very many works for the Church, which their own merit and their long standard use have rendered indispensable to her service, that it is necessary, in all cathedral choirs, to retain counter-tenor voices, for which there is a part in all these compositions; then were written the Choruses of Handel, which were designed for high male altos; and then were written the mass of glees, to whose intended effect the counter-tenor voice is essential. A peculiar development of the falsetto register in combination with the chest voice is called in France the "voix mixte," and it is by this production that many continental tenors sing extremely high notes with great force. Save in these cases, the falsetto of male voices seems to be uncultivated out of England, and here it has been far less in use within these last forty years than previously. It seems to have been thought, during the long ascendancy of the counter-tenor voice, that to sing, in the case of a woman or a boy, meant to sing high. Hence, although some few vocalists of this class are to be remembered, the female contralto voice was little esteemed, and as little trained. Almost within the present day, folks first perceived the beauty of the rich and most expressive tones of the contralto voice, to listen to them with delight, and to encourage their development; they perceived, too, how unnatural it was to strain low female voices to produce high sounds, and how harsh a character was the general result. Within this time, the practice of concerted vocal music has become far more general than previously in domestic circles, and this has given large occasion for the employment of the contralto; the substitution of female for male altos in our choruses has been a natural consequence, but an entire change in the effect of choral music has been thereby wrought. The acute tones of the male alto or counter-tenor, for which choruses were written even so late as the theatrical music of Bishop, are now replaced by the mellow sounds of the female voice, and every one must perceive that the extreme high notes of a male voice have a greatly different sound from the notes of the same pitch which are in the middle of a female voice. The counter-tenor voice, in falsetto, never was developed in Germany, and the first tenor part, in the four-part songs for male voices of that nation, never goes above the range of a light tenor voice. Here, since the contralto voice has been admired, and consequently cultivated, and since also the practice of after dinner glee singing has become less indispensable in social meetings than it was, the cultivation of the falsetto counter-tenor has greatly declined, because the voice is less in request, so that it is almost singular for an amateur to develop that register, and the professional altos are but as one in twenty to what they used to be. The male voice part-songs of Mr. Walter Macfarren, to which our correspondent refers, lie for the most part within the range of the light tenor for which Germans write; a few of them, however, make such free use of A and B that they cannot be sung without an effort in the natural voice of tenors, and for these few, the falsetto notes of the counter tenor are necessary, and the notes of this now comparatively rarely developed register impart a special colouring to the entire vocal combination. Some interesting particulars on this subject have lately appeared in the Tonic Sol-fa Reporter.

Brief Summary of Country News.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

ABINGDON.—The Musical Association gave the last open night of the season on Monday, the 20th ult., when a selection from the Seasons was very well performed, Miss Hillis, in "Oh! welcome now," and Mr. Pacey (the able conductor), in "With joy the impatient husbandman," were especially successful. Miss Bessie Evans sang the soprano solos in the second part with much effect, and the accompaniments were most efficiently performed.

BATH.—The last concert of Mr. Bianchi Taylor's choir for the present season was given on the 24th April before a large audience. Several glees and part-songs were sung with excellent effect. Mendelssohn's four-part song, "On a lake," and Sir John Stevenson's glee with semi-chorus, "See, our bark scuds o'er the main," being especially well received. A feature of the concert was a selection from Weber's Opera Oberon, the overture to which was charmingly played by Miss Taylor and Mr. Brownell. The principal vocal parts were ably given by Misses Brettelle, Fanny Andrews, E. Taylor, and Edwards, Messrs. Estens and A. Smith. The concert was in every respect highly successful.

BIRMINGHAM.—On Thursday, the 25th April, Mr. Stimpson gave his second lecture on Church Music to the members of the Church of England Young Men's Association, at the Town Hall, assisted by a choir. The Rev. J. C. Blissard presided. The lecturer resumed the subject by considering the condition of Cathedral music. The introduction of the showy mass music of Mozart into Church services he condemned as an inconsistency as great as would be the wearing of a Dolly Varden dress in conjunction with the Quakeress bonnet. The choir here sang an anthem, "Merciful and gracious Lord, turn Thee unto us again," to music from Mozart's First Mass (solos by Miss Buckler and Mr. F. Sharpe), and Mr. Stimpson asked his hearers to contrast this with Byrd's Anthem, which was sung at the previous lecture. Mr. Stimpson strongly reprobated the practice of singing sacred words to secular music, as, for instance, the words—

"Who is this that comes from Edom.
All his raiments stained with blood?"

to the well-known air "Cease your funning," from the Beggar's Opera. Two airs from Don Giovanni were in a similar way applied to sacred words, so that he who one day had listened to the music in which a lover's anger was deprecated, or a quarrel reconciled, might next day be asked to sing those same notes to words setting forth the great truths of the Christian religion. Weber's "Softly sighs" had been appropriated to "Come, thou Fount of every blessing, Tune my heart to sing Thy praise."

A metrical version of the 37th Psalm, "The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want," had been sung to the "Huntsman's Chorus," and "Catlin's Hornpipe," as a tune called "Helmsley," was deemed a proper companion to the hymn, "Lo, he comes with clouds descending." The non-existence of a really musical Hymnal was a great hindrance to good church music. He did not know of a single publication which met the requirements of the case or was thoroughly adapted to musical purposes. The Hymnals contained hymns in which the metre was irregular, the language improper, or the sentiment unfit. "Hymns Ancient and Modern" was as faulty a collection as any other. In pointing out what church music ought to be, Mr. Stimpson said the management of it should be left to musicians who had studied the subject practically and theoretically, and who had given their working time to it, not their play time. He earnestly recommended the teaching of good hymns and good music in the Sunday schools; a mighty choir might then be trained to fill the land with youthful voices, unstained with vulgarity, instead of, as now was too often the case, shiploads of American rubbish being used, to tunes not one degree removed from nigger melodies, and profane with vulgarity and the associations of banjos and blackened faces. The audience frequently showed sympathy with the lecturer's criticisms by applause, and the music was heartily appreciated.

BRIDGE OF ALLAN, SCOTLAND.—A new organ, built by Messrs. Foster and Andrews, of Hull, for St. Saviour's Episcopal Church, was opened on Whit Sunday, Mr. Brook Sampson, organist of the Parish Church, Kettering, presiding at the instrument. This being the first organ in the town, large congregations were attracted to hear it. The instrument is in a Gothic case, with decorated front pipes; and the tone and workmanship reflect much credit on the builders. Mr. Brook Sampson played with great taste; and amongst his voluntaries were Andante in G (Smart), extracts from Mendelssohn's Organ Sonatas, "Zadock the Priest" (Handel), "Allegro" (Bache), "Hallelujah Chorus" (Handel), Offertoires in A and F (Wely), &c.

CANTERBURY.—On the 6th ult., Mr. J. Plant, Grammar Master of the Cathedral Choristers, gave a very interesting and instructive lecture in connection with the Church of England Young Men's Literary Association, on the rise and progress of part-singing in England from the 16th century to the present time. The lecturer commenced by alluding to the influence that music has always had on nations and individuals, and then turning to the immediate subject of his lecture gave a clear definition of the difference between a madrigal, glee, and part-song, and the meaning of the terms fugue, canon, catch, &c., &c. He then dwelt at some length on the different styles of each author, from whom a composition had been selected, spoke of the musical catch and glee clubs that had been established during the last half century, and expressed much regret at their gradual decline. The lecture was illustrated by several canons, glees, and madrigals sung by Miss Jessie Dixon, Masters Maxted and Shepard, Messrs. Birch, Cross, Moulding, Rhodes, and Higgins (of the Cathedral choir), all of whom gave their valuable services.

COBHAM.—Mr. H. P. G. Brooke gave his farewell concert on Tuesday evening, the 30th April, to a numerous audience. Before the commencement of the performance, the members of Mr. Brooke's class met at the School-room to present him with a testimonial, viz.—an elegant time-piece, with the following inscription:—"Presented to H. P. G. Brooke, Esq., by the Cobham Choral Class, as a mark of their respect and appreciation of his high qualifications for imparting a thorough knowledge of music. Cobham, Surrey, April 30th, 1872." The presentation was made by Walter Hele Molesworth, Esq., of Cobham Lodge and Kensington Square, whose eloquent speech expressive of Mr. Brooke's high qualities as a musician, and a sincere and faithful friend and instructor, was listened to with great attention. Mr. Brooke made a suitable reply and gave some very useful advice to the members in a musical sense. The programme of the concert contained a number of part-songs, which the class sang with excellent effect, reflecting the utmost credit upon the training of Mr. Brooke. Mrs. Rowland Smith was highly successful in "Where the bee sucks," the Rev. H. Trotter and Rev. Gerard Bancks received an encore in the duet "Treasures of home," Mr. George Smith sang the "Death of Nelson" with great expression, and was loudly applauded, and Miss Shepherd gave an intelligent rendering of Sullivan's "Looking back." Miss Imogene Molesworth (in the absence of her sister, Miss Cordelia Molesworth) sang "Moonlight on the Ocean" very well, and was encored. Miss Frost took the audience by surprise by her fine singing of Bishop's "Bid me discourse," which was re-demanded. The quartett, "Sweet is the hour of rest" (Mercadante) was well given by Mrs. R. Smith, Miss E. Bennett, Mr. George Smith, and the Rev. H. Trotter. The Misses Trotter played with great taste and judgment a pianoforte duet, "Grand Duchesse" (Offenbach). Mr. Brooke conducted and accompanied with much ability throughout the evening.

CROFT SPA, DARLINGTON.—On Thursday, the 2nd ult., a concert was given at the Assembly Rooms, by Mr. Otto Holzapfel, Professor of Music, before a very large audience. The concert-giver was assisted by Miss Clelland (Soprano), of the Free Trade Hall Concerts, Manchester, Miss Brooks (Mezzo Soprano), (Mr. Harriott (Tenór), of Darlington, Mr. J. Bell (Bass), of the Parish Church Choir, Richmond, and Mr. J. H. Rooks, organist of the Parish Church, Richmond, Yorkshire, who officiated as accompanist, and with Mr. Holzapfel performed several duets on the pianoforte, perhaps the most successful of which was an arrangement of Mendelssohn's 1st Concerto. Miss Clelland sang with much effect, and elicited the warmest applause. The concert was in every respect thoroughly satisfactory.

DEVIZES.—The Choral Society gave a performance of Judas Maccabæus at the Corn Exchange on the 7th ult., in aid of the funds of the Cottage Hospital, which was opened on the same day. The concert (under the direction of Mr. J. T. Abraham) was attended by about 1000 persons, and was highly successful. The committee had the advantage of the gratuitous services of Miss Osman, of Reading (who was received with much applause), Mr. Price, Mr. C. J. Phillips, and Mr. R. Sharpe, of Southampton, who presided at the harmonium, and accompanied the solos with great taste and skill. Several of the solos and duets were well sung by members of the Society. The band and chorus numbered about 95 performers, ably led by Mr. Salisbury. Mr. W. Sly presided at the pianoforte with his customary ability.

DOUGLAS, ISLE OF MAN.—The concert by Miss Wood's Choir on behalf of the Industrial Home took place on Tuesday evening, the 30th April, in the Victoria Hall, in the presence of his Excellency the Lieut.-Governor and Mrs. Loch, and a fashionable audience. The singing of the choir was generally admirable, and showed an immense improvement over the performances at any previous concert. The best were "Believe me, if all those endearing young charms" (which was sung with much grace and delicacy), Mendelssohn's "Morning prayer," Dr. Garrett's capital part-song, "My luve is like a red, red rose," and the "Lass of Richmond Hill." Mrs. Spittall and Miss Hutchinson were highly successful in all their solos, and elicited warm and deserved applause. Between the parts the prizes were gracefully distributed to the successful candidates by Mrs. Loch. They were awarded to Misses Johns, Christian, Reede, S. F. Reede, M. A. Cretney, Green, E. Green, and B. Cubbon, Messrs. C. Wainright, J. Goldsmith, W. Connall, and Moulding. Altogether the concert was a most enjoyable one; and a satisfactory balance of £15 8s. 6d. has been handed over to the Treasurer of the Industrial Home.

EASTBOURNE.—A concert was given by Herr Wolf's band, at the Assembly Rooms, on the 14th ult., which amply demonstrated the claims of this company of musicians to public support. Several amateur vocalists gave their services on the occasion. Solos were played by Herr Cramer (violin), Herr Yung (cornet), and Herr Siebenheller (clarionet), with marked success, and all the pieces executed by the band were given with excellent effect. Mr. J. Taylor lent valuable assistance as accompanist at the pianoforte.

FARNHAM, SURREY.—Two sacred concerts have recently been given in aid of the funds for the erection of a new Congregational Church, the first of which was well attended; and at the second, which took place on the 23rd April, the Town Hall was crowded with an attentive and appreciative audience. Choruses by Kent, Scott, and Attwood, and songs from the works of Handel, Mendelssohn, Beethoven, &c., were well rendered by Miss D'Elbou, Miss Spencer, Miss Chilton, Miss Heathcote, and Mr. Ransom. The concerts were conducted by the organist of the Church (Mr. Lewis Tily), and the accompaniments supplied by Mr. Walter Tily. The performances have been quite a success, in both a musical and pecuniary sense.

HEREFORD.—The postponed Easter concert of the Hereford Choral Society was given at the Shirehall on Tuesday evening, the 23rd April. Mr. Townshend Smith conducted, and the principal singers were Mrs. Sicklemore, Miss L. Broad, Mr. Entwistle, Rev. A. Robinson, Rev. T. H. Belcher, Rev. W. D. V. Duncombe, and Mr. Lambert. The programme included a choice selection of sacred music, well adapted for performance at the Easter season. Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm, Spohr's Cantata, God, Thou art great, and Mozart's Twelfth Mass, were most carefully rendered, and the concert was in every respect highly satisfactory.

HONLEY.—On Whit Sunday the annual festival, in connection with St. Mary's Church, took place. The Psalms were chanted to Ouseley in E and Barnby in E. The Magnificat to Palestrina in D, and the Deus Miserearur to Turle in G. The anthem was "The Lord is my strength" (Sir John Goss). The service was exceedingly well performed, the Psalms and Canticles being sung with the utmost precision. The anthem was most skilfully performed by the choir, which was augmented for the occasion to upwards of 100 voices. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. Harrison. Mr. J. C. Beaumont presided at the organ with his usual taste and skill.

JERSEY.—Herr Standhaft's Oratorio, Solomon's Temple, recently produced here, has been thoroughly and deservedly successful, and there can be little doubt that a repetition of the work will raise the composer still higher in the estimation of the public. The local press speaks of the music in the warmest terms of commendation: the solos, especially "Solomon's Prayer" (assigned to the tenor), it is said produced a marked effect, the choruses are stated to be written with an intimate knowledge of the requirements of sacred choral music, and the instrumentation to evince much feeling for appropriate colouring throughout. This Oratorio is the first original composition of any merit performed for many years in Jersey; and Herr Standhaft has a right to congratulate himself upon the excellent result of his labours.

KENDAL.—A very excellent performance of Handel's Judas Maccabæus was given at Albert Buildings on the 8th ult., the principal vocalists being Miss A. A. Clelland, Messrs. N. Dumville, George Allan, and H. E. Stansfeld. The choruses were exceedingly well rendered, but wanted more space for their due effect than the room afforded. Miss Clelland sang with much expression and intelligence, especially the airs "Pious orgies" and "From mighty kings," and the other solo parts were also sustained with commendable care. The concert was under the direction of Messrs. W. B. Armstrong and W. Smallwood. The proceeds of the performance, which were highly satisfactory, were to be handed over to the Industrial Exhibition Fund.

LEEDS.—On the 21st ult., Dr. Spark gave an Organ Recital to a large audience. The programme consisted of a March, composed by Gounod for the Pope; an Andante in C, from Beethoven's Sonata in G; a Postlude in D, by Mr. Henry Smart; and one of Mendelssohn's "Songs without words," preceded by an extempore introduction by Dr. Spark; an Offertoire, by A. Guilmant; and the "Hallelujah," from the Messiah. There were several musicians present, and among them Mr. Henry Smart, who takes a first rank among English, and indeed modern, composers. This gentleman, after the rehearsal, sat down at the instrument, and delighted a select few with his extraordinary improvisations. Mr. Smart, who is well acquainted with the resources of the organ, expressed his appreciation of its tone and varied beauties.

LEIGHTON BUZZARD.—On the 16th ult., the members of the Leighton Buzzard and Linslade Choral Society gave their fourth concert in the Corn Exchange, before a numerous and fashionable audience. Handel's Oratorio, the Messiah, was selected for performance, the principal parts being sustained by Miss Bessie Emmett, Miss A. Newton, Mr. Selwyn Graham, and Mr. Edwin Holland. Miss Emmett especially distinguished herself in "Rejoice greatly" and "I know that my Redeemer liveth" (the first being enthusiastically encored), Miss Newton was highly successful in "He shall feed His flock" (which was also re-demanded), the Passion music was rendered with much devotional feeling by Mr. Graham, and Mr. Holland's excellent bass voice was heard to great advantage in "Why do the nations?" Mr. Dearden played the obbligato to "The trumpet shall sound," and the orchestra, under the leadership of Mr. Bell (of London), was thoroughly efficient. The choruses, especially "For unto us," "All we like sheep," and the "Hallelujah," were admirably given, and reflected the utmost credit upon the training of Mr. Mortimer, who conducted the performance with much ability. Mr. Butcher presided at the harmonium.

LINCOLN.—The members of the St. Peter-at-Arches Vocal Union gave their last concert of the season in the National School-room, Silver Street, on Tuesday, the 30th April, before a large and appreciative audience. The programme contained several fine part-songs by Leslie, Hatton, Berger, Pearson, &c., which were effectively rendered by the class. Miss Matkin possesses a good contralto voice, and received an encore for her song, a compliment likewise awarded to Miss Blanche Lake for her rendering of Levey's "Esmeralda." Mr. J. B. Mawer, the organist of the church, conducted, and Mrs. Mawer accompanied throughout in a highly creditable manner.

LISKEARD.—The concert of the Liskeard Choral Society on the 1st ult. was very successful, and the Society commences this season in a flourishing condition, much of its prosperity being due to the energetic honorary secretaries, Mr. John Childs and Mr. R. Courtney. The concert opened by Mr. John Rogers, of London, singing Mendelssohn's air, "O for the wings of a dove," in a most effective manner, the choir giving the choruses with much precision. In Mr. Löhr's fine Cantata, Ave Maria, the chief solo was admirably taken by Miss Julia Elton. The opening chorus in Spohr's God, Thou art great, was rendered most creditably, and Mr. Rogers's solo, "Thou earth waft sweet incense," won for him great commendation. A burst of well-merited applause followed the duet, "Children, pray this love to cherish," by Miss Elton and Mr. Rogers. Mr. J. E. Moon, of Plymouth, excellently accompanied the vocalists on the harmonium, and Mr. Faull, pupil of Mr. Löhr, presided at the pianoforte with much skill. The second part of the entertainment was devoted almost entirely to secular music, one of the most attractive pieces being Messrs. Löhr and Moon's piano and harmonium duet from Meyerbeer's Le Prophete, which was loudly re-demanded. Mr. Löhr conducted the concert with his usual ability.

LIVERPOOL.—The sixth concert of the Philharmonic Society for the year was given on the 30th April; principal performers—Madame Patey, Signor Caravoglia (in place of Mr. Sims Reeves, unable to appear), and Herr Straus, solo violin. The orchestral portion of the music consisted of Auber's Overture to Masaniello, Beethoven's to Egmont, Mozart's Jupiter Symphony, and Mendelssohn's "Cornelius March." Madame Patey's solos were "Verdi Prati" (Handel), "Pietà Signore" (Stradella), and "Golden days" (Sullivan), the first and last of which were encored, but only the last repeated. Signor Caravoglia gave "Vi Ravviso" (Bellini), and a Barcarole by Mattei, which, being encored, was replaced by "Non più andrai," sung with great spirit, and charmingly accompanied on the pianoforte by Sir Julius Benedict. Herr Straus played with much effect Spohr's 9th Concerto, in D minor, a Cavatina, Op. 85, No. 3, by Joachim Raff; and some characteristic Hungarian dances, "after Brahms," by Joachim. The part-music, which went very well, comprised two part-songs by Reinecke, "To my barque" and "Sir Spring," and H. Hugo Pierson's Naval Ode, "Ye Mariners of England" (encored) and "Bridal day," from William Tell.

LOWER BROUGHTON, MANCHESTER.—On Saturday, the 11th ult., Mr. C. H. Shepherd, A.R.A., of Newcastle-on-Tyne, gave an Organ Recital from the works of Bach, Mendelssohn, &c., on the new organ built by Mr. Jardine, in the Church of the Ascension, to a large and fashionable audience. Mr. Shepherd also presided at the Sunday evening service, when the choir of the church was assisted by some of the Cathedral choristers.

OLDHAM.—The new organ in St. Thomas's Church, Moorside, built by Messrs. Hill and Son, London, was opened on the 26th inst., by Mr. J. V. Roberts, Mus. Bac., Oxon., organist of the Parish Church, Halifax.

OXFORD.—The Oxford Choral Society gave an admirable performance of Mendelssohn's Athalie and Rossini's Stabat Mater on the 24th April. The principal vocalists were Miss Annie Sinclair, Miss Hill, Miss Marion Severn, Mr. Kerr Gedge, and Mr. Halliwell. The band was largely augmented by professionals from London, Mr. Frank Amor being leader, and Mr. Allchin, Mus. Bac., conductor. The illustrative verses to Athalie were recited by the Rev. James Paton with much taste and feeling, and the concert altogether was most successful, a result which must be very gratifying to Mr. Allchin, the conductor, who has been indefatigable in his efforts to bring the Society to its present efficient state.

PAISLEY.—The Tonic Sol-fa Institute gave the last concert of the season on the 27th April, at the Drill Hall, when an excellent programme of part-music was selected, amongst the most effective of which were "Up, quit thy bower," "Come, Madeline, come," "When winds breathe soft," and the French part-song, "The comrades' song of hope." Mr. John A. Brown conducted with his accustomed ability, and the performance was in every respect thoroughly satisfactory.

PERTH.—The Euterpean Society, under the leadership of Mrs. Hempel, gave its second rehearsal for the season, in the City Hall, on Monday, the 13th ult. The first part consisted of Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm, Spohr's God, Thou art great, the Tenor Aria, "In native worth," from Haydn's Creation, and the Quartet, "Honour and glory," from Costa's Naaman. The second part included the following part-songs:—Mendelssohn's "May Song," Macfarren's "Who is Sylvia," J. G. Callcott's "Love wakes and weeps," and Benedict's "Hunting song."

PLYMOUTH.—On the 1st ult., the Plymouth Vocal Association gave a highly successful performance of Handel's Oratorio, Samson, at St. James's Hall. The choruses, under the skilful direction of Mr. Löhr, went with much precision and vigour, especially "O, first created beam," "Then round about the starry throne," "Fixed in His everlasting seat," and "Let their celestial concerts," all of which were received with the warmest demonstrations of applause. The solos were excellently rendered, Miss Spiller in "Let the bright Seraphim" (with the brilliant trumpet obbligato of Mr. Fly), Mr. Rogers in "Total eclipse," and Miss Julia Elton in "Return, O God of Hosts," creating a marked effect upon the audience. The orchestra was thoroughly satisfactory, and Mr. Faull presided with much ability at the harmonium.

PONTEFRACT.—On Whit Tuesday, a performance of sacred music was given by the members of the Sheffield Choral Society, on the occasion of the opening of a new organ in the Primitive Methodist Chapel, Edward J. Lee, Esq., the conductor of the Society, most ably officiating, and the powers of the instrument (supplied by Messrs. Brindley and Foster) being displayed to the greatest possible advantage. The first part of the programme consisted of selections from the Messiah, the solos and choruses of which were rendered in a highly efficient manner. The second part comprised anthems by Whitfield, Kent, and Wesley; selections from Elijah, and Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer," the principal vocalists being Mrs. Lee, Mrs. Charlesworth, Mrs. House, Mrs. Hague, Miss Hydes, Messrs. Edgington, Hallows, Makin, Wilson, Hague, Wildgoose, Styring, and Gaunt. At the close of the entertainment, a vote of thanks was passed to the vocalists and their able conductor, and a hope expressed that opportunities would again be afforded of hearing similar entertainments by this Society.

PORT ELIZABETH, CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.—Mr. Newbatt's benefit concert, on the 5th April, attracted one of the largest audiences ever known in the Town Hall. The programme contained several choruses and glees, which were exceedingly well given. Amongst the solos mention must be made of "The Return," a song composed by Mr. Newbatt, and excellently sung, "The nightingale's trill," "The skipper and his boy," and "Marching along," all of which were admirably rendered and elicited much applause. The concert was in every respect thoroughly satisfactory.

RED HILL, SURREY.—A very successful concert, consisting of Romberg's Lay of the Bell, and a miscellaneous selection, was given at the Market Hall, on Thursday, the 9th ult., under the able conductorship of Mr. H. T. Pringuer. The band and chorus consisted of upwards of 70 performers. The solos were taken by Miss Trevanion and some amateur vocalists of the neighbourhood. The concert was in aid of the funds of the Working Men's Institute, and was under the immediate patronage of W. B. Waterlow, Esq., Mayor of Reigate.

SCARBOROUGH.—On Whit Monday the soirée of the Parish of St. Mary's took place in the Londesbro' Rooms. After tea the Vicar, Canon Bleint, made a speech relating to parish affairs, which was succeeded by a concert, the performers being a few amateurs, assisted by the members of the choirs of the three churches of St. Mary's Parish, conducted by Mr. John Naylor, Mus. Bac., organist of the parish church. The first part consisted entirely of selections from Haydn's Creation. Mrs. Neumans in "With verdure clad," and Master Hilton Turner in "The marvellous work," being especially commendable. The second part was secular, the three choirs giving several part-songs, and Mr. James Bland singing Lover's "Three Ages," with taste and feeling. — Sykes, Esq., proposed a vote of thanks to the ladies and gentlemen of the choir for their services, and his allusion to the event of Mr. Naylor, the conductor, having lately passed the examination of Mus. Doc., Oxon., was much applauded. The large hall was full.

SHEFFIELD.—On the 25th April, Miss Clara Linley gave a Pianoforte Recital in the Music Hall, Surrey-street. Her performance was marked by much intelligence; and in a programme which severely taxed her powers, she was highly successful. Beethoven's Sonata in D (Op. 28) being especially worthy of commendation. Mr. J. Peck lent valuable assistance on the violin, and Miss Pattie Hargreaves was warmly received in all her songs, one being enthusiastically redemanded.——THE Sheffield Choral Society gave its first miscellaneous concert on Monday, the 29th April, in the Bath Saloon, before a large audience. The part-music, consisting chiefly of a selection of Bishop's glees, was most efficiently rendered, especially "Merry boys, away," "Now by day's retiring lamp," and "Strike the lyre." The remainder of the programme consisted mostly of songs, trios, and duets, which were received with much applause. The principal singers were Mrs. House, Mrs. Charlesworth, Mrs. Hague, Miss Spoar, Messrs. Styring, Kay, Edgington, Makin, Taylor, Wilson, and Hague. The able director of the Society, Mr. E. J. Lee, most efficiently discharged the duties of conductor and accompanist.

TRURO.—A successful musical festival was held on the 2nd and 3rd ult., in aid of the funds of the Royal Cornwall Infirmary. The professional vocalists were Miss E. Spiller, Miss J. Elton, Mr. Rogers, and Mr. Winn. Principal violins—Messrs. Rice, Hemmings, and Baker; principal Cello, Mr. J. H. Nunn; Trumpet, Mr. Fly; Organist, Mr. W. S. Hoyte (All Saints', Margaret-street). The first evening (sacred) included a very perfect rendering of Rossini's Stabat Mater, followed by a selection from the principal Oratorios. All the solos were well-given, and the precision of the chorus called forth the highest praise from both audience and professionals. On the morning of the second day, Mr. Hoyte gave a Recital on the Concert Organ (a fine instrument by Messrs. Hill and Son, London), and showed his great facility and power in a very varied programme. In the evening a secular concert was given, the professional singers contributing some excellent songs, duets, quartets, &c., and the choir several operatic choruses and unaccompanied part-songs. Mr. H. G. Trembath, Mus. Bac., was the conductor on both evenings, and it is gratifying to record that the net profits of the series of concerts was rather over one hundred pounds.

TURNHAM GREEN.—A concert, for the benefit of Mr. Lawrence, the conductor of the Musical Society, was given in the National School on Monday, the 13th ult. Among the pieces deserving of notice were the duets "I would that my love" (encored) and "The Cousins" by the Misses Bleaden. In "Non è ver" and "The Cuckoo" Miss Julia Bleaden was highly successful, the latter song being most enthusiastically re-demanded. "The Valiant Knight" (sung by Mr. C. Lester), and three buffo songs by Mr. Broomfield, elicited much applause, and a Fantasia, played by the composer, Herr Ellerd, was most warmly received. Mr. Lawrence (who sang "Adelaide," and the duet, "The Moon has raised her lamp," with Mr. Lester) is deserving of considerable praise for the care he has taken to render the Society efficient.

WARRINGTON.—The Warrington Musical Society brought the season to a very successful close on Tuesday evening, the 30th April, when, without any aid from professionals, Barnby's Sacred Cantata, Rebekah, and Professor Sterndale Bennett's Pastoral, The May Queen, were performed. Mr. Barnby's Cantata appears to be a composition of remarkable power and beauty. The choruses, which are very effective, received every justice at the hands of the members, under the bâton of Dr. Hiles. The bass part, Eliezer, was very efficiently sung by a well-known Warrington amateur who possesses a powerful and flexible voice. The soprano part, Rebekah, was also very carefully rendered. The choral portion of The May Queen was given in a style which left little to be desired; and the solos were gone through in a manner which indicates that this department only requires assiduous cultivation to become one of the most successful features of the Society.

WESTON-SUPER-MARE.—On Thursday evening, the 16th ult., Mr. Arthur E. Dyer gave the last of the series of Popular Concerts in the Assembly Rooms, which were crowded in every part. The principal vocalists were Miss Rosalia Lanza, Mr. J. Norville, and Mr. W. Drayton, all of whom were highly effective in their solos, and elicited much applause. The instrumentalists were Miss Minnie Elwell, concertina (pupil of Mr. Dyer), Mr. A. W. Waite (violoncello), Mrs. Leonard Hayward and Mr. A. E. Dyer (pianoforte). The programme included a Trio by Haydn, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello. Mendelssohn's Sonata in B flat, for pianoforte and violoncello, and several instrumental and vocal pieces of a more popular character. The series of concerts, now concluded, have been thoroughly successful, and the classical compositions introduced have always been much appreciated.

WOOLWICH.—Miss Mascall's annual concert was given at the Town Hall on the 25th April, before a numerous audience. A feature in the performance was the introduction of the Piano Quatuor, a new instrument combining the effects of the piano, violin, organ, &c., the capabilities of which were well displayed in the course of the concert by M. Peltan. Miss Mascall was highly successful in the instrumental compositions which were set down for her, her execution of a piece of her own, "The streamlet and torrent," being especially admired. Several vocal solos were given by Miss Nellie Rice, Miss Day, Miss Geer, Messrs. G. Strangward, and D. Davies, all of which were well received. Miss Wheeler made a successful début as a pianist in an effective little piece, and afterwards joined Miss Day in a vocal duet. The concert was in every respect, thoroughly satisfactory.

The present publication has been undertaken with a view to supply a musical want long felt by amateurs and lovers of the organ, i.e., an edition of HANDEL'S CELEBRATED CHORUSES arranged for the organ with pedal obbligato, that shall be effective, combining all the salient parts of the score, and yet at the same time be within the reach of those performers who have not made the instrument their entire study. We have, it is true, many arrangements; some for "Organ or Pianoforte," others by our most eminent organists. The first belong to a past age; the second, in all cases, are only fit for professional performers, and require an amount of skill for their proper execution rarely attained by amateurs. In the present edition, the notation has been carefully studied so as to simplify the reading, whilst the pedals, in all cases of difficulty, have the assistance of the left hand of the performer. Many other points have been considered so as to render the arrangement fitted to the object it has in view—to supply an edition of HANDEL'S CHORUSES for the Organ expressly for the amateur.

THE NATURAL PRINCIPLES OF HARMONY, with an Appendix, containing numerous analyzed extracts from various classical compositions. By W. W. PARKINSON.

In this work many hitherto unexplained harmonic effects, together with the general laws of Harmony and Modulation, are orderly developed from first principles. The simplicity, unity, and universality of these natural laws of harmony, as exemplified in the analyzed extracts, form a remarkable contrast with the inconsistent and conflicting theories of the present schools.

SONGS WITHOUT WORDS.

By Henry C. Lunn.

It has often struck us, in listening to many of the modern ballads, what an excellent idea it would be to make "Songs without words" fulfil the literal meaning of their title by being applied to vocal music. We wish it to be distinctly understood that this feeling does not arise from any desire to underrate either the poet or the composer, but solely from the conviction that one shall not shine by the borrowed light of the other; for inasmuch as a man who cannot write verses has no right to gain notoriety for his rhymes through the genius of a musician, so a man who cannot write music should not be allowed to gain a factitious importance for his meaningless compositions through the genius of a poet. The application of the plan we propose would at once remedy the evil, for supposing both were in future to be published separately, poetry would merely be read, and music would merely be sung, and each must therefore be judged solely on its own merits. But although we all know that poetry can be read, it may be asked how is music to be sung without the vocalist uttering words? Well, happily this difficulty is met by the method universally employed in teaching singing. How often have we been delighted with those beautiful "solfeggios," one great charm of which is that they are not burdened with words. Certainly the vowel a, to which the composition may be sung, can scarcely be said to produce much effect on its own account; but then it makes no demand upon our attention; we are not obliged to listen to it; the music alone occupies our thoughts, and we are enabled to admire the beauty of the melody and the skill of the singer without troubling ourselves about the meaning of some nonsensical verses which the composer has taken as mere pegs to hang his notes upon. Of course we do not desire that the marriage of good music with good poetry shall not be in the highest degree encouraged: but it is obvious that we shall earn the thanks of all who are condemned to listen to what are called "drawing-room songs" by propounding a system which although thoroughly detrimental to the prospects of pretenders, will be unquestionably beneficial to those of artists. But innovators have of course a right to prove a valid reason for their reform; and before proceeding further with any details of our proposed plan, therefore, it will be interesting to glance at the reasons which have led to this lamentable state of things, and to endeavour to show how the manufacture of vocal music has degenerated into a mere trade.

When compositions were written for the love of art, instead of the love of gain, they appealed only to those few who, desirous of entering into the feelings of the author, duly fitted themselves for the task by an intellectual course of study. Fashion, however, which invariably degrades everything high and noble, gradually stept in and declared that every lady should "learn music," whether she possessed any aptitude for the subject or not. Then what was before an art became an accomplishment, and "music" was henceforth an item duly inserted in the prospectuses of boarding-schools. Pianofortes were as necessary in drawing-rooms as chairs and tables, and to ask the female members of a family whether they could play and sing was considered as great an insult as to enquire whether they could read and write. As it could scarcely be expected that pupils could now fit themselves for the music, it of course followed that the music must be fitted for the pupils; and compositions, both vocal and instrumental, were speedily written for the purpose of artfully concealing defects, so that great results could be achieved by the expenditure of a small amount of labour. In pianoforte music the right hand was trained (if training it could be called) at the expense of the left; so that in time the former obtained an undisputed sway, whilst the latter attended it at a respectful distance: sometimes indeed when its master was disporting itself over the key-board, the left hand was permitted to hum a little melody by itself; but if it interfered with its superior, or dared to set up on its own account, its tyrant would come down upon it at once and teach it to know its place. Vocal works, as a matter of course, underwent the same deteriorating change. Instead of expressing words by the aid of music, composers began to express their music by the aid of words. Mere tyros, presuming upon the definition given in instruction-books that "melody is a succession of single sounds," wrote down a number of vapid phrases, and galvanized them into an ephemeral existence by uniting them with verses which although utterly destitute of poetry, were skilfully constructed to effect that "touch of nature" which should make a whole audience "kin." Thus weak music and weak poetry became so strong when linked together that copies of works framed upon this model could hardly be printed fast enough to supply the public demand; and the announcement that "My mother's locket," or "Where is little sister gone?" would be sung at Manchester on one evening and at Leeds on the next was a proof that the titles alone were certain to ensure a sufficient number of sympathising listeners to demand an encore, especially when backed up by that powerful compact between vocalist and publisher known as the "Royalty system." Those who read the lives of the great composers, and see in their letters with what earnestness, and even devotion, they regard their art, cannot but feel surprise at the manner in which the mere song-makers approach their task, and with what a small amount of misgiving they launch their productions upon the world. When Beethoven forwarded a copy of his song, "Adelaide," to Matthison, he accompanied it with these words; "Indeed even now I send you 'Adelaide' with a feeling of timidity. You know yourself what changes the lapse of some years brings forth in an artist who continues to make progress; the greater the advances we make in art, the less are we satisfied with our works of an earlier date. My most ardent wish will be fulfilled if you are not dissatisfied with the manner in which I have set your heavenly 'Adelaide' to music, and are incited by it soon to compose a similar poem; and if you do not consider my request too indiscreet, I would ask you to send it to me forthwith, that I may exert all my energies to approach your lovely poetry in merit." Verily the "timidity" of great men contrasts strangely with the "confidence" of the small.

Having endeavoured to trace the causes which have gradually produced the decline of pure vocal works, we will now see how simple is the process employed in the manufacture of the compositions which have replaced them. In the first place, those subjects appealing to the domestic feelings are divided into several classes. The particular articles cherished by dear relatives, such as spectacles, arm-chairs, and books, afford excellent themes for vocal effusions. Here it is not found necessary to say very much about the objects themselves, the recurrence of the title of the song at the end of each verse being considered sufficient to produce the intended effect. For instance, "My father's easy-chair" is not peculiarly suggestive abstractedly, but by the time it has been heard eight or ten times it begins to assume a vast importance; and it is a question whether this unpretending piece of furniture will not draw tears from many listeners long before the conclusion of the song. The melody must of necessity be exceedingly simple, and the accompaniment such as even a child can play, the last verse being of course "più lento" to express more intensely the gradually fading powers of the occupant of the chair: indeed this portion of the song is usually overladen with marks indicative of intense emotion, on the principle adopted by the clergyman, who being somewhat young in his vocation, in various pathetic parts of his sermon was found to have written "cry here." Then we have a very large number of songs about "mother," a personage who acts as a sort of "Mrs. Harris" in the world of vocal music, being always dragged in as a foil to the principal character of the piece. "Mother, ne'er upbraid me," "Mother, don't look sad," "Mother, I'll forget him," "My eyes are dim with weeping, Mother," "He's sailing on the deep, my Mother," may be accepted as fair specimens of the manner in which this overworked relative is "sung at," as they say on the operatic stage, and who very kindly holds her tongue, in order that the song may not degenerate into a duet. But the domestic sympathies are, as a rule, most awakened by morbidly melancholy subjects; and this fact song-writers are so well aware of that where one composition is published relating to life, at least twenty are published relating to death: indeed so much have such songs increased of late years that, were we not thoroughly acquainted with the motive which stimulates their production, we might imagine them to be intended by their authors as wholesome sermons on the vanity of earthly joys, especially written to be preached in gaily lighted drawing-rooms, as seriously disposed persons distribute moral tracts in the midst of the excitement of fairs and races. Everybody accustomed to listen to these miserable effusions is now thoroughly aware that a child who has "gone to sleep" is one who has died; and of course the decease of this loved one is made additionally painful by various allusions to its beauty and attractiveness whilst living. The pathos is manufactured by different methods. Sometimes the child is lying at an open window, where the sun is streaming in, the air laden with the odour of innumerable flowers, proclaiming the evenings of early summer, and a robin is perhaps perched upon the bough of a tree close by. The parent watching over the invalid is told not to mourn when it's "gone;" and in the final verse the angels (the accompaniment of course in arpeggio) are introduced with an audacity on the part both of the poet and composer which, were it worthy of criticism, should be pronounced simply blasphemous. Sometimes, too, a mother is watching by the side of her slumbering child, whose father is said to be "looking down" upon it; or he is out on the sea, when, amidst the howling of the wind and the roaring of the thunder, a moan makes itself heard, and the minor key prepares the audience for the discovery of his body lying stretched upon the beach. Of course it need scarcely be said that the composer has but a slight task in setting all this to music; for, bad as the verses of these songs usually are, they tell their own tale; and although real artists may involuntarily recoil from such obvious methods of producing an effect, like a commonplace "sensation" scene in a melo-drama, the result with the majority may be calculated to a certainty. Love-songs are of course plentiful enough; but the morbid sentimentality of these productions entirely divests them of any attraction to those imbued with the spirit of real poetry. A lover, for instance, will long to be a flower, a bird, a butterfly—anything in fact but what nature has made him—or, with a bashful reverence for the object of his passion, he will "gaze upon her marble brow," or, "watch her tiny fingers play," or pursue some other idiotic method of convincing himself of the intensity of his affection. But when the hero of a song has been thoroughly jilted by his mistress, he invariably turns out the meekest creature in the world. He'll sneak into a village church to see her married to another; he'll place himself under her window, and addressing himself to her shadow on the blind, pray that her lot may be happy; or he will breathe out his forgiveness on a battle-field, "'midst the clang of warlike strife": in any case, he will take the utmost interest in her future welfare, and entirely repudiate the idea of the fine old poet, Wither, who not only says

> "If she be not made for me > What care I for whom she be,"

but backs up this shameful expression of apathy on the subject by verses which thoroughly prove that he is in earnest. There are arch little songs, too, especially intended, like the mottoes in crackers, to promote flirtation in drawing-rooms, and usually containing about the same amount of literary merit. Such titles as "I'm told I'm very pretty," "Just look in as you pass, Robin," "Never mind what somebody said," will sufficiently show the kind of production to which we allude, the aim of the author of course being to provide an article which can be sung by young ladies with the requisite amount of coquetry, without positively overstepping the line which separates it from impudence. Then songs which are written upon current events are as numerous as the events themselves. During a war we have the leave-takings of lovers who are ordered off at a moment's notice into the thick of the fight; mothers bewail the absence of their sons, who are preserving the honour of their country in a "far-off land"; and young wives become widows in the third verse, according to the rule we have already mentioned, that misery, in vocal music, pays better than happiness. The recent burst of loyalty in connection with the recovery of the Prince of Wales would be something to gladden the hearts of the advocates of a monarchy, were we not convinced, from experience, that a burst of anything else called for by the times would be equally enthusiastic and equally widely spread. We have heard, from good authority, that several of these compositions were actually forwarded to his Royal Highness, but presume that he was then so far convalescent that there could be no danger of a relapse. It will be necessary also to allude to the so-called "comic-songs," sung by the "great" and "inimitable" gentlemen whose portraits are to be seen on the title-pages, in costumes of all the colours of the rainbow. There is certainly very little originality about the tunes of any of these works; but many of them are catching, and have in them the elements of popularity. The words, however, seem as a rule to have been written to test the experiment how far the common sense of an audience can be insulted with impunity. Perhaps, however, the listener, being usually provided with refreshments, this fact may be presumed upon; and as a man may always make a fool of himself in an after-dinner speech, he may, we suppose, make an idiot of himself in an after-supper song. At all events, there can be no doubt that a constant supply of these productions is now kept up; for a recent advertisement of the "Great Vance's" new songs informs us that "The girl what I calls mine," and "Glitter," will rival his celebrated "Old Brown's daughter," and "Afternoon Crawl."

Many more instances might be given of the method adopted in the manufacture of the vocal music of the day; but enough has we think been said to justify us in proposing the reform which we mentioned at the commencement of our article. "Songs without words" would indeed be a severe test for fashionable composers; for as we have already hinted, they must challenge criticism as musicians, and not as mere arrangers of gushing or pathetic passages to express such conventional domestic sentiment as we have been describing. It is true that many worthy individuals would thus be thrown out of employment; but it would be the duty as well as the pleasure of the real lovers of music to help towards granting them a pension for life: indeed a College might even be founded by subscription where they should be well taken care of; and as a gentle punishment for their past offences to society, be condemned to listen to the songs they have inflicted upon others for the rest of their lives.

Since writing the above, we perceive that M. Gounod (who has latterly introduced so many startling innovations in the art) has partially initiated the very system we have advocated, at the Albert Hall. Curious indeed that two persons should almost simultaneously hit upon the same idea. His method of carrying it out, however, does not exactly agree with our own, for his vocalists sing with closed lips, the effect of which is extremely novel. Of course as the mouth is shut, the voice comes through the nose, a method which will involve an entirely new system of teaching, and save the trouble of compelling vocal pupils to study the articulation of words. Our notion of solfaing the songs and choruses might, however, we think, be occasionally used for variety, more especially as in pronouncing syllables the voice would be produced more freely. But we by no means desire to patent our invention; and should suggest that a conference be held on the subject, if possible at the Albert Hall, a building especially constructed to further the progress of art in this country. Here not only these novel propositions would receive the sanction and patronage of Royalty and fashion, but a thousand choristers are ready at any moment to do the bidding of their chief, without regard to their own feelings, and this is a great thing in a land where conservative notions in music are so pertinaciously clung to.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

During the past month we have had not only operas in English but an English opera at this establishment, Mr. G. A. Macfarren's "Robin Hood" (originally produced at Her Majesty's Theatre nearly twelve years ago) having been placed on the stage, with Miss Blanche Cole, Miss Palmer, Messrs. Nordblom, H. Corri, E. Connell, Marler, Tempest, and Cotte in the principal characters, a cast perhaps as strong as could be procured under the circumstances. All the music told with excellent effect upon the audience; and the applause proved that a few more experiments in this direction might be of greater benefit to the management than a perseverance in the system of performing those Italian works which are nightly presented by the greatest vocal artists at our two lyrical establishments. May we not now take courage to suggest that Mr. Macfarren's two charming operettas, "Jessy Lea" and "The Soldier's Legacy," should have a chance of being heard once more? All who remember these works at the Gallery of Illustration would be delighted to recall their many beauties, and strangers to the music would we are certain feel grateful for the opportunity of becoming acquainted with it.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

Madlle. Christine Nilsson, who made her first appearance since her return from America as the heroine in "La Traviata," has attracted numerous audiences at this establishment during the past month, her Margherita, in Gounod's "Faust," being unquestionably her most effective impersonation, although perhaps a certain amount of frigidity, which admirers of Goethe can scarcely associate with the poet's ideal peasant girl, is still observable. Signor Campanini has thoroughly established himself as the greatest operatic tenor of the day, his Manrico, in "Il Trovatore," having excited the most enthusiastic applause of the audience throughout; and mention must also be made of the rapid advances in public estimation achieved by Signor Rota, who, as the Conte di Luna, in "Il Trovatore," and Mephistopheles, in "Faust," proved himself a conscientious and highly valuable artist. Of Madlle. Carlotta Grossi, who made her début as Marguerite de Valois, in "Les Huguenots," we may also speak in terms of high praise. She has a fine voice, of extensive compass, and in the florid music of the second act made a favourable impression upon her audience, which we trust will be confirmed by her future performances.

The production of Cherubini's Opera, "Les Deux Journées," under the title of "Le Due Giornate," again exemplified the fact that, in spite of the much vaunted increase of love for good music amongst the people, the lessee of a lyrical establishment must seek success through singers, and not through composers; for although it was well known that this Opera contains some of Cherubini's best writing, there is but little individual display for the vocalists, and the consequence was that the house was half empty. It must be presumed, however, that those who did come were attracted by legitimate means, and rich indeed must have been their reward. Of course the necessity of translating the French words, which inspired the composer, into Italian, had a serious effect upon the success of the work; but Fashion has decreed that this soft southern language is the only one suitable for ladies and gentlemen to listen to at the Opera, and the few dissentients from this theory must therefore patiently wait their time. "Les Deux Journées" (we prefer to call it by its true name) is not written for the many, and therefore can it never become popular until the many can appreciate true art. To linger upon the excessive beauties of the Opera would be here impossible; it must suffice to say that it is essentially dramatic throughout; and that nothing is laid out to produce effect wherever it would interfere with the symmetry of the general design. The concerted pieces are so solid and masterly in construction as to fall strangely upon the ear accustomed to the ad captandum style of the modern Italian school; and the solos, although demanding the highest powers of vocalization, are not such as operatic "stars" would revel in. The plot, turning upon the devices employed by a Water-carrier to aid the escape of a proscribed nobleman and his wife, is extremely simple, but well suited for music; and although the translation of the libretto has divested it of much of the vitality existing in the original version, it is full of interest. Madlle. Titiens was excellent in the important character of Constance, singing the whole of the music assigned to her with a true appreciation of its worth, and Madlle. Marie Roze, in the small part of Marceline, was also thoroughly efficient. Signor Agnesi gave a very satisfactory version of Michael (the Water-carrier) one of the great merits of his performance being the truthful manner in which he identified himself with the character, never allowing his part to become obtrusive in the scenes where others were as intimately concerned with the action of the story. Signor Vizzani would have been more effective had he sung better in tune; but for Signor Foli (first officer) and Signor Zoboli (the father of Michael) we have nothing but praise. The recitatives, written by Sir Michael Costa, the accompaniments cleverly founded upon Cherubini's own themes, were excellent. The overture and rich orchestration throughout the Opera came out admirably; but we wish that the instruments, when accompanying voices, could be held a little more in subjection.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The revival of "Der Freischütz," at this establishment must be noticed for two reasons. In the first place, Madame Pauline Lucca achieved a success in the trying part of Agata, which will materially add to her already high reputation; for even her warmest admirers had, we think, scarcely given her credit for the possession of so much vocal and dramatic power as she manifested throughout the Opera, the great scena, known to the concert-going public as "Softly sighs," especially, eliciting a perfect storm of applause. In the second place, the interpolation of a dance to the music of Weber's "Invitation à la Valse," after the entr'acte, introducing the melody of the Huntsmen's chorus, is an innovation which cannot be tolerated. We know that vocalists will drag an air from one Opera into another, or that they will substitute a flimsy waltz tune for the finale which the composer has written; but if in addition to these artistic crimes, a pianoforte piece is to be scored and danced to by the corps de ballet, we may probably in time have a buffo song introduced as a relief to the serious portions of a work; and in the interest of pure art, therefore, such practices cannot be too strongly condemned.

Prince Poniatowski's new Opera "Gelmina," produced on the 4th ult., proved how thoroughly a failure can be made to appear like a success. Applause was plentiful, the stage was strewn with bouquets, vocalists and composer were constantly summoned before the curtain, and yet at the conclusion everybody knew that the work could scarcely keep the stage for even a few weeks. In truth the music has hardly a redeeming point, for the melodious portions are vulgar, and those intended to be intensely dramatic are simply heavy. The instrumentation is just that which the "arranger" to a theatre would write down to order, caring little for fame, and content if he had done his work satisfactorily. There is no overture; but after the curtain has risen, we have a long introduction in which the commonest effects are introduced, intended, we presume, to represent the dawn of day. Feeble as it is, the first act is unquestionably the best, for there is a coquettish little song, given to perfection by Madame Patti, which was enthusiastically redemanded, and the heavy business not having commenced, the composer is, we think, heard at his best. The dreariness accumulates as the Opera advances, and where the hero goes mad, not even the excellent singing of Signor Naudin could awaken anything like interest in the music. The series of tragic incidents, culminating in the death of Gelmina, by the hands of her lover (who is so insane as to stab her in mistake for the libertine Adriano), would scarcely perhaps inspire a greater man than the composer of this work with any high or noble thoughts, but an artist must be judged by his choice of subject as well as by his treatment of it; and there can be no doubt that long before the curtain fell, the patience of the audience was fairly exhausted. It would be almost impossible to render adequate justice to the magnificent singing and acting of Madame Patti. As the volatile and thoughtless peasant girl in the first act, and as the victim of the persecution of the Count in the later portion of the Opera, she was equally great, her vocalisation being perhaps more absolutely perfect than ever. If, indeed, her character had been more prominent, or the others less so, it is possible that the work might live, in spite of its obvious weakness, but the music of Adriano, Frate Giovanni, Matteo and Silvio, although all these parts were finely sung by Signori Cotogni, Bagagiolo, Tagliafico, and Naudin, effectively marred the efforts of Madame Patti, and the result could not be difficult to predict before the Opera was half over. We know nothing of Prince Poniatowski. We hear that he is a near relation of the last King of Poland, and that he is now an exile in London employing himself in giving lessons in music. If his lessons are worth anything, we heartily wish him success; but when he comes before the public as a composer of a grand Opera he invades a domain of art into which, unfortunately, too many pretenders have already straggled, and he must not be surprised therefore if he is firmly but courteously reminded that he is a trespasser. Beyond the production of this new Opera, we have but little to notice at this establishment during the past month. A word of welcome, however, must be accorded to Madame Parepa-Rosa, who, although not announced in the prospectus of the season, has appeared as Donna Anna, in "Don Giovanni," and shown us how the exquisite music assigned to that character should be sung. During her long absence in the United States she seems to have gained in all the powers requisite for a great lyric artist; and supposing a National Opera to be at all possible in this country her aid in the cause would be invaluable.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

THE fifth concert of the season was given on the 27th May, the principal orchestral works being Haydn's melodious Symphony, in C minor (No. 5 of the set written for Salomon), and Schumann's Symphony, in C, which, despite peculiarities inherent to the manner of its composer, contains so many attractive qualities as to make its performance welcome, at least to a large majority of the audience. An interesting feature in the concert was Mr. W. G. Cusins's pianoforte Concerto, in A minor, which was so finely played by Madame Goddard as to make us regret that it was the last time she would be heard before her return from America. This work, which was first performed by its composer about six years ago, is more than promising: it is full of good, solid writing, the Romanza, especially, eliciting deserved applause, not only for the winning nature of its subject, but for the artistic manner in which it is treated, and the extreme excellence of the orchestration with which it is accompanied. Mr. Santley experienced a most enthusiastic reception, and gave Handel's air "Revenge! Timotheus cries," with fine effect, Madlle. Marimon also delighting the lovers of pure vocalisation by her rendering of the Cavatina, "Come per me sereno," from "La Sonnambula." At the sixth concert, on the 10th ult., a novelty in the programme was the Concerto of Liszt, in E flat (No. 1), which was interpreted by the Danish pianist, Mr. Frits Hartvigson, in a style thoroughly sympathetic with the character of the music. Nothing better could have been selected to bring out, by comparison, the wondrous beauty of form and colour in Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony and Mozart's "Jupiter," than the eccentric work of the Abbé Liszt, and so indeed thought the audience, for seldom have these compositions been received with warmer demonstrations of approval, and rarely have they been interpreted with more care and finish. Benedict's MS. overture to the "Tempest" (which pleased so much that the composer was called for), and Cherubini's "Faniska" overture were the other orchestral pieces. Madlle. Colombo supplied the place of Madlle. Marie Roze (who was indisposed), and Signor Vizzani sang his best, although he sang badly; but the grand works contained in the instrumental programme might have crushed even more competent vocalists. Mr. W. G. Cusins conducted with his accustomed judgment, and has a right to be congratulated on the successful manner in which the two Symphonies were rendered.

MR. HENRY HOLMES'S concert, which took place on the 22nd May, at the Hanover Square Rooms, attracted a large number of lovers of chamber-music; and although perhaps it may be mentioned, as a slight objection, that the programme contained too many of the concert-giver's own compositions, there were also several others of the highest interest. Beethoven's Sonata, in D major (No. 1, Op. 12), for pianoforte and violin (played to perfection by Miss Agnes Zimmermann and Mr. Holmes), Bach's Concerto, in C minor, for two pianofortes, with string quartet accompaniment (equally well rendered by Miss Agnes Zimmermann and M. Alexander Billet), and Brahm's Sestet, in B flat (Op. 18), for two violins, two violas, and two violoncellos, elicited warm and deserved applause. Mr. Holmes's performance was as usual an important feature in the selection, a Nocturne by Alfred Holmes, being especially admired. The bénéficiare was assisted in the instrumental department, in addition to the pianists already named, by Messrs. Folkes (violin), Burnett and W. H. Hann (violas), and Ould and Signor Pezze (violoncellos). We must also mention that Mr. Silas performed with much effect two pianoforte solos; and some graceful songs by Mr. Henry Holmes were contributed by Miss Ellen Horne, Miss Edith Wynne, and Miss Marion Severn.

AT the third concert of the Welsh Choral Union on the 3rd ult., Handel's "Acis and Galatea" was performed, the solo parts being sustained by Miss Annie Edmonds, Madame Rebecca Jewell, Mr. W. H. Cummings, and Mr. Lewis Thomas. The choir in the trying choruses of the Serenata was severely tested; but on the whole the members have a right to congratulate themselves upon the result. During the evening solos were most successfully given by Mr. Brinley Richards (pianoforte), and Mr. John Thomas (harp); and mention must be made of an effective part-song by the conductor (Mr. John Thomas) called "The Corsair." Miss Edith Wynne was unfortunately prevented by indisposition from appearing.

A MUSICAL performance of the pupils of the London Society for Teaching the Blind to Read was given at the Institution, Upper Avenue Road, Regent's Park, on the 14th ult., under the able direction of Mr. Edwin Barnes, Professor of Music at the Society's Schools. The chair was to have been occupied on the occasion by Robert R. Torrens, Esq., M.P., but he was unfortunately called away to a morning sitting at the House of Commons. The programme was, as usual, most carefully selected, several pieces from "St. Paul" being contained in the first part; and the second comprising two pianoforte solos, part-songs, &c. The concert was well attended.

THE Loan Exhibition of Ancient Musical Instruments, recently opened at the South Kensington Museum, is one of extreme interest. Here are displayed to view stringed instruments of great value, including several Cremona violins from the Gillott collection; but as one of these is so like another to the general public, there can be little doubt that popular curiosity will be chiefly awakened by the excellent specimens of virginals, harpsichords, spinets, harps, antique organs, sackbuts, &c., which everybody has read about, but few have seen. Amongst the less civilized may be mentioned the war-drum of the King of Ashanti, and many rude stringed instruments from Japan, China, Otaheite and New Zealand. The Queen, the Duke of Edinburgh, the Duke of Cambridge, and Lord Warwick are amongst the contributors to this collection; and the careful manner in which the objects are catalogued materially adds to the attraction of the exhibition.

MISS MACLEAN, a pupil of Sir W. Sterndale Bennett, gave a concert on the 30th May, at the Hanover Square Rooms, before a large audience. We have already expressed a favourable opinion upon Miss Maclean's talents as an exponent of the highest classical music, on the occasion of a private gathering of her friends some months ago; and our predictions of her success in the concert-room were fully realised on her first appearance in public. Her playing, especially in Beethoven's Sonata, No. 3, Op. 2, and in one of Chopin's solos, was marked by much grace, refinement and executive power, the last named piece being unanimously encored. Sir Sterndale Bennett's Chamber Trio, in A, was also included in the programme, the excessive beauties of which were admirably displayed by the concert-giver, Herr Straus, and Mr. Horatio Chipp. The vocalists were Miss Banks, Miss Chipp, Madame Sauerbrey, Mr. W. H. Cummings, Mr. Lewis Thomas, and Mr. Maybrick. Mr. F. Stanislaus and Mr. Walter Fitton were the conductors. The profits of the concert are to be given to the Royal Scottish Hospital.

THE "Infant Pianistes," Agnes and Violet Molyneux, ("aged seven and nine") gave a concert at St. George's Hall on the 18th ult., when their powers were tested in music by no means suited to cultivate either their executive or intellectual progress in the art. A showy duet for two pianofortes, on subjects from "L'Elisir d'Amore," and a solo Fantasia from "Fra Diavolo" were played with much fluency; and having no music before them, their facility of performing from memory increased the applause which was plentifully showered upon them: indeed their success was so decided that if little heads can be turned by the clapping of hands and the throwing of bouquets, these children may be considered spoiled for anything better than they can now exhibit with their tiny fingers and unripe taste. For ourselves, we would infinitely prefer to have seen them playing in an open field under the sunlight, than in a close hall under the gaslight; but if their talents are to be turned to account in public, we should recommend that their fingers be strengthened by a vigorous practice of exercises, and their mind trained by a careful study of those works which shadow forth the forms of the highest style of classical writing.

MR. CHARLES GARDNER'S annual morning concert was given at the Hanover Square Rooms on the 8th ult., when a very excellent programme was provided. The feature of the concert was of course the bénéficiare's pianoforte performance, which was listened to with much interest by a thoroughly appreciative audience. His variety of style was well tested in Field's Rondo, in E (known as "12 o'clock"), a Minuet and Toccata by Sir W. Sterndale Bennett, and two pieces by Stephen Heller, all of which elicited warm and deserved applause. He was ably assisted in the instrumental department by Mr. H. Holmes (violin), M. Zerbini (viola), M. Paque (violoncello), and Mr. Richard Blagrove (concertina). Miss Robertine Henderson (who is too seldom heard in the concert-room) gave with unaffected expression a new song by Mr. Charles Gardner, called "As it fell upon a day," and was much applauded in another novelty by M. Gounod, entitled "Shadows of the evening hours." Two songs by the concert-giver were also contributed by Mr. W. H. Cummings. The other vocalists were Miss Alice Fairman and Madlle. Anna Regan. We must not omit to mention the performance of an effective and well written Quintet (for violin, concertina, viola, violoncello, and pianoforte) by Mr. Silas, and Walter Macfarren's Two Romances, excellently played by Mr. H. Holmes.

The members of the City Vocal Union gave their third concert on Monday evening the 27th May, at the room in Friar-street, under the conduct of Mr. George Wells. The programme comprised both sacred and secular music. A quartett, "Spring is coming," composed by Mr. T. M. Clark, the accompanist to the Society, met with a very good reception. The honour of a double encore was awarded to Messrs. Morgan, Lewsey, and Hewson for their capital rendering of the glee, "Dame Durden," and Messrs. Rowe and Hewson gained much applause for their solos. The concert was, on the whole, a decided success, and furnished ample evidence of the progress made by the choir.

An organ recital and sacred concert was given at S. Andrew's Church, Shepherd's Bush, in aid of the Organ Fund, on the 30th May. Mr. Hardinge, late of Exeter Cathedral, presided at the organ and was assisted by Miss Ellen Glanville, Miss Adam, Miss E. Blanche, Messrs. H. Peel, Hewitt, W. H. Smith, and Spittle. Mr. Hardinge gave Mozart's march from "Die Zauberflöte," Handel's Concerto in F, Introduction and Fugue (J. S. Bach), and movement, in G minor (Spohr), all with much taste and effect. Miss Ellen Glanville was very successful in "With verdure clad," "Let the bright Seraphim," and "Jerusalem." Miss Blanche (a good contralto) sang "O rest in the Lord," and "The Evening Prayer" (Eli), with good expression, and Mr. Hewitt's "Total eclipse" was much admired. Mr. W. H. Smith, to whom the arrangements of the concert are due, gave with excellent effect "Comfort ye" and "Every valley," "Waft her angels" and "In native worth," and Mr. Spittle contributed the songs "Arm, arm, ye brave," and "Why do the nations."

The concert of Mr. Brinley Richards, which took place at the Hanover Square Rooms on the 13th ult, attracted a large and fashionable audience. The programme contained, as usual, a large proportion of music, either of Welsh origin or in some manner connected with the Principality, and also a number of compositions by the concert-giver. Mr. Richards's pianoforte solos were Beethoven's Sonata in A flat (Op. 26); Sir Sterndale Bennett's graceful little sketch, "The Lake," Handel's "Gigue," in F sharp minor (the subject of which is almost identical with the Welsh air "The rising of the sun."), Mendelssohn's Lied in A (usually known as the "Hunting song"), and three of his own pieces "Andante Pastorale," "Tarantella," and the "Recollections of Wales," in all of which he exhibited his usual musicianlike feeling and fluency of execution. Amongst the concert-giver's vocal works, a part-song, "The bridal of the birds," given for the first time, and charmingly sung by some of the lady students of the Royal Academy of Music, achieved a well-merited success, and was repeated by general desire. This bright and effective little composition is destined, we believe, to obtain a wide popularity; and it is a pleasure to record that it thoroughly deserves it. The Welsh Choral Union lent valuable assistance in two choruses from John Thomas's collection, and also in the choral portions of Mr. Richards's songs, "In the hour of my distress" (most expressively sung by Miss Edith Wynne), "The Cambrian War Song" (finely delivered by Mr. Lewis Thomas), and "God bless the Prince of Wales" (in the solo part of which Miss Wynne created a marked impression); and at the conclusion of the concert joined the students of the Royal Academy of Music in the National Anthem. The solo vocalists, in addition to those already named, were Miss Annie Edmonds, Miss Marion Severn, and Mr. Vernon Rigby. Mr. John Thomas played in excellent style Parish Alvars's harp solo, "Danse des Fées," and also performed (with Mr. Richards) his duet, for harp and pianoforte, "Scenes of Childhood." The conductors were Signor Randegger, Mr. John Thomas, and Mr. H. R. Eyers.

The concert of the St. Paul's Choral Society (to promote the election of a candidate to the Royal Hospital for Incurables) was given on Thursday, the 6th ult., in Myddelton Hall, Islington. The performance commenced with Pinsuti's "Spring song," admirably rendered and much applauded, followed by "I heard a voice," by Mr. W. A. Howells, who in this and other performances throughout the evening evinced considerable talent. Two trios, "The Hawthorn in the glade," and "Le Sol," were well sung by Madame Marie Dolby, Mr. Howells and Mr. J. L. Wadmore, and encored. Madame Dolby was highly successful in Meyerbeer's "Roberto tu che adoro," and "If to thy heart I were as near," both being re-demanded. Mr. Wadmore was also warmly applauded in the aria "Sorgete," and Cavatina, "None can fly my law supreme." Two pianoforte solos "Andante and Rondo Capriccioso," and "The Nightingale and Zephyr," were given with much brilliancy by the conductor, Mr. Shinn. The part-songs by the Society, were received with marked approval, and the concert concluded with the National Anthem.

A new Operetta, composed by Mr. N. Mori, entitled "Patty, or the Shipwright's Love," was performed at the Bijou Theatre, Bayswater, on Thursday, the 6th ult. Miss Grace Delafield, sustained the principal character of Patty, with much success, and the other parts were well represented by Miss Fane, Messrs. Gordon, Powell, Morgan, and Gill. The chorus, selected chiefly from the members of the Greville Choral Society (under the conductorship of Mr. E. Sharp), added considerably to the effect of the Opera. Miss Frost (piano), and Mr. Birch (harmonium) accompanied with much skill.

On Tuesday, the 18th ult., the Royal Osborne Good Templar Handbell Ringers gave a very clever performance at the Wesleyan Chapel, Church Street, Spitalfields. The "Westminster Chimes," March from "Norma," and "Village Bells" (introducing the well known tunes "Houghton" and "Spanish chant") called forth the warm applause of the audience. The Rev. R. Culley presided, and spoke in the highest terms of the talent of the ringers, especially complimenting their leader, Mr. Skingsley, upon the efficient manner in which the music had been performed. It transpired during the evening that three of the five campanologists have had the distinguished honour of ringing, by special command, before the Queen, at Osborne House, and they all are members of an order of Temperance workers called "Good Templars."

Miss Purdy gave her second annual morning concert at the Hanover Square Rooms on the 15th ult., when she was assisted in the vocal department by Madame Florence Lancia, Miss Banks, Messrs. Trelawney Cobham and Chaplin Henry, Signori Ciabatta and Caravoglia, and in the instrumental by Mr. H. Holmes (violin), M. Paque (violoncello) and Herr Ganz (pianoforte). Miss Purdy's songs were received with the warmest marks of approbation, and the concert was in every respect highly satisfactory. There was a numerous attendance. The accompanists were Signor Vera and Mr. Frank Braine.

The monthly private concert of the St. George's Glee Union, given on the 7th ult., at the Pimlico Rooms, was one of the most attractive of the season. The music of "Macbeth" was carefully rendered, Miss Horder and Mr. Thurley Beale sustaining the principal parts with much effect, and eliciting the warmest applause. Solos were also contributed by the above-mentioned vocalists, Miss Janet King, Miss Clara Burley, and Mr. Stringer, all of whom acquitted themselves with infinite credit. The madrigal, "Awake, sweet love," and "The Tar's Song," were well given, under the able conductorship of Mr. Garside; and Signor Ferraris played a Fantasia on the Melodium and Pianoforte, and Miss Shepherd a solo on the Pianoforte in excellent style. Mr. E. Paine's judicious accompaniments materially aided the success of the concert.

Mr. John Thomas gave a morning concert at the residence of the Marquis of Downshire, Belgrave Square, on the 20th ult., which attracted a large and fashionable audience. The harp performance of the concert-giver was of course the most interesting portion of the programme; and we need hardly say that all his solos—especially his four characteristic pieces and Welsh melodies—were played with that refinement and executive accuracy for which he has so long been eminent, and that he gave as much effect to Beethoven's "Moonlight Sonata" as any harpist could give to a pianoforte work. Selections from Mr. Thomas's clever dramatic Cantata, "Llewelyn" (the principal parts being sustained by Miss Edith Wynne, Mr. W. H. Cummings and Mr. Lewis Thomas), elicited warm applause. The concert was assisted by other celebrated vocalists, and (violin), and Mr. W. G. Cusins (pianoforte), contributed solos with much success.

THE following letter, written to the Times newspaper, will, we are certain, call forth the sincerest sympathy from all our musical readers.

"SIR,—Travellers should, I think, be warned in the present state of the roads here, against taking a carriage from Zermatt to this place. A frightful accident occurred yesterday, when a small carriage, containing three persons was precipitated into a rocky torrent.

"As one of those unfortunate persons—I might almost say fortunate, in a merciful preservation from death—I venture to dictate these few lines to you while lying helpless here with an unset broken leg and other injuries.

I remain, Sir, your obedient servant,
H. S. OAKELEY, Prof. of Music, Univ., Edinburgh.
Grand Hotel, St. Nicolas, Zermatt Valley,
Switzerland, June 12th."

AT the approaching Norwich Festival an entirely new Cantata, called "Outward Bound," composed by Mr. G. A. Macfarren, the words by Mr. John Oxenford, will be produced. Arthur Sullivan's "Te Deum," composed for the Crystal Palace Thanksgiving Festival, and Sir Julius Benedict's Oratorio, "St. Peter," are also included in the programme.

MADLLE. CHRISTINE NILSSON'S morning concert, at St. James's Hall, on the 24th ult., was fully and fashionably attended. The songs given by Madlle. Nilsson were admirably calculated to display her voice and style, "Ah! fors' è lui" (from "La Traviata") and "Let the bright Seraphim" (with Mr. T. Harper's matchless trumpet obbligato) forming as good tests for the power of interpreting both secular and sacred music as could have been selected. A new Romance, composed by the Baroness Willy de Rothschild, and some highly characteristic Swedish melodies were also given by Madlle. Nilsson and received with the warmest applause. The other vocalists were Madame Patey, Signor Brignoli (who sang in consequence of the absence of Mr. Sims Reeves), and Mr. Santley. The instrumentalists were Madame Alice Mangold-Diehl (pianoforte), Madame Norman-Neruda (violin), and Mr. Charles Le Jeune (organ).

MACMILLAN AND CO.

Goethe and Mendelssohn (1821—1831). Translated, with additions, from the German of Dr. Karl Mendelssohn-Bartholdy, by M. E. von Glehn.

THE detached portions of Mendelssohn's career, written from time to time by his numerous admirers in the land of his birth, will we think form a more interesting biography of the composer than we should have possessed had the materials been collected for a single publication which should take its place in musical libraries as the "Life of Mendelssohn." The delightful letters from Italy and Switzerland, penned by the young and enthusiastic artist whilst the scenes which he describes were fresh upon his memory, the communications to various persons on subjects connected with music and musicians, afterwards generously given to the world by those who, seeing the interest excited by the previous volume, resolved that the valuable treasures which they alone possessed should be thrown open for public inspection, and the "Recollections" and "Reminiscences" contributed by friends whose intimacy with the composer was a sufficient guarantee of the truthfulness of their descriptions, comprise a collection which every student must prize in the highest degree; for in these works is exhibited the personality of an artist who exercised almost as potent a charm over those with whom he associated as he does over others who only know him through his music.

The volume now before us stands alone amongst the works connected with Mendelssohn already published, for we have here not only the boy-life of the composer, but a minute account of that happy time spent with Goethe, which had so much influence in deepening the future composer's love for all that was high and noble in art. "It is an episode of Weimar's golden days," writes Karl Mendelssohn in his Preface "old age and fame hand in hand with youth in its aspiring efforts; the aged poet fondling the curls of the little musician, and calling to him in playful and endearing accents "to make a little noise for him, and awaken the winged spirits that have so long lain slumbering." Deeply interesting is it to read of the glowing [illegible] Mendelssohn family as to the probable effect of the young Felix's interview with the great poet of Germany. "Just fancy" says his mother, writing to her sister-in-law, Henriette Mendelssohn, in Paris, "that the little wretch is to have the good luck of going to Weimar with Zelter for a short time. He wants to show him to Goethe, and is to take him there next week, after they have been to the exhibition of Schadow's picture of Luther at Wittenberg." Numerous, of course, were the instructions as to how the child was to behave in the presence of so important a personage. "Keep your wits about you," writes his father. Every time I write to you, my dear boy, I shall remind you to keep a strict watch over yourself; to sit properly and behave nicely, especially at dinner; to speak distinctly and suitably, and try as much as possible to express yourself to the point." Whether the effect of these parental directions vanished as the musician and poet became more intimately acquainted we cannot say; but certainly the details of his daily life during his stay with Goethe—especially where he is described as chasing the young ladies round the room, and blowing the curls of one of them with a pair of bellows—seem to prove that it was scarcely necessary for him to distress himself as to whether he was "sitting properly," or "behaving nicely," at dinner. Goethe's admiration of the gifted young musician amounted almost to a worship. "Every afternoon," says Felix, in a letter, "Goethe opens the Streicher piano with these words, 'I have not heard you at all to-day, so you must make a little noise for me.' Then he sits down by me, and when I have finished (generally improvising), I beg for a kiss, or else I take one." The poet cared but little for ordinary music; and it was evident that the fascination of Felix's performance was such as totally to unfit him for playing, which before his acquaintance with him he might at least have endured. In a letter to Zelter, he writes, "Say something nice to Felix from me, and also to his parents. Since your departure my piano remains dumb; a single attempt to awaken it almost turned out a failure." Perhaps no composer ever approached a subject with greater reverence than did Mendelssohn in setting Goethe's "Walpurgisnacht." On leaving Vienna he had begun to work at it, and it was finished during his Italian journey. Goethe was delighted on hearing that his young friend had undertaken what his master Zelter had attempted in vain; and no doubt the letter he wrote to Mendelssohn describing the principles upon which the poem is based, furnished the composer with additional proof of the interest he had awakened by his resolution to give a musical colouring to the work. One of the great charms of this book is that it makes us acquainted, for the first time, with Goethe's fondness for music. There is but little record of the poet's especial love for the science in any previous publication; but here we have his own words in proof of the delight he invariably experienced in listening to the interpretation of the finest compositions, at least under the fingers of Mendelssohn. Writing of Felix to Zelter, he says, "His coming did me a great deal of good, for my feelings about music are unchanged; I hear it with pleasure, interest, and reflection; I love its history, for who can understand any subject without thoroughly initiating himself into its history and progress?"

We can scarcely refrain from quoting more largely from this highly attractive volume; for even after the conclusion of that portion of it which relates to Goethe, we have some letters of Mendelssohn which will be read with the utmost pleasure, one of which, descriptive of a storm in the Bernese Oberland, is certainly the most graphic we have seen in any published collection. In an Appendix are several communications from the composer of later date, contributed by Madame Preusser, Sir William Sterndale Bennett, Mr. Macfarren, Mr. Novello, and others to whom they were addressed, many of which relate to matters of the utmost interest. The book is rendered additionally valuable by a frontispiece portrait of the composer in his twelfth year, and another representing the boy seated at the pianoforte, from a sketch taken about the year 1820.

NOVELLO, EWER AND CO.

A Service for the Holy Communion, in the key of B flat. By B. Agutter, Mus. B., of Exeter College, Oxford.

ALL those texts which, in the Book of Common Prayer, are ordered to be sung during the office of Holy Communion, and several which are not, are set to music in this fully comprehensive Service. Thus,—besides music for the Kyrie, the Credo, the Sanctus, and the Gloria in excelsis,—there is also a setting of the Gloria Tibi, the Gratias, and even the Alleluia; of the Sursum Corda; of the Benedictus; of the Agnus Dei; and of the Pater Noster. The style of the whole is decidedly modern, but totally free from the extremely high colouring which disfigures some of the Church music of the present day. Even in the harmony to the Plain Song for the Sursum Corda, which is given in addition to an original setting of the text, there is no assumption of the antique, for, at the close, a second inversion of the subdominant chord precedes the final tonic as an appoggiatura,—one of the devices peculiar to later times,—and the entire character is as free as it is pure.

The expressive melody to the Kyrie is assigned to the soprano for the first three responses, is given to the tenor with a different harmony for the next three, and to all the choir in octaves with an independent organ part for the three following, and the original form is resumed for the tenth response, to be extended at the change of words.

In the Credo, the great difficulty is met with success, of giving a fair declamation of the text with considerable expression, and not repeating a word. Composers for the English Church are cruelly fettered in comparison with those who write for the Roman Service, in being for the most part precluded from the development of a musical idea, from the giving expansion to their thoughts, by the general requirement that the words be but once uttered; and he is indeed to be praised, who can represent the subject, and can frame a clear musical design, under this restriction. The matter to which are set forth the attributes of Our Lord, recurs pertinently at the description of the third person of the Trinity; by such artifices as this is music made to illustrate powerfully the text, reflecting one passage upon another, and thus enforcing both.

The Sanctus is set, according to the terms of the exhortation, which invite the communicants to join "with Angels and Archangels, and with all the company of heaven," in their everlasting song of praise, to a loud exulting strain. The choice is difficult between the reading thus implied if not demanded, and that which might better render the feelings of the people, chastened and softened as these must be by the ceremony and its mysteries. Mr. Agutter has made his selection upon high authority, and there are many occasions to which it will be the more appropriate.

On the contrary, he closes the Benedictus by setting the words "Hosanna in the highest" to be sung in a whisper. The text is an interpolation, for which, of course, the musician is irresponsible; but surely, if they require, who insert in this place the triumphant passage from St. Matthew's Gospel, a piece of subdued character, they should furnish the composer with words better suited to such treatment.

The best piece in the Service is, to our thinking, the Agnus. This is a soprano solo of some extent, interspersed with choral phrases to the "Miserere" and the "Dona." The melody is tender, and its expression is intensified at each repetition by skilful variety of accompaniment. Here, the softness of the music is as fitting to the sentiment of the words as it may be to the feelings of the auditory.

The Lord's Prayer is a mixture of chanting and rhythmical song, the latter beginning with the glorification. It is not now to discuss the propriety of such hybrid composition; if ever it be acceptable, the example before us claims to be well received.

This Service shows the church of St. Peter, Streatham, to be fortunate in its Præcentor and Organist, which offices are filled by the author; and Dr. Stainer is honoured in the dedication of so meritorious a work.

Just Judge of Heaven (Psalm 43). Set to music for contralto solo and chorus, by G. M. Garrett, Mus. D.

Dr. Garrett here presents us with an admirable specimen of musicianship. Had he done no more than this his professional reputation might have been enhanced and nothing more. Happily, however, he has done more—much more—and the musical public are gainers by the acquisition of a Cantata imbued with much charm of both melody and harmony. It would hardly be saying too much to state that what Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer" is to the solo soprano, this Psalm is to the contralto—so thoroughly genial and beautiful is the music. Whilst compositions like these are adopted as a means of worship in our cathedrals, we need never fear that the work of development and reform, so lately and so vigorously begun, will terminate, until all music (whether it be old or new) which is unworthy shall have been utterly swept out of the Sanctuary.

God so loved the world. Anthem, by Hamilton Clarke.

There is much smooth writing in this work, and it does not lack variety. Mr. Clarke has chosen a by no means easy set of words. "Peradventure" is a long word and covers much musical ground without being as full of meaning as it is of letters. Setting aside the conventional mode of treating the word "die" by dropping voices to the bottom of the gamut, and the word "peace" by a sudden hush, this anthem will be found acceptable and useful. It is to be hoped that more will come from Mr. Clarke's pen, as it is certain he is quite able to choose a path for himself. Unless a ♯ be added to the A in the third bar of the bottom line of p. 6 in future editions, Mr. Clarke will incur the risk of finding from his biography in provincial anthem-books, that he was born in the fourteenth century.

And behold a Throne. Anthem, by Henry Lahee.

This anthem is in many respects meritorious, but perhaps hardly sets the words before its hearers in a suitable shape. The "Ter Sanctus" is surely too sublime an exclamation to be given out con brio. The theme selected for treatment fugato is ably worked out, and the pedal-point is highly effective.

The Nicene Creed. Set to music for four voices (chiefly in unison) with free organ accompaniment, by S. Percival.

This is remarkably good. The accent of the words is carefully managed, and their deep meaning clearly sketched in the outline of the modulations. The whole of it is simple, and it must be found generally useful where the Nicene Creed is chorally rendered.

The Nicene Creed. Set to music in an easy form (principally monotone), with a free organ accompaniment by Dr. Crowe.

This is even more easy than the one just noticed, but it does not lack interest, although the appearance of line after line of G only looks unpromising. It is a useful addition to this style of music.

The March of King David's Army; from the Oratorio, "David and Absalom." Arranged for the Pianoforte, with Chorus, by the composer, W. H. Longhurst.

Very excellent accounts of this Oratorio have come to us from the local papers; and if the March now under notice may be accepted as a fair specimen of the work, there can be little doubt that it is at least the composition of an earnest and thoughtful musician. Without perhaps striking us as thoroughly original, the principal theme is bold, melodious, and well harmonized; the second subject, with the holding notes, against the moving bass, being perhaps even more attractive. As a pianoforte piece this arrangement has a right to its place amongst the many Marches which have already found favour with the public. We should recommend the small notes to be played by all who can reach them; and where a chorus can be obtained, the addition of the vocal part will certainly be most desirable.

'Tis better not to know. Song. Written by Shirley Brooks. Composed by Frederic Clay.

This is a particularly attractive ballad, which tenor singers (especially those who can command the high A flat) will be glad to become acquainted with. The melody is extremely vocal, and the musicianlike accompaniments throughout will ensure it a warm welcome with a trained audience. The change of character in the pianoforte part at the commencement of the "più mosso," is an excellent point; and the final phrase, "'Tis better, darling, not to know," has a most effective musical setting. This song has already been sung several times by Mr. Sims Reeves with great success.

I Puritani (The Puritans). An Opera, in three acts; composed by Vincenzo Bellini. Edited and translated into English by Natalia Macfarren.

Whatever may be said of the artistic merits of the modern Italian school of opera, there can be little doubt that as long as vocalists rule the lyric stage, and audiences accept their unlimited power, whether for good or evil to the cause of music, the works of Bellini, Donizetti and their disciples will continue to maintain their popularity. "I Puritani" is essentially a singers' opera; and associated as it is with the best days of the exclusive establishment in the Haymarket, when the patronage of the artistocracy was the only one to be depended upon, it has not only kept its place upon the stage, but has alway been selected by vocalists as a fair test for their talents, and received by the listeners with perhaps even more favour than it deserves, in deference to the position it once held. The Editor tells us that there are various readings of some portions of this work in different editions, but that the present agrees with the score used in performance at the Italian Opera in London. This is of course as it should be; for it is in connection with the manner in which the opera is presented at our lyrical theatres that this edition will be invariably used; and all who know the care with which this series has been prepared need scarcely be told that the present fully maintains the high character for accuracy, clearness of printing and stage directions which has distinguished its numerous predecessors. The translation is also extremely good, the well-known air with chorus, "Qui la voce," being a number we may especially instance as well deserving of commendation.

Wayside Sketches, for the Pianoforte, No. 3. Composed by Arthur O'Leary.

WE are glad to find that Mr. O'Leary continues these elegant little sketches, of which we have already made favourable mention. The one before us has a light, tripping melody in $\frac{3}{8}$ rhythm, the treatment of which is remarkably fanciful and delicate throughout. The second theme, in the subdominant, with the persistent key-note pedals, is extremely effective; and in the last page the return to the original subject, with the new figure in the bass, gives much variety to a piece which thoroughly fulfils its title. These pleasant little musical pictures are sufficiently diversified in character to make an attractive volume when a few more are added to the list.

Soleil couchant. Nocturne, pour le Piano. Par Thérèse Leupold.

MADAME LEUPOLD is already well known as a successful teacher, her pupils, both in solos and concerted music, having frequently proved before the public the result of the admirable training they have received; but, judging from the graceful little Nocturne before us, we see no reason why she should not also make a name as a composer. It is true that little is attempted in her piece, but what she has attempted is instinct with that elegance and refinement for the absence of which no display of scholastic knowledge can compensate. A melodious theme, in D flat major, is first given out, in chords, with the right hand, the left hand crossing it for a single note on the second of the bar, an effect which is preserved when the theme re-appears, after an interesting episode in the subdominant. We cordially commend this Nocturne to all who prefer expression to display; and assure Madame Leupold that we shall be glad to meet her again as a writer for the instrument of which she so able an instructress.

Reaper's Song. The words translated from the French of P. De Chazot, by H. W. Dulcken, Ph. D.

I love the splendour of the night. Song. Translated from the French of J. Chantepie by H. W. Dulcken, Ph. D.

The Old Year. Song. Written by H. W. Dulcken, Ph. D.

Sighs. Canzonette. The words translated from the French of P. De Chazot, by E. R.

Composed by J. Faure.

THE first of these songs in G major, has a simple and melodious subject, thoroughly suggestive of the green fields, the pastoral character being well preserved by a long key-note pedal, the D being pertinaciously held against the voice, both on the tonic and dominant harmonies. The second part, in E minor, with a staccato accompaniment, contrasts well with the opening; and, ending upon the dominant harmony, the return to the original theme comes with excellent effect. Very little is aimed at in this composition, beyond the due expression of some very unpretending words; but it is the song of one who thoroughly understands the voice and its requirements. "I love the splendour of the night" commences after a few bars of symphony, with [illegible] accompaniment, the voice-part being played with [illegible]. Some highly effective modulations (with a [illegible] in the figure of the accompaniment), concluding [illegible] the dominant of the original key, leads us to a beautiful [illegible]ce, upon the words "But sweeter far the light shall be," [illegible]rd of each verse being followed by the characteristic [illegible] "Year" is [illegible] of A major and F [illegible] bells being skilfully in[illegible] accompaniment. An unexpected [illegible] is close on the dominant of A min[illegible] and [illegible]. Sacred [illegible] us thou'll be," and the mo[illegible] note triad by the voice, whilst the original subject is played [illegible] are points of much interest, and show the possession of original thought on the part of the composer, who although one of the most accomplished vocalists on the lyric stage amply proves that he must have found time to study with attention the principles of composition. The Canzonet, "Sighs," is a remarkably quaint little vocal piece, a peculiar effect being gained by the symphony being in D major, $\frac{6}{8}$ rhythm, and the voice-part in D minor, $\frac{3}{4}$ rhythm, the last note of the melody (the 5th of the chord) being made to belong to the major triad which commences the symphony between the verses. A vocalist who can sympathise with the composer in this song may confidently rely upon its success with a mixed audience; for although by no means what is termed "popular" in character, its melodiousness must at least be felt by the most impassive listener.

She whispered soft "I will." Song. Written and composed by Alfred B. Allen.

THE title of this song would lead most people to imagine that the lady's assent, which she "whispered soft," was breathed confidentially into her lover's ears before the marriage ceremony was even talked of; and disappointment will, we think, be felt when it is found that the composition relates only to a wedding, and that the two words are consequently spoken as a legal necessity, the matter of fact nature of which is sufficiently proved by the reply of a country bridegroom who, on being asked by the clergyman if he would have this woman for his "wedded wife," said he certainly shouldn't have taken the trouble to come all that distance if such had not been his intention. But although this must destroy much of the romantic interest which may be anticipated by a casual reader of the title-page, the song will please those who love to linger over the details of weddings in "high life;" for the affair takes place in a "grand old Gothic church," a Dean officiates at the ceremony, the bride enters leaning upon the "old Count's arm," and everything is perfectly right and proper, including the music, with the exception of two consecutive fifths between the melody and bass, which accompany the bride "down the aisle," and a peculiar succession of bare fourths in the symphony (2nd bar) which is repeated, as if the composer liked it.

The Rover. Song. Words and music by Frederic Penna.

HERE again the composer supplies his own poetry; and if therefore Mr. Penna, who is himself a singer, should find the words "Hither, thither" somewhat unvocal, when kept on for two bars of eight quavers each, he has only himself to blame for it. The melody, however, is bold and free, such as a real "rover" would revel in; and amateur drawing-room representatives will, we doubt not, delight in declaring themselves "free as the day" to the appropriate music here supplied them. The song is well accompanied, and may take its place amongst the few vocal pieces especially written for male singers.

RUDALL, ROSE, CARTE AND CO.

Journal of the London Society of Amateur Flute Players. No. 8.

THOSE amateurs of the flute who know not of the existence of this journal should at once possess themselves of a copy, for we promise them that its contents are of the highest order. We have already reviewed an excellent Sonata by Mr. G. A. Macfarren, which was printed in a former number; and we have in the one now before us an "Andante and Rondo," by Mr. John Radcliff, and a "Romance," by M. Saint-Saëns, both of which are entitled to the highest commendation. Mr. Radcliff is well known as a most accomplished performer upon the instrument for which he writes; and it may be imagined that the best qualities of the flute are well displayed in his composition, and the passages carefully considered and thoroughly effective; but we may add that the pianoforte part is equally good, and that to fulfil the intention of the composer an efficient and sympathetic pianist is absolutely demanded. The subject of the "Andante" is extremely melodious, the harmonies are unexceptionable throughout, and some very judicious changes of key give much vitality to the movement. The "Rondo," a lively theme, in $\frac{2}{4}$ rhythm, has but little pretension, but it is carefully written and cannot fail to be effective. We much like the phrase in the relative minor, after the double bar. M. Saint-Saëns's "Romance" commences in F minor, and passes through some very extraneous keys, but the composition is the work of a musician, and it will require two musicians to play it. Much [illegible]ness is gained by the alterations in the character of the [illegible]mpaniment part, which although an accompaniment throughout, is [illegible]istically woven in with the flute passages and, [illegible]ently executed, will sufficiently assert its importance in the duet for by this title the composition has a right to be named. Our notice of the merits of this publication must necessarily be brief, but we trust that we have said enough to draw the attention both of amateurs and professors to the work, which is clearly printed and in every respect most carefully got up.

Marche Guerrière, pour le Piano.
Par Charles Edward Stephens.

These two pieces, evidently the work of a sound and thoughtful musician, deserve to take high rank amongst the compositions specially designed for those pianists who desire to exercise their minds as well as their fingers. The March, based upon a well marked and attractive subject in D minor, is no fragmentary piece of common-place, such as we so frequently meet with composed "in honour" of somebody, but a well digested piece of music, the very faults of which arise from the display of too much scholarship. We like the theme with which it opens excessively, and also the second subject, in B flat major (its repetition in the tonic major of the piece being highly effective), and there are some excellent points in the coda, the conclusion, where the subject is accompanied by a continually ascending octave passage, being especially worthy of commendation; but throughout the piece there is a superabundance of modulation, which, carefully as it is written, distresses the ear, and detracts from the effect of what would otherwise be a faultless work. For the "Rêverie" we have nothing but praise. Amongst modern pieces of this class we could scarcely point to one which has so thoroughly pleased us. It commences with a healthy and melodious theme, quietly and appropriately accompanied, the chromatic passages for the left hand in the second part being excellently contrasted with the placid opening. The second subject is perfectly charming, and is treated with the tenderness it deserves, the modulations aiding the intensity of its expression by flowing naturally through a sequence of keys until, by a skilful enharmonic change, the original re-appears, the figure in the accompaniment being effectively preserved throughout. The return to the principal theme, with an altered bass, brings the piece to a conclusion, leaving on the ear that satisfactory impression of completeness which is rare enough to justify us in pronouncing a more favourable verdict upon Mr. Stephens's compositions than we have been able for some time conscientiously to do, even when pieces by more "popular" writers have been under review.

J. McDowell and Co.

Six pièces pour Piano:—

1. Simple Phrase.
2. Mélodie.
3. Berceuse.
4. Pensée Russe.
5. Marine.
6. Lamento.

Composées par F. Peru.

The name of this composer is new to us, but the six pieces before us prove that he desires not to write in the beaten track, and if his music does not betray signs of much originality, it is certainly not for want of striving after it. Every phrase however bears unmistakable evidence of its author being an accomplished musician; and we cannot but think that if he were to write more simply he would write better. No. 1 would be additionally attractive if the whole of the somewhat ugly ornamental passages were cut out. The melody is pleasing; and, well played, with the excisions we have mentioned, would no doubt be highly effective. No. 2 is a "Song without words," in A minor, clearly written, carefully harmonized, and unexceptionable in its treatment throughout, but so thoroughly conventional in character as to call for no particular remark. No. 3 is in our opinion the best. It is difficult to be original in a "Berceuse," but the figure in the left hand part, which is maintained throughout, gives so much point to the composition—the holding notes of the theme being in such excellent contrast with the accompaniment—that we cannot but imagine that this piece might become popular, were it separated from its companions. The melody is extremely beautiful, and the harmonies most appropriate, an enharmonic change (E flat, D sharp) being a point well worthy of attention. The Russian piece (No. 4 of course in a minor key, has but little interest; but No. 5 again shows the composer at his best. It is in Barcarolle time; and the device adopted in the bass of following the doubly dotted crotchet by a semiquaver, and writing 3 over them, makes this important left-hand part universally intelligible. This characteristic accompaniment against the legato melody is highly effective. No. 6, in C minor, has a pathetic theme, but the treatment of it is somewhat affected, the cadences, and introduction of the "Adagio religioso" giving a patchy air to the piece scarcely in accordance with its title. On the whole, however, as we have said, all the compositions show good intention and skill in workmanship, and on that account deserve especial notice.

Roses de Bohême. Valse brillante, pour Piano.
Par Henri Kowalski.

Marches and Dances are so marked in rhythm that we cannot wonder at the manner in which we are inundated with these manufactures in an age when the desire for new, rather than good, music is so universal. The truth is that a composer who can successfully catch the measure and special characteristics of such compositions has advanced half way towards success; and a man therefore can turn out a "bold" March or a "spirited" Mazurka with the same ease that he can make a Scotch air by the use of the Scotch scale. As a proof, however, of the essential difference between those which are composed to last and those which are written to sell, we may, in spite of the number daily added to the already large store, count up with but little expenditure of trouble, the few which have taken their place in the world's library of music, and may conclude that this collection will not be disturbed nor materially increased by smaller men than those by whom this legacy has been bequeathed. These observations have been forced upon us by an examination of the two works which lie before us. Both are good—both are well written, brilliant and effective—but we contend that we do not want them: every passage has been used before hundreds of times; and although the Galop is by far the better of the two, there are plenty as good, and even better already existing. Those, however, who do not agree with us, and eagerly seek for novelty, will find some effective passages in these pieces. By the way as "J. McDowell" is advertised as sole agent to the "French Music Publishers' Company," we should be glad if he could use his influence to get the name of Henri Kowalski's next composition printed without the curves which we presume are intended to ornament the title-page of the "Galop de Bravoure;" for even by placing our head in various uncomfortable positions in order to follow the letters, we have ound it exceedingly difficult to read it at all.

Lamborn Cock and Co.

Nocturne, "La Consolation;" for the Pianoforte. Composed by Claudius H. Couldery.

Mr. Couldery, who has already written some very excellent pieces, has scarcely, we think, made an advance in this Nocturne; and progress being the one thing which all young composers should aim at, his best friends are those who would urge him onward. It is unquestionably the work of a musician; but there is nothing which has not often been said before, and the passages marked leggieramente and legatissimo are trite and somewhat common-place. The best part of the composition is where the theme is accompanied with the rapid arpeggio bass; and there is some effective writing in the Coda. It is good to be able to compose an elegant "teaching" piece; but "Songs without words" and "Nocturnes" will not build up a fame.

Duff and Stewart.

An Evening Thought, for the Pianoforte. By Sir J. Benedict.

An exceedingly graceful piece, by a composer whose lightest sketch shows the hand of a trained artist. The subject is extremely refined; and those who can sing upon the instrument will be pleased to add this musicianlike trifle to their portfolio of "drawing-room" compositions. As amateurs so often attempt these pieces by themselves, we cannot but think that it would be good if composers (as well for their own sake as for that of the performer) would occasionally mark a leading finger, for we are convinced that the want of this help deters many young players from doing justice to passages which are perfectly within their powers.

Prayer (Gebet). Translated from the German by E. R. Composed by Dr. Ferdinand Hiller.

So few "Prayers" in modern music are sacred in anything but the words that we cannot but feel pleasure in drawing the attention of vocalists to this composition of one of the most accomplished writers of the day. There is a purely religious feeling throughout this piece which cannot fail to make itself felt by every listener. The two phrases, on the words, "Be Thou with me," the first ending on the fifth of the chord of D minor, and the second on the fifth of the chord of C, have an extremely pathetic effect; and musical ears will be charmed with the beautiful harmonies with which the voice-part is coloured throughout. The words are well translated, and move most sympathetically with Dr. Hiller's thoughtful music.

Original Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—Could your contributor, whose answer to the enquiries of "R. S. O.," as to the nature of the Counter-tenor voice, appears in this month's Times, kindly inform me as to the training employed in the case of the heavy basses of the Greek Church? Yours respectfully,

H. M. J.

[We cannot speak from experience on the subject of the above enquiry, but believe the vocal register in question to result rather from natural, though exceptional, physical formation than from any special training. The voice is more common in Russia than elsewhere; it is also found, though rarely, in England. Specimens of this have been heard among the German singers of our Italian Opera, for instance, in Herr Hermann and Herr Rokitansky. It proceeds from the lower B or A in the bass clef, downwards, for ten or eleven notes of full sonorous quality. The notes next above this deep register are poor in tone and uncertain of production. Then begins a kind of falsetto quality of remarkable power, that extends upwards to F or G above the bass staff, making a range of three octaves or more in the entire compass. The deep bass voices that are not infrequent in Germany, are not disfigured by the break in the middle, and seldom reach further downwards than C or B below the staff. About the year 1830, the celebrated Bochsa trained four male singers, all Londoners it was at last discovered, whom he exhibited under the name of "The Bohemian Brothers," to suit whose peculiarities he cleverly arranged some national melodies; one of these sang up to  or higher, one sang down to with ease, and the other two were an ordinary tenor and bass; he had accidentally met with the extreme voices, and turned them to musical account by the connecting medium of the others. There are some valuable remarks on the, so to speak, double-bass voice in the complete edition of Signor Garcia's treatise on singing.

The Writer of the Article.]

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—Will you permit me, the writer of an article on the counter tenor voice in the Tonic Sol-fa Reporter, to which reference is made in the answer given last month to R. S. O., to add a few words on the subject there treated of.

"The writer of the article" has not replied to the second question of R. S. O., and having some practical acquaintance with the process of training male voices, I think an answer can be given which may be of service to him.

The first tenor voices of the Germans and French are light tenors, but of no rare species; fully one half of ordinary tenors will be found suitable. They make use of the falsetto voice from D, E or F upwards. The falsetto of tenors is of a different quality from that of basses (which is the usual English alto). It is strengthened and united to the chest voice by exercise, chiefly of three kinds:—

1st. Exercises to discover the falsetto register by pianissimo productions of high sounds.

2nd. Exercises in falsetto alone on high notes, D up to A.

3rd. Exercises on scales, from notes in the chest register upwards into the falsetto, and downwards, vice versa.

The impression that continental conductors do not allow falsetto in the 1st tenor is an entire mistake, as a perusal of their treatises on the training of mens' voice choirs will at once show. That the training of tenors to execute the highest German men's music, extending sometimes up to C, is not difficult, a little experimenting will prove.

The best treatise I have seen is Reissmann's. Mr. Curwen is issuing, for the use of Solfaists, a book of exercises for the training of men's choirs. Yours respectfully, CHORAL FESTIVALS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—The season for Choral Festivals in our Cathedrals and larger Parish Churches is now commencing, and I wish to draw the attention of all Church Choral Union Committees, and others, who may have the choice of the music for these Festivals, to a great error which is fast creeping in amongst us, in the style of music usually selected. The meetings of parochial choirs in our Cathedrals, &c., were, I believe, originally designed for the improvement of (amongst others) our village choristers, who are mainly dependent on the exertions of the wife of their worthy parish priest, or other amateur, for their instruction; and these choirs being mostly unable to read music, are wholly unequal to the performance of the difficult florid music now usually given. I would by no means urge an original assortment of tunes which all have known from childhood; but why should we not have two or three good solid hymn tunes and chants, such as might be used in any village church during the following year? I would suggest an anthem, as that, being a novelty to many choristers, is sure to be looked upon as something "grand." But let it be plain, simple, and, above all, something with a good melody. Such a composition may be learnt correctly by any village choir of ordinary powers; why then go out of the way to take an anthem with a difficult fugue, or other elaborateness, such as many country choirs can scarcely even attempt to sing in tune? I admit, of course, that a quartett or solo by the Cathedral choir may be very desirable, as showing our more uneducated choristers, how music ought to be rendered with both taste and expression. In those dioceses where a diocesan pointing is established, I would also suggest that such pointing should be given, instead of always seeking for a new one; since by such constant changes no country choir can even point a "Gloria Patri" correctly or in time. I hope my letter (which I much wish could have been written by a wiser head than mine) may lead others also to think over this subject; I feel sure our Choral Festivals do not at present properly fulfil the mission for which they were originally designed, viz.—the making our country church services more hearty and more devotional, enabling all to magnify God's Holy Name in His Temple, and fitting priests, choristers, and congregations to join the praises of the blessed ones around the heavenly throne,

"And sing th' eternal song."

I am, Sir, yours faithfully,

June 13, 1872. A Sympathizer.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Dear Sir,—The few lines relative to Cape Town in the article on "Distant Music," in your issue of April 1st, are, unfortunately, only too illustrative of the first portion of that article. I only wish your statement was correct. If you can find space, I will inform you, as briefly as possible, of what has been done during the last few years in the capital of the Cape Colony. At the time of the Crimean war, a performance of the "Messiah" was given in St. Mary's Roman Catholic Cathedral in aid of the Patriotic Fund, in which the Cape Town Choral Society, the Cathedral and other Church Choirs, the band of the Regiment then stationed here, and a number of other professional and amateur musicians, took part. In 1863, Mr. J. H. Ashley, with the assistance of the Choral Society, the regimental band, and the professional and amateur orchestra, gave a concert, the great feature of which was Romberg's "Lay of the Bell." This, though a musical success, must have been a great loss financially, and the Choral Society broke up soon after. The Good Hope Choral Union was founded in the same year, under the direction of Mr. Ashley, and in 1864, with the assistance of the orchestra of the Cape Town Musical Society, gave, in a concert of sacred music for the benefit of the Free Dispensary, the first part of the "Messiah," complete, with the "Hallelujah" chorus. During the existence of the Choral Union, selections from "St. Paul," "Mount of Olives," "Creation," "Elijah," and "Judas Maccabæus" were given at its concerts; but the only other complete work rendered by this Society was Mozart's Twelfth Mass, which was performed twice in Cape Town, and at Stellenbosch. But this Society is now broken up, many of the members having gone to different parts of the world. The complete works given by the "Intermediate Tonic Sol-fa Class," referred to in the article are "A Summer day," being an adaptation of new words to Locke's "Macbeth" music, and Webbe's Mass in G. The Cape Town Musical Society is more particularly instrumental, and its programmes comprise the symphonies and overtures of the masters of the art.

I do not know whether the Paarl Philharmonic Society is still in existence. I have not heard of it for some time. This Society bought out some compositions, in Oratorio form, of its conductor, Mr. J. S. de Villiers.

When the Miranda-Harper-Leffler company were here, two years ago, they gave, with local assistance, several epresentations of English Opera, the "Messiah," and elections from "Elijah."

A new Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. Bucke, who has lately come to the colony, has just been established, and has in practice Lahee's "Building of the Ship." No public performance has yet been announced.

The "Apollo Union," and "Liedertafel" have risen and fallen during the last few years; but have performed no complete works. One of the musical events is the annual celebration of the Confession of Augsburg at the Lutheran churches in the city, in which music takes a very prominent and important part. This has of late years given rise to a similar musical celebration of the Reformation-day in the Dutch Reformed Church. On these occasions some of the finest choruses of the great masters are sung, with Anthems and other sacred pieces by English church-composers. The Anglican Cathedral has a surpliced choir, and choral service. Concerts of sacred music are also occasionally given in St. Mary's Roman Catholic Cathedral.

Yours sincerely.

Cape Town, May 14, 1872. Africander.

ORGANISTS' SALARIES AND ORGANISTS' APPOINTMENTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—The question of organists' salaries has now been so fully and ably discussed by your correspondents—Mr. Greeves, "Clericus," and others—that I feel somewhat diffident at troubling you with my views on the subject.

All your contributors (both clerical and musical) seem agreed in thinking that organists' stipends are not what they should be, and quite out of proportion to the importance of their duties; but as regards this, one fact, I think, has been entirely overlooked. Since the great spread of church music during the last twenty years, and the general introduction of choirs, the organist's duties and responsibilities have in the majority of cases been doubled. He now has not merely to officiate at the instrument, and to instruct a few children in Psalmody, but also to perform the duties of choirmaster, and to manage a large body of volunteer voices—a duty which entails extra attendance, extra exertion, and extra cares—a duty in a word which has just doubled his labours and responsibilities. In fact, the trouble and labour of managing the choir is now in many churches the heaviest part of the organist's duty. And what has he gained in return for this? In the generality of cases, not one single farthing—nor even (too often) the credit which he is honestly entitled to—for if the singing goes well, and the choir becomes popular, some amateur Precentor generally lays claim to this. Now this is manifestly a great injustice, and I would suggest that in those places where choirs have been established, and the organist is expected to train them, he should be paid an additional salary for his extra exertions. This would be a mere act of policy and justice. It would have the effect of giving him a real interest in the progress and maintenance of the choir, and would prevent his grudging his time for the necessary rehearsals, which too frequently leads to inefficiency and dissatisfaction.

Now a few words on a kindred topic—that of the mode of appointing organists. The present practice of selecting by testimonials or public competition is, I believe I may say without contradiction, not satisfactory, and few competitions take place which do not leave discontents and heartburnings behind—either in the vestry or in the organ-loft. What I would suggest is that in this matter example might very well be taken for the mode of appointing to benefices. When a living is vacant, the Bishop or Patron does not advertise the vacancy and invite applications and competition, but looks about him for a suitable candidate, and then makes him an offer of the appointment. Now there is no reason that the same system should not be applied to organists (at any rate, if in addition, they were required to perform the duties a short time on trial). And this would be paying the musician a compliment, which could have none other but good results. He would feel that in one quarter at least, his character was esteemed, and his abilities respected, and that would be an incentive to him to exert himself in his own sphere, and to continue in his appointment, which is now so seldom the case.

I must not trespass further upon your space at present, but as the subject is of great interest and importance to church musicians, I trust that your readers will give it their thoughtful consideration and attention.

I am, Sir, yours faithfully,

Brompton, June 10. A. S. C.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—The letter of the Rev. Henry Greeves, expresses the views of very many. Allow me, for one, to relate an item of my experience in this branch of the profession. My last organist's position was worth fifteen pounds per annum. I had some friends in the neighbourhood and was greatly attached to the church. This sum was just one-twentieth of the clergyman's stipend. Being led to expect more, I took the place. Rather than be paid such a small salary, as for services performed, I would have played for nothing; this plan, however, was looked upon as not congenial to those who wished to have a paid organist under their direction. The result was, we parted. Very reluctantly, on my side, for I had special reasons for wishing to make my home there; but I could not endure this deliberate contempt of my office. Professionally this was the only course open to me. Further, I may observe, that during thirty years' experience I have never to my knowledge obtained a piano pupil through being in office. In fact, I have found everywhere a settled prejudice against an organist for piano teacher. He is regarded as not animated enough at the keys. Besides a piano teacher now-a-days gets on better from not belonging to any particular choir. Seeing thus a positive loss staring the clever teacher in the face, he ought to be more fairly remunerated than generally is the case. I enclose my card.

Yours,

G. T.

Brief Summary of Country News.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

Boston, America.—At the annual meeting of the Handel and Haydn Society, held on the 27th May, the President of the Society, Loring R. Barnes, presented a highly satisfactory report of the state of the Association, both in a pecuniary and artistic sense. He congratulated the members upon the unexampled success which had attended the six Oratorio performances given in connection with the "Dolby Company" of vocalists, and alluded to the earnest manner in which Bach's "Passion Music" (S. Matthew) had been studied; at the same time expressing a hope that at the next triennial festival it would be performed with a chorus and orchestra equal to the requirements of a work so colossal in its proportions. It was stated that the Society now numbers more than 700 active members.

Bradford.—The Fourth Festival of the Church Choirs of Bradford was held in the Parish Church on Thursday evening, the 6th ult., and proved eminently successful. The surpliced choirs (numbering about 330) entered the church in procession, singing a hymn, the voices being in unison until the chancel was reached, when the respective parts were taken up and sung in harmony. Prayers were intoned by the Rev. W. Dyson, and the sermon was preached by the Very Rev. J. S. Howson, D.D., Dean of Chester. The first anthem was the "Kyrie" and Gloria," from Mozart's Twelfth Mass, and the second (after sermon), Beethoven's "Hallelujah to the Father." Both were well rendered, although there was no conductor. The chanting of the psalms and canticles also was worthy of much commendation. The service was accompanied by Mr. A. R. Swaine, organist and choirmaster of the Parish Church, who had the management and conducting of the rehearsals, and who deserves warm praise for the ability and skill which he displayed in bringing the Festival to such a successful issue. Mr. Tait, organist of S. John's Church, accompanied the Processional and Retrocessional hymns. The fine old Parish Church was crowded to overflowing.

Burnley.—The monument to the memory of Thomas Healey, the "father of Burnley Musicians," as he is termed, was unveiled in the cemetery on the 25th May, in the presence of the Mayor, the Memorial Committee, and many others. Several addresses were delivered on the occasion; and at the conclusion of the ceremony, the hymn "Rock of Ages" was sung to the popular tune "Tinsley," the composition of Healey. The following particulars, communicated by the Hon. Sec. of the Memorial Committee, will, we think, prove interesting:—"Thomas Healey was born at Burnley in the year 1783, and was apprenticed to a shoemaker, but at 20 forsook the trade, and became a schoolmaster, and shortly after left that calling to teach music. He was entirely self-taught, was a good mathematician, had an excellent knowledge of the principles of harmony, could play many instruments, and taught the church and chapel choirs for above 50 years."

CHESTERFIELD.—The Annual Festival of Parish Choirs in the Archdeaconry of Derby was given at the Parish Church on the 6th ult., when upwards of 600 choristers took part in the service. The Processional hymn (taken from the Anglican Hymn Book) "Awake! awake; put on thy strength" was well sung by the Chesterfield Choir, and the "Venite" (Rev. Sir F. A. G. Ouseley, Bart.) was also carefully rendered. The best singing was in the "Te Deum" (Smart, in F); and the Anthem, by Berthold Tours, "Blessed are they that dwell in Thy house," was highly effective. Mention must also be made of the Introit, by Mr. Trimnell, the organist, "Blessed are those that are undefiled in the way," which went exceedingly well. An eloquent sermon, appropriate to the occasion, was preached by the Right Rev. Bishop Abraham. A collection was made after the service, in aid of the Lichfield Diocesan Choral Association.

DUNDEE.—A very enjoyable concert was given on the 31st May by the Dundee Tonic Sol-fa Association, in the Kinnaird Hall. The programme consisted of vocal and instrumental pieces, solo and concerted, of a class which all lovers of music can appreciate. Upwards of fifty voices were engaged in the choruses. The execution was invariably precise, neat, and in many cases it presented a finish which betokened no small degree of taste in vocal art. Among the more interesting of the choral pieces were Bishop's "Hark, 'tis the night watch," Mendelssohn's "The Nightingale," Smart's "Nature's praise," and a spirited chorus—"Come, merry comrades"—by V. E. Becker, which concluded the concert. Two of Gounod's songs, with pianoforte and other instrumental accompaniments, were produced, Mr. Sharp taking the vocal and Messrs. Kinross, Stevenson, and Richmond the instrumental parts. The only remarkable feature in these compositions—viz., "O, that we two were Maying" and "Evening song"—was a certain delicacy of treatment quite in keeping with the music. Mr. Kinross accompanied the concert with the skill and taste of a true musician. His ability as a solo pianist was admirably displayed in Ascher's "Sans Souci," which he played to perfection, and for which he was recalled. Mr. Richmond played Batiste's favourite Andante in G, with all the taste which this class of French organ composition exacts, and his execution was extremely neat. He also performed a pianoforte solo—"La danse des sylphes," by Jaell. Mr. R. Stevenson, as solo violinist, played M. Sainton's Scotch fantasia, in which is introduced "Wha'll be King but Charlie," "Auld Robin Gray," and "Duncan Gray," which pleased the audience so much that he was compelled to reappear and play another piece. The concert was ably directed by Mr. Frank Sharp, conductor to the Society.

HARROGATE.—On Monday evening the 10th ult., at the re-opening of Christ Church Schools, by the Right Hon. Lord Teignmouth, a tea party and concert were given. The members of Christ Church Choir sang several part-songs and glees with much effect. Miss Arnold, in "With verdure clad," Mr. Benson in the air "Father's love," and Messrs. Deighton and Benson in the duet "Love and War," were highly successful, and elicited warm applause. Mr. Arnold's violin solo created quite a furore (accompanied by the Rev. P. W. Hulbert on the piano). The song "My father's Bible" was sung by Mr. Arnold, and was very well received. The success of the performance was mainly due to the ability of the organist, Mr. Arnold, who conducted.

LEICESTER.—The last rehearsal for the season 1871-2 of Mr. Crow's Choral Class, on Friday the 24th May, at the Alexandra Room, was rendered unusually interesting by a presentation to Mr. Crow. A number of friends of the members were present by invitation. Mr. S. Tebbutt said they were all no doubt aware that Mr. Crow had recently distinguished himself at the University of Cambridge, and had in consequence become a Bachelor of Music. He then explained the mode in which the testimonial was raised, and referred to the perfect harmony and good feeling which was, in his opinion, a distinguishing characteristic of the members of the class; and trusted that its future would be yet more prosperous and no less harmonious. After a few more observations he read an illuminated address, and called Miss A. Foster to make the presentation of a silver baton to Mr. Crow, in the name of the class. Mr. Crow replied, thanking the class for their beautiful present and the kindly feeling towards himself which the gift indicated. The baton is composed entirely of silver (hall-marked), and is most beautifully chased. It bears the inscription, "Presented to Edwin John Crow, Esq., Mus. Bac. Cantab., by the Members of his Choral Class. Leicester, May 24th, 1872." After the presentation a number of pieces were sung by the members of the class, in a manner which evinced very careful and skilful training.

LIVERPOOL.—On Saturday, the 1st ult., a very successful opening rehearsal was given by the Societa Armonica in the hall of the Liverpool Institute, Mount Street, before a large audience. The first piece was the overture D'Agnese, by Paer, which was followed by Righini's "O Praise the Lord." This was well sung by the choir, numbering about 30 voices, the solo being capitally rendered by Mr. Hobart. The other vocal pieces were Hummel's offertorium, "Thou art our Father" (solo by Miss Monkhouse), the solo and chorus "Thou soft flowing Avon" (which was encored, Mrs. Hobart's singing of the solo being exceedingly good and deservedly applauded), Kalliwoda's song "Fiercely glows the sky above me," sung by Miss Monkhouse, and redemanded, and Mozart's motette, "O God when Thou appearest," which was warmly applauded. The band, under the leadership of Mr. Lawson, played the accompaniments, in addition to which they performed a symphony in D (Spohr), Ries's symphony No. 1 in D, op. 23, and the overture, L'Inganno Felice (Rossini), the whole being rendered in a manner evincing good training. Mr. Armstrong, as usual, conducted.

LLANDOVERY.—The grand "Eisteddfod." In aid of the movement for raising a monument to the celebrated Welsh worthy, the Rev. Rees Prichard, better known as Vicar Prichard, took place on the 29th May, under a spacious pavilion, constructed to accommodate 3,500 persons. The President of the day was Mr. Edward Jones, of Velindre, the Vice-President, Mr. W. Rees, of Tonn, and the conductor, Rev. Thomas Thomas. The services of Mr. Brinley Richards were obtained to adjudicate the musical prizes, several of which were awarded to choirs, which were highly complimented by Mr. Richards, although where censure was necessary, it was gently but firmly administered. Prizes were also given for solo singers, and there was an interesting competition for brass bands. Mr. Brinley Richards delivered a most eloquent address, in which he warmly advocated the claims of these thoroughly national gatherings, and quoted the opinions of several eminent professors who had borne testimony to their usefulness. In the evening a concert took place before a large audience.

MANCHESTER.—Madame Dunne's concert, at the Free Trade Hall, on the 29th May, was fully attended and highly successful. The programme was classical as well as popular; and Madame Dunne's pianoforte performance was received by her friends with great favour. The concert-giver was assisted by her son, Mr. Joseph Dunne (pianoforte), Herr Jacoby (violin), and Mr. R. Thorley (violoncello); and the vocalists were Miss Thorley, Miss Ruth Harlow, and Mr. Robberds.

MELBOURNE.—The eighteenth annual report of the Melbourne Philharmonic Society is extremely favourable, the Committee warmly congratulating the Association upon the success of its performances during the past season, upon the increase of its members and subscribers, and upon the general efficiency and stability it has now attained. Early in the year a prospectus was issued of the works intended to be given during the session; and it is a gratifying proof of the excellent management of the Society that all the promises contained therein have been faithfully carried out.

NETTLEBED, near Henley-on-Thames.—On Thursday, the 13th ult., a new organ, erected by Mr. Staniland, of Wallingford, was opened in this church, which has recently been much improved by the Hon. and Rev. Henry Bligh, vicar. The prayers were read by the vicar, and the Lord Bishop of Oxford preached the sermon. The clergy was well represented. The Rev. E. Ibbetson presided at the organ, and the proceedings excited much interest.

OXFORD.—On Wednesday the 5th ult., an exercise for the degree of Doctor in Music was performed in the Sheldonian Theatre, in the presence of the Vice-Chancellor and a large audience. The exercise, which is entitled "Peace, be still," founded upon Mark iv., 39—"And He arose and rebuked the winds, and said unto the sea, Peace, be still," was written by D. P. Carter, Esq., and set to music by Mr. W. T. Belcher, Mus. Bac., Queen's College, and organist of St. George's Church, Birmingham. The band and chorus consisted of ladies and gentlemen from Birmingham. The exercise, which was of great merit, excited a good deal of interest, and was performed in a very creditable manner. A quartett, sung by Messrs. Bickley, Duxbury, Thornton, and Halliwell, was warmly encored—a rare event on occasions of this kind. At the conclusion of the exercise the composer was warmly applauded. The degree of Doctor in Music was conferred upon Mr. Belcher at a Convocation held on the 6th ult.

PERTH.—The choir of the Wilson Church gave a rehearsal of sacred and secular music in Rector Steele's class-room at the Seminaries, before a large audience, on Wednesday evening, the 29th May. The first part consisted of a selection of anthems and choruses by Dr. Clarke Whitfeld, Himmel, Handel, and Mendelssohn, and a few hymn tunes, chants, &c. The secular part included part songs and glees, by Stevens, Sullivan, and Macfarren, and songs and duets by Rossini, Smart, Hullah, &c., all of which were heartily applauded, "The Cuckoo sings on the poplar tree" and Hatton's "Happiest land" being re-demanded. The singing of the choir evidenced careful preparation, and the solos were also excellently rendered. The concert gave universal satisfaction, and a general wish was expressed that it would be the commencement of an annual series. Mr. J. Stuart (leader of the choir) conducted; a lady member of the church presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. W. Taylor, organist of the Congregational Chapel, Mill Street, rendered valuable service at the harmonium.

STOCKPORT.—The second annual gathering of the associated choirs of this vicinity took place on Saturday evening, the 22nd ult., in the Parish Church. The following choirs were represented:—St. Mary's, St. Peter's, St. Thomas's, Christ Church, Heaton Norris, St. Matthew's Episcopal Chapel, Stockport; St. Thomas's, Heaton Chapel; Cheadle, Cheadle Hulme, Compstall, Whitfield, and All Saints', Glossop; High-lane, Hollingworth, All Saints' and St. Martin's, Marple and Romiley. The prayers were intoned by the Rev. the Vicar of Glossop, and other clergymen took part in the service. The processional hymn was selected from "Appendix to Hymns Ancient and Modern," the organist being Mr. Charles Swain. The time throughout was well kept, showing that the rehearsals under Mr. Meadowcroft, the new choirmaster, had been properly attended to. The sermon was preached by the Rev. W. Crane, M.A., Canon of Manchester Cathedral. The offertory amounted to £14 11s.

TAUNTON.—At the half-yearly meeting of the supporters of the Taunton Independent College, prior to the commencement of the holidays, the boys, under the able conductorship of Mr. Comer (who superintends the musical department), executed an excellent selection of vocal and instrumental pieces. The Rev. S. Wilkinson expressed his great gratification at the manner in which the music had been performed, and complimented Mr. Comer on his zeal and efficiency in the discharge of his duties. The National Anthem was then sung; and, with cheers given by the pupils for the chairman (the Rev. J. Marsden, B.A.), the masters and visitors, the meeting separated.

WANSTEAD.—The annual concert of the Wanstead Musical Union was given on the 6th ult. in the parochial schoolroom. Mozart's Twelfth Mass, J. F. Barnett's Cantata The Ancient Mariner, with full orchestral accompaniments, and Haydn's Symphony in C major were performed. Madame Florence Lancia sang the soprano solos, and Messrs. Phillips and Woolley the tenor and bass ones respectively. The local papers speak in high terms of the performance.

WORCESTER.—At the usual weekly rehearsal of the Worcester Festival Class, recently held at the Music Hall, the members presented Mr. Done with a conductor's bâton, as a testimonial of their respect and esteem, and as an acknowledgment of their appreciation of his services as conductor of the class. The bâton, which is a beautiful specimen of ivory work, about 18 inches long, has a finely-carved handle; it is mounted in the centre with a gilt shield, on which are engraved the initials "W. D.," with embossed massive gilt mount at the end. It is enclosed in a leather case, lined with purple velvet, with a silver plate on the lid, ornamentally engraved with the following inscription:—"Presented by the members of the Worcester Festival Class to their conductor, W. Done, Esq., as a mark of respect and esteem—May, 1872." The presentation was made by Mr. C. Jones, who, in a very suitable speech, alluded to the long services of Mr. Done in connection with the musical Societies of the city, and especially with regard to the Festival Class. Mr. Done, in accepting the testimonial, expressed his appreciation of the gift, and thanked the members in brief but appropriate terms.——The second annual meeting of the ordinary members of the Worcester Musical Society was held at the Guildhall, on the 28th May. J. Whitmore Isaac, Esq., President, in the chair. The report of the Hon. Secretary (Mr. E. J. Spark) proved that the Society was in a highly satisfactory condition, the past season having been very successful, both in a musical and pecuniary sense. Mr. Isaac (who was warmly complimented on the efficient aid he had rendered to the Association) was re-elected President, and Mr. Wm. Done, Vice-President. The chairman proposed the re-election of Mr. A. J. Caldicott as conductor, observing that he had little doubt how the propostition would be received; and, after a few words from Mr. Carr, expressing the great obligations the Society was under to Mr. Caldicott, the motion was carried. The re-election of Mr. Spark as the Hon. Sec., of Mr. Quarterman, as organist, and of several other officers was also unanimously agreed to; and, after a vote of thanks to the chairman, the meeting separated.

ARTHUR ALLISON,

HARMONIUM MANUFACTURER,

110, WARDOUR STREET, LONDON, W.,

SOLE LONDON AGENT FOR RAMSDEN'S (DAWES' PATENT)

MELODY ORGANS,

AND DAWES' AND RAMSDEN'S PATENT

PEDAL SUBSTITUTE ORGANS.

THE MELODY ORGANS,

Beside possessing a quality of tone never before obtained in this class of instruments, have also the extraordinary capability of giving a perfectly clear and distinct additional melody, or, in other words, additional tones to the melody, with a power and variety in proportion to the number of melody stops employed; thus producing, automatously, the effect of one or more single-note or solo instruments being used by separate players, in accompaniment with, or in addition to the full harmony upon the other stops or portions of the instrument. This entirely prevents that dull, heavy monotony which was before inseparable from the very best Reed Organs, and gives a life and expression beyond the anticipation of even the most ardent admirers of this class of instruments.

These Melody Organs also have the further advantage of enabling the performer, when playing a powerful melody with the right hand, to use the whole range of keys below the melody for a subdued accompaniment upon different stops, and without any break in the range (on account of the melody stops being constructed to give the melody only when the melody-knob is drawn). This is a desideratum fully appreciated by all musical professors and others who have used the Melody Organs.

THE PATENT PEDAL SUBSTITUTE

Imparts to the above instruments the further capability of giving—also automatously—a clear and distinct Sub-bass or Pedal note, in addition to the chords or harmony usually played by the left hand; thus giving upon one manual, the effect of Two Manuals and Pedals, and rendering these complete Double-Patent Instruments the most capable, effective, and beautiful ever produced, either in England or any other country.

These beautiful effects are produced without any effort on the part of the player, except the swelling or accenting of these additional single note or solo parts, by means of a pedal or "knee-swell."

The Oak Organs are specially toned and constructed for Churches, Chapels, or Schools. The advantages to be derived from their use cannot be over-estimated, the melody being so clearly brought out as to render it almost impossible or a choir to sing out of tune, when accompanied by one of them.

CRAMERS are the sole manufacturers in England, and have greatly improved the instrument by the addition of a new Reed Valve; a new Octave Coupler; a Vox Humana Stop; and their Muted Bourdon.

These improvements impart to Cramer's American Organs that peculiar, agreeable, and mellow quality of tone which distinguishes them above all kindred instruments. Besides those always kept ready for sale, Cramer and Co. manufacture special instruments, powerfully voiced, and suitable for Churches, Chapels, or large Halls.

From W. Kemp Lee, Esq., Smithford-street, Coventry, Dec. 2, 1870.

Dear Sirs,—I have delayed writing in order that you might know how the instrument goes on since you put it together. The swell gives very great satisfaction, and is far superior to anything I have ever heard. All the reeds on the lower manual are remarkably characteristic of the organ stops after which they are named. The "gamba" on the swell, "dulciana" and "cremona" on the lower manual, have pleased me very much, as also your new stop the "voix d'amour." The pedals work well and are very effective. The instrument, as a whole, is far superior to anything else I have seen, and having one of Alexandre's church harmoniums in the house, on which I have played for five years, can safely say I prefer your make in all respects.

I am, yours truly,
To Messrs. E. and W. Snell. William Kemp Lee.

NEGRO HYMNOLOGY.

Is it possible to say where the sublime ends and the ridiculous begins? Are there any rules or tests of sufficiently general application to fix definitely and at once, the point or points of junction or departure between pathos and bathos? To determine where the practical finishes, and the speculative commences. Or is it that the serious is so interwoven with the humorous, that it is absolutely impossible to account satisfactorily for the truth, that men at one time laugh at that which at another time excites their most serious thoughts—otherwise it is difficult to understand the raison d'être of parodies, comic poems, satires, and burlesques, the keenest and most pointed being those levelled at the gravest affairs of life. A difference of position, education, and tastes has to be taken into consideration in the pursuit of such an enquiry, as it is only amongst the more refined and polished peoples, that subtle distinctions are maintained and kept apart in language and literature; for the lower the scale, socially or ethnologically, the greater are the inconsistencies in speech and song; sentences, images and similies crowded together in free antithesis, less with the object of exciting wonder and amusement, than with the desire to carry the mind captive by the use of phraseology intended to be thrilling and fine. These peculiarities are probably the earliest signs of poetical development, for incongruities and inconsistencies are characteristic of the popular poems in all European countries, whether new or old, and it is yet a question whether the confusion of images may not serve as tests of the age of poetry among civilised peoples.

Rhyming is a lower faculty than reasoning, and most minds are more prone to rhythm than to rhapsody, and so it is easy to understand why uneducated people "love a ballad a life," and fail to be sensible to the charms of "your new-fangled tarradiddles," as poetical fervour is irreverently called, because a ballad is the simple narration of plain facts in a rhymed or rhythmical form, without gloss or comment of a poetical nature, and with no reflections suggested by the themes, other than the moral tacked on to the end. Pious ejaculations were the first forms of these reflections; morals, properly so called, being later additions. Thus, in the ballad of "Flodden feilde," written about the year 1544, the last verse runs:—

> "Now God that was in Bethlem borne,
> And for us dyed upon a tree,
> Save our noble prince that wereth the crowne,
> And have mercy on the Erles soule of Derbye."

And in the ballad of the "Pore man and the kynge" (about 1673) the moral is thus expressed:—

> "God send all lawyers thus well served,
> Then may pore farmers live in rest;
> God blesse and save our noble kinge,
> And send us to live in peace."

The final verse of the "Drunkard's Legacy," written in the early part of the 17th century—

> "Let all young men now, for my sake,
> Take care how they such havoc make;
> For drunkenness you plain may see
> Had like his ruin for to be."

—also contains the only reflection upon the incidents told in the body of the ballad.

To these might be added numerous other quotations, all tending to prove that the popular mind is less willing than incapable, of appreciating reflective poetry, and the later the date, the more reasoning and reasonable are the ideas suggested by the subject. But the expansion of fanciful ideas is not necessary to make a ballad acceptable, all that is needful being a plain story told in fit language in a rhyme and measure that may be readily remembered. This being true of the memories and fancies of the partly informed, it is still more forcibly true of the wholly uneducated. Take for example the secular songs of the negro population of America, and in putting them to the test of an examination it is found that rhythmical cadences,—even if gained by repetition of words, and a rhyme added,—though that rhyme has little or no connection with the story or sense of the song,—form a combination that is at once a passport to favour and popularity, as well with the people among whom they originate, as with the easily pleased among the more enlightened. A verse of "Ole Zip Coon," a genuine "negro song," will fully illustrate these remarks, as it contains all the characteristics indicated, sense being sacrificed to rhyme, and rhythm gained by repetition, while the absurdity of the consequent following upon the antecedent, is not the least remarkable portion of its humour.

> "I went down Sandy Hollow t'other afternoon,
> And who should I meet but ole Zip Coon;
> Ole Zip Coon were a mighty fine scholar,
> (three times again.)
> If he hit a feller once, why, he make a fellow holler."

A striking proof of a muscular mind, capable of readily demonstrating by the shortest and most complete method the results and advantages of a peculiar training.

The specialities observed in this example have their counterparts in the hymns or verses sung at the camp meetings, prayer shouts, and semi-private gatherings of the coloured people, when the solemnity of the subjects, treated in quaint and homely language, or couched in high sounding if not pertinent diction, kindle feelings in the minds of disinterested observers somewhat foreign to those intended to be awakened. And yet many of these "sperichils" as they are called, have been adopted by white congregations, and when sung with zest and spirit, swaying of bodies, nodding of heads, and rhythmical moving of the hands, produce almost indescribable results. Judging by the effects of these perishable, because oral, effusions, many enthusiastic persons have endeavoured to transcribe them upon paper for the benefit of those who would be interested to know of their existence, but being placed at too great a distance, can never have personal experience of them.

The few extracts from these collections, which can be comprised within the limits of the present paper, offer curious subjects for study and thought, and will amply illustrate the difficulty of dissociating the pathetic from the humorous, especially in such productions where literary merit is a secondary consideration, if any at all, compared with the object gained by an unusual juxtaposition of words.

The "verses" are variable, changing with the whim of the singer, or yielding to temporary circumstances: the leader starts the words of each verse, often improvising, and the others, who "base" him, as it is called, strike in with the refrain, or even join in the solo, when the words are familiar. When the "base" begins, the leader often stops, leaving the rest of his words to be guessed at, or it may be they are taken up by the other singers. And the "basers" themselves seem to follow their own whims, beginning when they please and leaving off when they please, striking an octave above or below (in case they have pitched the tune too low or too high), or singing some other note that accords, so as to produce the effect of a marvellous complication and variety, and yet with the most perfect time, and rarely with any discord.

The voices of the coloured people have a peculiar quality that nothing can imitate, and the delicate variations of melody, being often in a scale for which we have no adequate notation, make the nature and character of the written tunes only approximate and suggestive, and therefore the melodies quoted here can only be said to be mere representations rather than reproductions. In many of these tunes there is a sweetness, freshness, and daring construction not to be found in melodies made by measure, and the untutored musicians have in more than one instance succeeded in producing themes which for boldness and originality cannot fail to be very striking.

It must be distinctly understood that these verses, which to the better informed mind appear ridiculous and irreverent, are not so to the poor people who sing them, but are earnest truths, and convey to the minds of the singers often the most acceptable form of doctrine, and reminiscences of Scripture history, while the outward observer who looks deeper for some meaning below that which appears on the surface, and casts aside the tangle of strange subjects with which the real substance is intermingled, will find unmistakable evidences of a child-like faith, an almost unreasoning trust, in the homely and familiar use of sacred images, that speak most forcibly and earnestly of the deep, true and tender religious fervour of the feelings and sentiments of these people.

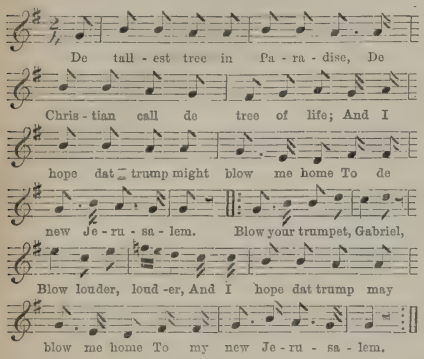
The hymn called "De new Jerusalem," though at first sight merely humorous, is not really so, and the thrilling effect of a body of voices singing with heart and soul the tune and the words may be well imagined, when the full sense of the quaint melody is comprehended.



De tall - est tree in Pa - ra - dise, De Chris - tian call de tree of life; And I hope dat trump might blow me home To de new Je - ru - sa - lem. Blow your trumpet, Gabriel, Blow louder, loud -er, And I hope dat trump may blow me home To my new Je - ru - sa - lem.

Colonel Higginson, one of the most assiduous collectors of these songs and "spirichels," describes his meeting with the author of some of these things, and repeats the words of that author in explaining their rise and origin. "I always wondered," he says, "whether they had always a conscious and definite origin in some leading mind, or whether they grew by gradual accretion, in an almost unconscious way. On this point I could get no information, though I asked many questions, until at last, one day when I was being rowed across from Beaufort to Ladies' Island, I found myself with delight on the actual trail of a song. One of the oarsmen, a brisk young fellow, not a soldier, on being asked for his theory on the matter, dropped out a coy confession. 'Some good spirichels,' he said, 'are jest start out o' curiosity. I been a-raise a song, myself, once.'

"My dream was fulfilled, and I had traced out, not the poem alone, but the poet. I implored him to proceed.

"'Once we boys,' he said, 'went for tote some rice, and de nigger driver he keep a callin' on us; and I say "O' de ole nigger driver!" Den anudder said "Fust ting my mammy told me was, notin' so bad as nigger drivers!" Den I made a sing, just puttin' a word, den anudder word.'

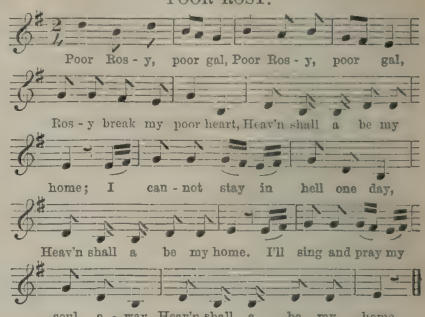
"Then he began singing, and the men, after listening a moment, joined in the chorus, as if it were an old acquaintance, though they evidently had never heard it before. I saw how easily a new 'sing' took root among them."

The negroes have no part-singing, they deliver these melodies with only an occasional chord or notes in harmony. Their songs and hymns are sung in varying times according to the disposition of the singers, or the work in which they are engaged.

"As the same songs," writes Miss McKim, "are sung at every sort of work, of course the tempo is not always alike. On the water, the oars dip 'Poor Rosy' to an even andante; a stout boy and girl at the hominy mill will make the same 'Poor Rosy' fly, to keep time with the whirling stone; and in the evening, after the day's work is done, "Heav'n shall a be my home," peals up slowly and mournfully from the distant quarters. One woman, a respectable house servant, who had lost all but one of her twenty-two children, said to me, 'Pshaw! don't har to dese yer chil'en, missee. Dey jest rattles it off—dey don't know how for sing it. I likes "Poor Rosy," better dan all de songs, but it can't be sung widout a full heart and a troubled sperrit.'"

The plaintive beauty of the melody and the touching pathos of the words, will be but seen in the quotation subjoined:—

"POOR ROSY."



Poor Ros - y, poor gal, Poor Ros - y, poor gal, Ros - y break my poor heart, Heav'n shall a be my home; I can - not stay in hell one day, Heav'n shall a be my home. I'll sing and pray my soul a - way, Heav'n shall a be my home.

2. Got hard trial in my way (three times),
Heav'n shall a be my home,
O when I talk I talk wid God,
Heav'n shall a be my home.

3. I dunno what de people want of me,
Heav'n shall be my home;
My life is hard, my prayers is loud,
Heav'n shall a be my home.

The keen perception of religious sentiment shown in many of the songs, is equalled by the expressions of morality with which they abound, and if they are not remarkable for the refinement of the language in which they are inculcated, no one can complain of their vigour. Take for example the first verse of "I saw the beam"—

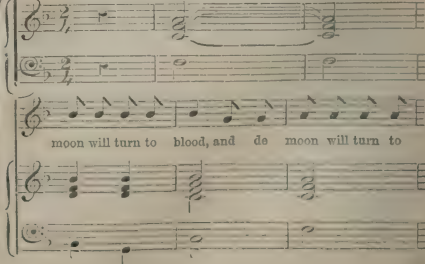
"I saw the beam in my sister's eye,
Can't saw de beam in mine;
You'd better lef' your sister's door,
To keep your own door clean."

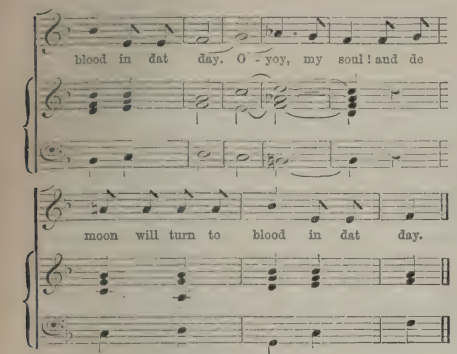
There can be no question as to the point of the moral, even though the similies are placed in too violent an antithesis. The illustration of the broom is a favourite one, and is made use of in more than one instance, the most remarkable being the following:—

"O fare you well, my brudder,
Fare you well by de grace of God,
For I'se gwinen home;
I'se gwinen home, my Lord, I'se gwinen home.
Massa Jesus gib me a little broom,
For to sweep my heart clean,
Sweep 'em clean by de grace of God,
An' glory in my soul."

The [illegible] of the [illegible]y will [illegible]note[illegible] two [illegible] Re[illegible] the [illegible]s, mos[illegible] extraordinary is "The Day of Judgment," the words [illegible] music of which are as follows:—

"DAY OF JUDGMENT."





2. And you'll see de stars a falling.
3. And de world will be on fire.
4. And you'll hear de Saints a singin'.
5. And de Lord will say to de sheep.
6. For to go to Him right hand.
7. But de goats muss go to de left.
8. O Lord, make me a sheep.
9. When de Jordan shall be past.
10. Den Canaan's light shall shine.

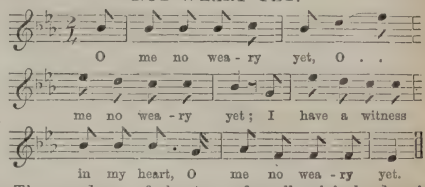
The "O—yoy," at the end of the third repetition of each line is sung as a sort of prolonged wail, and the effect of a number of voices dwelling on the notes to which it is set, must be very thrilling.

The words and most of the similies are borrowed from Scripture, and the frequency of certain allusions, offers a very good key towards determining which parts of Scripture are most favoured by these people, or best known to them. The book of Revelation supplies a large number, the descriptions or prophecies of the Last day, the new Jerusalem, or the glories of "the other side of Jordan," found in the writings of the Prophets, or in the Gospels or Epistles, form the themes of many songs; these, with many class expressions peculiar to the several religious bodies who have from time to time undertaken the task of teaching the coloured people, indicate not only the prevalent influence at work at the time they were written, or rather "raised," but also the portions of Scripture usually dwelt upon, or considered applicable.

One of the most favoured of the negro customs, the "shout," at which most of these songs are sung, is thus described in the New York Nation, of May 30th, 1867:—"The true 'shout' takes place on Sunday, or on 'praise' nights through the week, and either in the praise house or in some cabin in which a regular meeting has been held. Very likely more than half the population of the plantation is gathered together. Let it be the evening, and a light wood fire burns red before the door of the house and on the hearth. For some time one can hear, though at a good distance, the vociferous exhortation or prayer of the presiding elder or of the brother who has the gift that way, and who is not 'on the back seat,' or under the censure of the church authorities for bad behaviour, and at regular intervals one hears the elder 'deaconing' a hymn-book hymn, which is sung two lines at a time, and whose wailing cadences, borne on the night air, are indescribably melancholy. But the benches are pushed back to the wall when the formal meeting is over, and old and young, men and women, sprucely dressed young men, grotesquely half-clad field hands—the women generally with gay handkerchiefs twisted about their heads, and with short skirts—boys with tattered shirts and mens' trousers—young girls barefooted, all stand up in the middle of the floor, and when the 'sperichil' is struck up, begin first walking, and by-and-bye shuffling round, one after the other in a ring. The foot is hardly taken from the floor, and the progression is mainly due to a jerking, hitching motion, which agitates the entire shouter. Sometimes they dance silently, sometimes as they shuffle they sing the chorus of the 'sperichil,' and sometimes the song itself is also sung by the dancers. But more frequently a band, composed of some of the best singers and of tried shouters stand at the side of the room to 'base' the others, singing the body of the song, and clapping their hands upon their knees. Song and dance are alike extremely energetic, and often, when the shout lasts into the middle of the night, the monotonous thud-thud, of the feet, prevents sleep within half-a-mile of the praise house."

Most of these "sperichils" have rhythmical tunes well adapted for dancing to, and the solemn gravity with which this function is performed in the belief that the more energetic "get religion," is incomprehensible to those whose religious ceremonies are quiet and orderly. It is easy to imagine how the wavering and flagging might be excited by such words and melody as—

"NOT WEARY YET."



There are dozens of other tunes of equally original and quaint character, sung and accepted as hymns by the Negro population of America; and if the line which divides the sublime from the ridiculous is more present to our eyes than to those of the people among whom they are accepted, yet they are none the less valuable as expressions of the life and character of that people. The wild, sad strains tell, as the sufferers themselves would, of crushed hopes, keen sorrow, and a dull, daily misery, which covered them as hopelessly as the fog from the rice swamps. On the other hand, the words breathe a trusting faith in rest for the future—in "Canaan's air and happy land," to which their eyes seem constantly turned.

W. A. Barrett, Mus. Bac.

THE NATIONAL MUSIC-MEETINGS AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

It is not to be wondered at if the first announcement of these competitions failed to enlist the sympathies of many earnest lovers of music. First for the obvious reason that English people are in matters of Art ultra-conservative, and secondly, because many persons look upon a competition as a low order of thing to be classed with horse-races, billiard matches, and the like, and not to be thought of in connection with the Fine Arts. This may be a mere prejudice, and admitted to be such; but as usual it is held with far more tenacity than an opinion founded upon any number of principles. This being the case, it was a matter of some importance that Mr. Willert Beale's plan should be placed before the public with some care and judgment. His first move was an admirable one. In gaining the support and assistance of the Crystal Palace authorities, Mr. Beale succeeded in placing the scheme beyond the possibility of failure. For every reason the Crystal Palace was the most advantageous locale. No institution in our day has done so much towards spreading a knowledge of music in all its varied branches, from the highest classical composition performed by its unrivalled band, to the simple part-songs of the children's meetings. It was therefore not only a prudent choice, but a just and necessary one; and the completeness with which every detail was carried out, once more justified the confidence placed in this great centre of Art.

The issue of an admirably drawn up Prospectus, offering a liberal and even munificent number of prizes, and headed with a list of the most eminent musicians in the kingdom as Patrons, gave a final proof of the determination of all concerned not to leave a stone unturned to ensure a brilliant success. The names of competitors soon began to flow in. The judges of each department were chosen by the competitors themselves, and after some preliminary trials for the purpose of reducing the large number of candidates in certain of the classes, the competitions commenced. All the trials took place on the great Handel Festival Orchestra—the judges being placed upon an elevated platform a little distance in front.

It may briefly be stated that the Sopranos exhibited a high degree of efficiency, the Basses also being very good. The Contraltos were perhaps hardly as good as either; whilst the Tenors were decidedly the least promising. Amongst the choral bodies the Bristol Choral Union (Men's Voices), by its admirable and legitimate style of singing, balance of tone, and evident appreciation of the composers' intention, fairly carried away the palm. The Welsh Choir, which gained the Thousand Pound Prize without competition, certainly exhibited some meritorious points; but it is a matter much to be regretted that there was no other choir with which to test its capacity, such omission tending to the entertaining of erroneous impressions. It might have been an advantage, too, had the Tonic Sol-fa Choir met with an antagonist of more nearly average merit. Had any of the choirs which are known to exist in Lancashire and the West Riding of Yorkshire put in an appearance, their characteristic vigour and breadth of style could hardly fail to have made short work of the small and somewhat tricky reading of the £100 Prize Choir.

The Volunteer Band Prize may also be cited as one which was unfortunately carried off without a competition. Had the judges withheld the award it could have surprised no one, seeing that hardly two instruments were in tune with each other, and the style of playing was equally unsettled.

Such matters are, however, inseparable from a commencement; and there cannot be a doubt that, seeing the admirable way in which all the arrangements were carried out, and the obvious advantages these competitions offer to the spread and advancement of the musical art, the inertness of some of the country societies will, ere another year has passed, have been overcome, and the entries of choral bodies be as numerous as the solo vocalists.

The following is a list of the prizes awarded:—

The prizes were distributed by H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, after which the following address was presented to His Royal Highness by Mr. Thos. Hughes, M.P.:—

"The Prizes your Royal Highness has graciously condescended to distribute to-day are given by the Directors of the Crystal Palace Company for the purpose of encouraging excellence in the performance of high class music.

"This object is found embodied in the undertaking known as the National Music Meetings, which consist of a series of public competitive performances open to all comers, and intended to take place annually. The plan was originally proposed to the Directors by Mr. Willert Beale, and that gentleman has been associated with the Officers of the Company in its practical realization.

"The Directors of the Crystal Palace Company believe that these trials of skill will do good service to Art; will tend to elevate the standard of taste by a means familiar and always attractive to the public; and will establish a test of merit such as did not hitherto exist. By preparing for these Annual Competitions, competitors will improve their musical acquirements to the fullest extent, while those who come to hear the trials will have the advantage of comparing their opinions with those of the judges who are to make the awards; thus both competitors and hearers derive benefit from the competitive performances. Moreover, the best music being selected to be prepared for trial, a practical knowledge of the compositions of the greatest masters is acquired by all who enter the lists, whether they win prizes or not.

"With firm faith in the utility of our plan we have ventured to lay it before your Royal Highness, well knowing the interest your Royal Highness generously takes in all measures having any tendency to advance the cause of music in England.

"As far as it has gone, the undertaking promises to lead to good results. As the object of the National Music Meetings has become better known and understood, it has elicited the unanimous approval of those who have examined its details, and has obtained the support of a very large majority of the greatest living musical authorities in the country, who have further given the undertaking their co-operation and countenance by acting as Judges of the Competitions. To these gentlemen, whose names will be found in the statement appended to this report, the Directors beg leave herewith to tender their sincere thanks. The confidence already reposed in the undertaking cannot fail to be still further extended. In the meetings of 1873, the Directors hope to enlarge the basis of their scheme, and to embrace circles and interests at present untouched, as well as to introduce improvements in the plan of operations, through the experience gained at the Meetings just concluded. The National Music Meetings have already brought forward four new singers, who were a few days ago comparatively unknown, but whose merits are now generally recognized. They have also been the means of bringing Choirs from Bristol and from South Wales, and of giving some four or five hundred singers in the last-named musical part of the kingdom, an opportunity of displaying their fresh and vigorous voices in a new and untried locality. The impulse which may thus be given to music in remote districts of the country, and through it to culture and refinement in the best sense of the words, is, though an indirect, by no means an unimportant or undesirable result to be anticipated from the National Music Meetings.

"In the second class of Choral Competitions, the Tonic Sol-fa Association Choir, the Brixton Choral Society, and the South London Choral Associations have well maintained the reputation of the Choral bodies of the metropolis.

"The Diplomas for Sight Singing and general musical proficiency have elicited much talent. By the Brixton Choral Society, and the Bristol Choral Union, pieces of music, composed by Mr. Henry Smart and Mr. Joseph Barnby specially for the occasion, were read at first sight with an ease and correctness highly praiseworthy. Other candidates for Diplomas also evinced great facility in singing at sight, as well as a creditable knowledge of harmony.

"The competitions of Military and Volunteer Bands, though not so full as we should hope them to be in 1873, have been close and well sustained, and have elicited the commendation of the Judges.

"If the anticipations of the Directors are correct, the establishment of the National Music Meetings is likely to mark an epoch in the progress of music in England, a cause to which the Crystal Palace Company has already devoted some of its best and most earnest efforts. The presence of your Royal Highness here to-day is at once a sign of the worth of the movement and a great encouragement to future efforts, and in the name of the Directors of the Company I beg humbly to thank you for your kind condescension.

"Thomas Hughes, Chairman.

"July 7th."

A warm reception was given to the South Wales Choir after the competition at the Crystal Palace. Mr. H. Richard, M.P. for Merthyr Tydvil, presided, and Mr. Brinley Richards, who had the superintendence of the arrangements, accompanied Miss Edith Wynne and Miss Edmonds in several Welsh songs, which were enthusiastically received by a large audience. Some national music was given by the choir, and the proceedings terminated with "God save the Queen," and "God bless the Prince of Wales," the latter being sung in Welsh.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

Meyerbeer's "L' Etoile du Nord," with Madame Adelina Patti as Caterina, and M. Faure as Peter the Great, has been one of the most attractive revivals of the season, a good word being also due to Madame Monbelli, who sang the music of Prascovia with excellent effect. A great success too has been achieved by Madame Parepa in the arduous part of Norma, a character so intimately associated with the best days of Grisi, that but few singers would have the temerity to challenge comparisons. Applause is not always the test of merit, even when it is so lavishly bestowed as it was on Madame Parepa; but the best judges could not but feel that a mature artist was before them; and her singing of "Casta Diva," the great duet with Pollio, and throughout the whole of the last scene elicited not only the usual audible marks of approval, but the warmest admiration from the small minority of judges who were less demonstrative. The long delayed début of Madlle. Smeroschi took place on the 9th ult., when she appeared as Adina, in "L'Elisir d'amore," and gradually aroused the proverbially frigid audience into something very like enthusiasm. With a soprano voice of pure quality, which has evidently been carefully trained, the new comer unites many stage requisites which eminently fit her for the assumption of such parts as the heroine of Donizetti's sparkling little Opera, and we have little doubt that next season Madlle. Smeroschi will become a valuable member of the company. In our last number we had to write the epitaph on Prince Poniatowski's Opera, "Gelmina"; now we have a similar duty to perform for Senor Carlo Gomez's "Il Guarany," which was produced on the 13th ult., and received, according to modern custom, with every outward show of approval. The scene is laid in Brazil, and the story turns upon the fortunes of two lovers who, after many hair-breadth escapes, are seen together on the summit of a hill, at the conclusion, pointing to Heaven, the castle, from which they have just escaped, having been blown up with gunpowder. The scene of the Indian encampment would have saved the work had the music been barely endurable, but five long acts (lasting from eight o'clock until half-past twelve) proved too much for the audience, considering that the most melodious portions of the Opera are borrowed from Meyerbeer, Donizetti, Verdi, and other composers too numerous to mention. The want of repose in Senor Gomez's music is sensibly felt even in the Overture (or "Sinfonia," as it is called), which commences in A major, changes into D flat, and returns to A within a few bars, as if in search of a resting-point; and this peculiarity is so apparent throughout the work that we could not but marvel at the excellent manner in which the vocalists mastered the difficulties which beset them. The young composer has evidently some feeling for dramatic effect, for there are many pieces which elicited much applause, in spite of the many reminiscences we have mentioned—especially the two duets between the lovers, and a great portion of the scene in the apartment of Emilia, where Gonzales attempts to carry her off—but much of this was owing to the indefatigable exertions of the vocalists. To pass from the music to the stage arrangements—from the weakness to the strength of the Opera—it would be impossible to award too much praise to the clever management of Mr. Augustus Harris. The scene already alluded to, in the third act, is one of the finest spectacles ever witnessed even at the Royal Italian Opera. The picturesqueness of the groupings, the variety of colour in the dresses, and the perfection with which the barbaric customs of the savage warriors are realised, thoroughly excited the somewhat wearied audience, and Mr. Harris was summoned forward to be overwhelmed with applause. In the difficult and trying music which fell to Madlle. Sessi's share, in the part of the heroine, she was everything that could be desired, and Signor Nicolini, as her Guarany lover, scarcely ever sang better in his life: indeed it appeared to us a wonder that powers which had never before been developed should have been reserved for the interpretation of music which can never hold the stage. As Gonzales, Signor Cotogni was most satisfactory, especially in those portions which demand dramatic energy, although his greatest success with the audience was in a waltz air, which received a double encore. M. Faure's embodiment of the Aimoré chief aided much the effect of the few scenes in which he was engaged, both his acting and singing being absolutely perfect; and Signor Bagagiolo was excellent as the Portuguese, Don Antonio de Mariz. The Opera has been played twice since the first night, and it is possible that one or two performances of it may take place next season; but whatever success it may achieve is unquestionably owing more to the talent of Mr. Augustus Harris than to that of Senor Gomez. The establishment closed on Saturday the 20th ult., when Meyerbeer's Opera "L'Etoile du Nord" was given.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

As we anticipated, Cherubini's Opera "Les Deux Journées" has been laid aside, and the vocalists have again reigned supreme to the end of the season. Miss Kellogg, as Gilda, in Verdi's "Rigoletto," has been warmly welcomed, both her singing and acting showing that she has infinitely gained in experience since her last appearance here in the same character. Her Violetta, in "La Traviata," was also a genuine success, the last act, especially, eliciting the most enthusiastic applause. Signor Campanini has held his place as the first Italian tenor of the day, although his voice occasionally shows signs of over-work. Lionello, in Flotow's "Marta," has been one of his most attractive parts, his singing of "M' appari tutt' amor" creating so marked an effect upon the audience as to be re-demanded with a decision not to be questioned. Madlle. Nilsson and Madlle. Marimon have also appeared in many of their most favourite characters with the usual effect. Mozart's "Nozze di Figaro," with a powerful cast, has been given; but beyond this, there is absolutely nothing to chronicle. Auber's "Diamants de la Couronne" was announced for the closing night, Saturday the 27th ult., but it was afterwards withdrawn, and the season terminated with Rossini's "Semiramide," Madlle. Titiens sustaining the part of the heroine.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The annual public concert of this Institution, under the conductorship of Mr. John Hullah, was given at the Hanover Square Rooms on the 22nd ult., before a large audience. The pianoforte playing was so conspicuous a feature in the selection that we cannot but congratulate the many professors who have so zealously laboured in promoting the healthy development of this important branch of study upon the result of their exertions; and that the steady progress of the vocal department was equally apparent could not for a moment be doubted by those who have attended and watched with interest these periodical exhibitions of a school of musical instruction which, through the most adverse influences, has never ceased to assert and maintain its claim to the confidence and support of the public. The lady pianists were Miss Whomes, who played the first movement of Sir Sterndale Bennett's Concerto in F minor with much accuracy and precision; Miss Channell, who especially distinguished herself by a truly intellectual rendering of the first movement of Schumann's Concerto in A minor; Miss Florence Green, who played Hummel's "Retour à Londres" with a delicacy and refinement which elicited the warmest applause; Miss Connolly, who thoroughly mastered the difficulties of Bach's "Chromatic Fantasia;" Miss Baglehole, who, in Mendelssohn's "Serenade and Allegro Giojoso," fully maintained that reputation which is now spreading beyond the walls of the school in which she has been reared; and Miss Chapman, who played the "Agitato Assai," from Sir Sterndale Bennett's "Suite des Pièces," with commendable care and judgment. The male pianists were represented by Mr. Walter Fitton, who exhibited a highly cultivated touch and much musical feeling in Handel's Fugue in E minor and Chopin's beautiful study upon the black keys; Master Walker, a most promising little artist, who gave the Allegretto from Beethoven's Sonata in E minor (op. 90) with so much appreciation of the beauty of the music and command of the passages as to draw forth the loudest demonstrations of approval; and Mr. Ridgway, who, although placed almost at the conclusion of an unusually long programme, played the first movement of Schumann's Sonata in G minor so well as to be rewarded with the most encouraging applause. Amongst the instrumentalists must be mentioned Mr. Howard, who, in the first movement of Beethoven's violin concerto, showed much executive power, although the work was somewhat difficult, even for a student so advanced; and unqualified praise must be awarded to the organ performances of Miss Moultrie and Mr. Walter Fitton, the former playing Bach's Grand Prelude in B minor, and the latter the "Adagio" and "Allegro Vivace" from Mendelssohn's Concerto in F minor, with a decision and firmness of touch which proves how solid is the course of organ instruction in the Institution. The vocal portion of the programme was well supported. Miss Mayfield, in a Recit. and Aria from Vaccaj's "Romeo e Giulietta," displayed an excellent voice and style; Miss Goode, in Mendelssohn's "Jerusalem," and especially in a solo occurring in a MS. Anthem by Henry Guy (a student) was thoroughly satisfactory; Miss Jessie Jones gave Beethoven's "Ah perfido" with much earnestness and dramatic feeling; Mr. Howells sang Mendelssohn's "If with all your hearts" with good expression; Mr. Pope evidenced the possession of a really fine bass voice in Mozart's "Possenti Numi;" Mr. Henry Guy (who is already making his way in our concert-rooms) was successful in Mozart's "O cara immagine;" and Mr. Wadmore (who won a prize at the late National Music Meetings, at the Crystal Palace) gained well-deserved applause by his rendering of Handel's "Nasce al bosco." Misses Francis, George, Butterworth, Kaiser, and Mrs. Dolby lent valuable assistance, with the vocalists already mentioned, in the concerted pieces, which had evidently been most carefully prepared. There were only four compositions by the students performed—a well-written sacred Part-song by Roberts, "Oh distant stars;" the first movement of a Symphony in C minor by Eaton Faning, which exhibits some promise; an exceedingly clever Anthem by Henry Guy (to which we have already alluded), "Make a joyful noise unto the Lord;" and a Festal Overture in C by Wingham, composed in commemoration of the Jubilee of the Royal Academy of Music, so clearly written and excellently instrumented as to appear scarcely the work of a novice. During the concert, after an earnest speech from Sir Sterndale Bennett, the Principal of the Academy, in which he referred to the present prosperous state of the Institution, the prizes were distributed by Mrs. Gladstone. The awards were as follows:—

Female Department. — Silver Medals: Miss Florence Green (Pianoforte); Miss Agnes A. Channell (Pianoforte); Miss Gertrude Mayfield (Singing); Miss Rhoda E. Barkley (General Progress). A special medal, after a design by Mr. T. Woolner, has been instituted as a reward for distinction in composition, in honour of the late Mr. Charles Lucas, so long Principal of the Institution. This will be competed for at Christmas next.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The programme of the seventh concert, on the 24th June, contained an interesting novelty, if such a term can be applied to Bach's Concerto for strings, which was performed for the first time in this country. Although of course somewhat antiquated in form, this work was listened to with the utmost pleasure by the audience, and would have been still more welcome as a specimen of the music of the period had not a slow movement from the same composer's orchestral Suite in D been interpolated between the two movements of the Concerto, in order that the final Allegro might come upon the ear with better effect. No greater contrast with Bach's quiet and masterly composition could have been selected than Beethoven's Symphony in A (No. 7), which commenced the second part, and was played with the utmost vigour and finish. The overtures to "A Midsummer Night's Dream" and "Der Berggeist" (Spohr), were the other orchestral pieces, and Madame Norman-Néruda's excellent performance of Spohr's Dramatic Concerto for the violin, was one of the features of the evening. The vocalists were Madlle. Titiens and Madame Trebelli-Bettini. The eighth and last concert of the season was given on the 8th ult., the performance commencing with Brahms's Serenade in D, for orchestra, a work so unequal in merit as to make us doubt the permanent position of the music of "Young Germany," even where such undoubted marks of genius are shown, unless the representatives of the school can be prevailed upon to believe that the worth of a piece is not to be estimated by its length. A "Serenade" in eight movements is too much for an English audience, however it may be endured in Germany, and in spite, therefore, of the undoubted merit of many of the movements—especially the Minuettos and Scherzos—the last note of the work was unanimously hailed as a relief. The orchestral Prelude to the music of Sophocles' "Ajax," by Sir Sterndale Bennett (which was performed for the first time), must not be judged as an "overture," the short introduction in B flat major, leading to the Allegro in the tonic minor being evidently intended to suggest the character of the important illustrative music which is to follow. The subjects of the Prelude are extremely attractive, and there is so much variety of colour in the instrumentation as to invest this brief Prelude with the utmost interest. Mr. Charles Hallé's performance of Mendelssohn's Concerto in D minor, was by no means beyond reproach. In many parts the passages were dragged, and in the last movement the tempo was positively altered. The applause, however, was loud and enthusiastic, and a recall at the conclusion of the Concerto showed that our opinion was not shared by the general audience. Madame Parepa's fine singing of Beethoven's "Ah perfido" was fully appreciated, as was also Mr. Santley's artistic delivery of Rossini's "Alle voci della gloria." Beethoven's Symphony in C minor was included in the programme, and after Weber's "Jubilee" overture, which concluded the concert, Mr. Cusins, the conductor, was called forward to receive the well earned applause of the audience.

It is to be hoped that our continental neighbours do not too securely rely upon the accuracy of the reports of our musical doings in many of the London journals, or they would often be led astray. For instance, in speaking of the performance of Arthur Sullivan's Te Deum at the Crystal Palace on the 18th ult., the Athenæum says that it was "conducted by the composer," and the Orchestra tells its readers that the second part of the concert commenced with the Te Deum "After nine p.m." Considering that Mr. Manns conducted the work, the composer never having been even announced to do so, and that the second part of the concert began soon after six o'clock, we can scarcely imagine by whom this information could have been supplied. But these are trifles compared with the following paragraph, extracted from the Sunday Times of the 7th ult.:—"Madlle. Christine Nilsson, 'the Two-headed Nightingale,' has this week been astonishing the visitors to the South London Palace in the London Road, and the Metropolitan Hall in the Edgware Road."

We understand that the late Dr. Crotch's Oratorio, "The Captivity of Judah," which is pronounced by the most competent judges to be even superior to the same composer's "Palestine," is about to be published by subscription. The task of editing the work has been entrusted to Sir George Elvey, Mus. Doc., Oxon., which is a sufficient guarantee that it will be carefully and conscientiously done. Several eminent musicians have already signified their approval of the design, and their willingness to aid in furthering the proposition. The Oratorio will be issued, in folio size, at One Guinea; and subscribers' names will be received by Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co.

St. Paul's Church, Thornton Heath, has been recently opened by the Bishop of Dover, under the direction of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The music was most effectively given, the anthem being "O how amiable are Thy dwellings" (Richardson). The organ, though small, was displayed to the best advantage by Mr. F. Harmer, the organist, under whose superintendence the whole of the music was rendered.

Madlle. de la Haye gave an evening concert at the Hanover Square Rooms, on the 6th ult., which was well attended. The concert-giver's powers as a vocalist were fairly tested in several pieces, and in spite of obvious nervousness, she acquitted herself to the evident satisfaction of the audience. Madlle. de la Haye was assisted by Mrs. Fellowes and Miss Elcho (pianoforte), Mr. Henry Holmes (violin), and by the following vocalists:—Misses Dwight, Kate Meadows and Crichton; Messrs. Albert, Miles Bennett, Vernon Brett (a new tenor) and Bell. Mr. Cottell and Mr. Webb conducted.

Society of Arts' Music Examinations.—The newly issued results of this year's examinations in Musical Theory and Composition under Messrs. Hullah and G. A. Macfarren, shew that of the 87 certificates and three prizes awarded by Mr. Hullah, Tonic Sol-fa pupils have taken the first prize, and 68 (more than three-fourths) of the certificates. Mr. Macfarren has awarded two prizes and 36 certificates, and Sol-faists have taken both the prizes, and 31 of the certificates. The Society has now relinquished its musical examinations, in which, during the last six years, 594 certificates have been issued, more than three-quarters (449) having been obtained by Tonic Sol-fa pupils. In Mr. Hullah's examination the ordinary notation and nomenclature of music is strictly used; in Mr. Macfarren's the exercises may be worked in either new or old notation, at the candidate's option. The Council of the Tonic Sol-fa College having tried in vain to induce the Science and Art Department and the University of London to carry on these examinations, has determined as a provisional measure to undertake the work for three years at least.

We hear that on the re-opening of Niblo's Theatre, New York, in October next, Madlle. Rossetti, of the Théâtre des Italiens, Paris, will make her début in America. Besides operatic performances, she is specially engaged to sing at the State Concerts.

The Twenty-first Annual Report of the Choir Benevolent Fund commences by paying an earnest and well deserved tribute to the memory of the late Dean Alford, who was one of the most zealous supporters of the Association. A very successful Festival Service was held during the past year at the Parish Church, Ashford, Kent, when, after paying all expenses, the sum of £72 7s. was handed to the Society; but it is important to remind the members and friends of the Charity that the payments made to its claimants are entirely dependent upon the income being kept up to its present amount; and it is necessary, therefore, that every exertion should be made to enlarge the list of donors and subscribers, so that, as time advances, there may be no diminution in the permanent fund.

A new Edition of "The Hymnary" has just been published by Messrs. Novello and Co. in a cheap and portable form. The Hymns are printed in double column in a type of remarkable clearness. It is understood that the Edition with music, which has been a considerable time in preparation, and which promises to be one of the most remarkable works of the kind ever issued, will be ready on October the 1st.

Miss Elcho gave her first evening concert on Tuesday, the 2nd ult., at the Hanover Square Rooms, assisted by Madlle. Anna Regan, Miss Dwight, Miss Crichton, Mr. W. C. Bell, Mr. Alfred Bennett, Mr. Barrow, Mr. Frederick Chatterton (harp), and Mr. Nicolas Mori (violin). In Beethoven's "Kreutzer Sonata" (with Mr. Mori), Miss Elcho displayed high powers as a pianist, and she was rewarded with warm and deserved applause. Madlle. Regan sang with her usual excellence, Miss Dwight was highly successful in "Fioraja," Miss Crichton gave a song called "Dreams" with much artistic finish, and Mr. Bell sang "Hybrias the Cretan" with good effect. Mr. C. F. Webb assisted Mr. Lansdowne Cottell in accompanying the vocal music.

On the afternoon of Friday, the 5th ult., a musical exercise was performed in the Sheldonian Theatre, Oxford, in the presence of the Rector of Exeter (officiating for the Vice-Chancellor) and Dr. Corfe, Choragus of the University, besides a large audience. The exercise, which comprised the words of the "Te Deum," was composed by Mr. John Naylor, Mus. Bac. of Magdalen Hall, and was the usual one required before proceeding to the Degree of Doctor of Music. As a musical composition its excellence was the subject of general remark, and it was in no slight degree enhanced by the admirable way in which it was executed. There was a full band and chorus, the former being from Birmingham. Mr. Naylor conducted, and Mr. Shaw, of Scarborough, was leader of the band. The vocalists were selected from the Cathedral, Magdalen College, and New College choirs, with the addition of Mr. Hunt, of the Chapel Royal, St. George's, Windsor. The soloists were Mr. Hunt and Mr. Farley Sinkins, of the Cathedral choir, and Masters Newman and Thorp, of New College choir. The quartett, "The glorious company of the Apostles praise Thee," was sung by Messrs. Meadley, Robson, Farley Sinkins, and Roebuck.

We are informed that Mr. Arthur Sullivan is actively engaged upon the composition of an Oratorio for the next Birmingham Festival.

The Fête held at the Crystal Palace on the 18th ult., at which the Prince and Princess of Wales were present, offered unusual musical attractions, for Mr. Arthur Sullivan's "Te Deum," composed in honour of the Prince's recovery, was performed for the second time, with Madame Parepa-Rosa in the solo part, and a full band and choir. The work was conducted by Mr. Manns, and went exceedingly well; the effect, however, being much marred by the arrival of the Royal party in the middle of Madame Parepa's solo, "To thee, Cherubin," when the audience, regardless either of time or place, uttered a cheer which, however complimentary to His Royal Highness, evidenced such a thorough contempt for art and artists as to make it too evident what, with the majority of those who attended the fête, was the real attraction. The "Te Deum" was preceded by a miscellaneous selection, in which Madame Parepa-Rosa, Madlle. Valleria, Madame Patey, and Mr. Santley took part.

The St. George's Glee Union gave its monthly concert on Friday, the 5th ult., at the Pimlico Rooms, before a large audience. Mr. Stringer's song, "The harp that once" (the effect much enhanced by Miss Wade's harp accompaniments), Miss Horder's "Il Ballo" (Guglielmo), Miss Clara Buley's "Snow flake" and "Citron Tree," and M. Beaulieu's song from "Il Trovatore," gained much and deserved applause, the last named piece being encored. Sir H. Bishop's chorus, "Allegiance we swear," and "From Oberon" (Stevens), were also very creditably sung. Miss Wade's harp solos were re-demanded, and Miss Pritchard's pianoforte pieces, "Grand Valse de Concert" (Mattei), and "Danse Negre" (Ascher), were executed in a brilliant and highly finished manner. The accompanists, Signor Ferraris, Miss Pritchard, Mr. C. Payne, and Miss Clara Buley, fulfilled their duties with much skill.

On Tuesday evening, the 2nd ult., a very successful Soirée Musicale was held in the School-room, Southgate Road, Kingsland. The music, under the able directorship of Mr. S. Haskell, organist of the church, was rendered in a manner which showed how carefully the Society had been trained. The band played the March from "Athalie," and the "Wedding March" with much taste and spirit. Mr. C. T. Hildersley sang "Comfort ye" and "Every valley" in highly creditable style; and Miss Martin (pupil of Madame G. A. Macfarren) gave "Angels ever bright and fair," with excellent expression, and received much applause. Miss Coyte Turner in the song "Peace, be still!" Mr. Cattermole in "The Reefer" (encored), Messrs. Bundy and Hildersley in "Love and War," Miss Martin in "He who long since had mine heart" (from "Masaniello"), and Mr. F. Bristol in "Never mind the rest," were thoroughly successful. It is hoped that when Mr. Haskell's Society meets again for the season, he may be encouraged by the large numbers who attended this concert, to give others of a similar kind.

The organist who writes in defence of Mr. Curwen's notation, and mentions the case of the extraordinary youth who was "born and bread in Tonic Sol-fa," would scarcely thank us, we imagine, were we to print his letter as it stands. The advocates of the new system may well say "protect us from our friends."

The Mozart and Beethoven Society gave a concert on the 16th ult., the most attractive features of which were the D minor quartet (Mozart), excellently played by Herren Stickle, Hunneman, Von Czeke, and Schuberth; "Deh Vieni," carefully sung by Madlle. Florella; "La ci darem," by Miss Frenie and Herr Carl Bohrer; and "Voi che sapete" and "Lullaby" (Sullivan), the latter well rendered by Miss Marie Arthur, a young lady of much promise.

The enormous gathering of professors, amateurs, and patrons of music at the dinner in celebration of the Jubilee year of the Royal Academy of Music, held at Willis's Rooms on the 3rd ult., was a convincing proof of the widely spread appreciation of the efforts of the Institution during its long and earnest struggle to maintain a sound and healthful school for musical education in this country. The chair was occupied by the President of the Academy, Lord Dudley, who was supported by the Principal, Sir Sterndale Bennett, and a large number of professors and friends of the Institution. After dinner the usual loyal toasts having been given, Mr. John Hullah proposed the "Houses of Parliament," and alluded to the position which the Academy occupied in public esteem, and the small amount of public money which was annually voted for its maintenance. In the toast of the evening, "The Royal Academy of Music," the Chairman strongly protested against the assertion that England was not a musical nation, and said that had the Government, instead of granting a subsidy of £500 to the Institution, given ten times as much, it would have been no more than it deserved. Several points in Lord Dudley's eloquent speech were received with loud demonstrations of approval; but the practical portion of it was the announcement that Mr. Wren Hoskyns and Mr. Cole, C.B., Vice-Presidents of the Society of Arts, had offered £5,000 for the foundation of national musical scholarships in the Academy, provided that certain proposed conditions were agreed upon. In responding to the toast of "The Principal," Sir Sterndale Bennett evidenced the warm interest he took in the welfare of the Academy, and, like the earnest artist he has ever proved himself, declared that whatever was proposed for the real benefit of the Institution should have his cordial support. Mr. G. A. Macfarren, in returning thanks for "The Old Students," spoke in the warmest terms of his many "brothers," who had been fellow workers in the same school with himself, and mentioned many now eminent in the art, nearly all of whom were present to hear the applause with which their names were received. A selection of music was given during the evening by the students of the Academy, the principal vocalists being Miss Jessie Jones, Miss Llewellyn Bagnall, Miss Goode, Miss Butterworth, Mr. Guy, Mr. Howells and Mr. Wadmore, and the instrumentalists were Miss Channell and Master Matthay (Sterndale Bennett scholar), pianoforte, and Mr. W. F. A. Parker, violin. The highly graphic sketch of the rise and progress of the Institution, by Mr. G. A. Macfarren, printed in the programme of the proceedings of the evening, was perused by the guests with the utmost interest; and its concluding sentence, "The well-being of the Institution is now at its highest, and its well-wishers may look forward with confidence to a happy future for the Royal Academy of Music," found a hearty response amongst the many who had assembled to do honour to the occasion.

Mr. C. J. Bishenden will give a series of Promenade Concerts at one of the West-end theatres during the Autumn, commencing September 1st, at which some of the most eminent vocalists and instrumentalists will appear.

Mr. W. Beavan gave his annual concert at the Queen's Concert Rooms, Hanover Square, on Wednesday evening the 3rd ult., before a large audience. The vocalists were Mesdames Lancia, Poyntz, Scott, Muir, Hancock, and Weale, Messrs. Stanton, Ryan, and James; and the instrumentalists, Mr. Buziau (violin), Mr. F. Chatterton (harp), Messrs. Ogbourne and Beavan (organ), and Messrs. J. and W. Beavan (pianoforte). Mendelssohn's music to "Athalie" was given with much effect by the band and chorus of the West London Amateur Orchestral and Choral Society, the solos being also well rendered. A miscellaneous selection followed. Mr. J. Beavan was an able accompanist, and Mr. W. Beavan conducted.

The "World's Peace Jubilee," as the late great musical festival at Boston was termed, sounds well; but it really means nothing more than that representatives of the art from the various cities of Europe were invited to take part in it. It was essentially a local festival; and if it has had the effect of directing the attention of the American people towards music as a powerful agent in the great cause of civilisation, in spite of the cannon, anvils and bells, which formed so large a portion of the attraction, we shall consider that in the United States a great benefit has been effected, although we must still contend that on this side of the Atlantic the influence of the gathering has not been felt, either for good or evil. It would be impossible to chronicle an account of the performance. How the "Old Hundredth," with 20,000 vocalists, 2000 instrumentalists, and the great organ, opened the festival; how the "Star-spangled Banner," and Verdi's Chorus from "Il Trovatore," accompanied with the strokes from a hundred anvils and the roar of a park of artillery, were given (the latter piece, however, we are glad to hear, being received somewhat coldly); and how the various military bands awoke the utmost enthusiasm by the performance of national airs, can scarcely perhaps be credited by English audiences who are trained to listen to music for its own sake. It may also be mentioned that the solo singers, especially Madame Rudersdorff and Madame Peschka-Leutner, were highly successful (although it is said that their efforts were slightly marred by a chorus of 16,000 voices and the discharge of cannon), and that Madame Arabella Goddard's pianoforte peformance elicited the warmest marks of admiration. Mr. Gilmore was, of course, the life and soul of the festival, and kept his enormous forces well together. Notwithstanding the large attendance at the performance—for we are told that on one occasion 70,000 persons were seated and 20,000 standing—the result has been unsuccessful in a pecuniary sense, for it is stated that there will be a deficiency of 250,000 dollars, which will of course have to be met by the guarantors.

An evening concert was given by Miss Kate Marie Nott, on the 10th ult., at the Hanover Square Rooms. The bénéficiare's powers as a vocalist were well displayed in Donizetti's "La Zingara," Bishop's "Love has eyes," Meyerbeer's "Roberto tu che adoro," and in two duets, all of which were received with the most encouraging marks of approbation. The concert-giver was assisted in the instrumental department by Mr. John Thomas (harp), and Messrs. Brinley Richards and H. Parker (pianoforte); and by the following vocalists—Misses Banks and Lucy Franklein, Messrs. W. H. Cummings, W. F. Enderby, and Wallworth. The conductors were Mr. H. Parker and Mr. J. Harrison.

This interesting Journal may be said to be so firmly established, that organists may now look for the periodical appearance of their Quarterly with as much certainty as the readers of the Edinburgh, Blackwood's, the Westminster, or the long-standing Quarterly of Albemarle Street, may count upon the coming of theirs. It behoves, then, the editor to exert as great care in maintaining its character as he spent in laying the foundation of the same; and the present number fairly shows that he does so—that is, he engages composers of repute abroad and at home, and gives occasional opportunity to unknown writers, trusting the former to hold their ground in general esteem, and being responsible for merit in the latter, without which he would not allow place for their productions. Particularly let us applaud Dr. Spark's self-restraint in withholding compositions of his own; for, having great facility in producing, being constantly met with expressions of approval, and seeing an open space that always needs to be filled, he might easily be tempted to put forward far more than he does of his own music, which, however good, might open the gate to growlers, and give occasion if not reason for them to murmur.

Part XV. begins with an Allegretto Grazioso by Berthold Tours. It is truly graceful, and will please both players and hearers. A Marcia by Henry Smart follows. We have all our weak moments, and artists fail sometimes in their imaginations as much as critics may in their judgment; one such failure is in the piece before us, for, either it is inferior to other writings of its talented author, or we are mistaken in so thinking it. Of course, the C, in bar 3, score 2, page 126, is an engraver's error, although it recurs when the March is reprinted at full after the Trio, and it is therefore a fault rather of the editor than the composer. Such cannot be the case, however, with some incidents in the Trio—the harmony, for instance, of the second bar, where the notes of the chief melody, and the rhythm still more, suggest a chord of C, whereas the harmony of G is given; and there are some other points whose mention, without their complete quotation, would be as unintelligible and uninteresting as perhaps is the above. But it is not in single notes or even chords that the strength of a piece of music can lie, any more than that of a poem can exist in single words; so, the value of this composition is not to be tested by the accidents here noticed. The succeeding Fugue, by Carl Piutti, has very high pretension, all of which is not fulfilled. The subject is not attractive to a hearer, and—judging from the result as much as from the promise—not suggestive to a writer. It is presented under such varieties (augmentation, and the like,) as may occur in fugal development, but the redundancy of modulation and enharmonic progressions in the piece, belong not to the contrapuntal style. It is written with evident pains, but the evidence of pain in the writing is a barrier to pleasure in the hearing. Whatever the nationality of the author (and his polyglot name renders this dubious), he is to be applauded for his German-like work more than for its product: musicianship is not acquired by setting down the first pretty thoughts that rise in the fancy, but by a long course of labour, through which every genuine artist must pass; here are signs of the labour at least. Next there is a Secular March by G. A. Macfarren. Then we have a Trio for Soft Stops by G. Kühmstedt, of Erfurt. This is, as organists will well understand, a piece with a separate part for each hand, employing two manuals, and a third part for the feet. It may be good practice, but it is poor music. Lastly, Horace Wadham Nicholl contributes a Fantasia, which shows better knowledge of the organ than command of ideas. The form is both square and rambling, and so an union of opposites; square, because of the somewhat stiffness of its division into sections, shown, for example, in the repetition, in the key of A, of two phrases that have just been given in B flat; rambling, because of the indistinctness of the thoughts and the undesignedness of their conduct. We will hope for better things from Mr. Nicholl.

The Village Organist. Vol. II. Edited by T. Richard Matthews, B.A.

A former volume of this work has gained a wide circulation, and it is, we presume, the success of that which has induced the collection and issue of the present continuation of a most useful series of pieces, which are, with five exceptions, by living composers. The several numbers are, as in the first volume, narrowly limited in respect of difficulty; many of them have no part for the pedals, and where one is written, it is of the easiest description; and they are all concise in extent. The contributors are Mr. W. H. Callcott, Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew (who supplies two very graceful pieces, of which we prefer the second, an Andante in G; but they should both have begun on the half instead of the full bar), M. Delaborde, Dr. Gauntlett (whose Canzonet begins with the first phrase of the melody in the same key of E flat by Schumann, on which Brahms wrote his beautiful Variation, but is else all his own, and highly meritorious, though better suited to the pianoforte, the tone of which is in accordance with the player's touch, than to the organ, which admits of no inflection of accent), Mr. F. E. Gladstone, the organist of Chichester Cathedral, Mr. Franz Nava (who has given a very melodious Andante con grazia), Mr. E. Silas (whose Pastorale is charmingly quaint, but must lose some of the effect it ought to make, because the right hand has to play in it a portion of the accompaniment as well as the chief melody, and so cannot devote a separate manual to the latter, which would be desirable, as a means of giving it individual prominence), Mr. John Hullah, Mr. G. A. Macfarren, Sir Julius Benedict, Mr. Henry Smart, Mr. W. G. Cusins, Mr. C. G. Verrinder, Mr. J. F. Barnett, Mr. R. Forsey Brion (the merit of whose expressive Andante more than compensates for the little knowledge of his name, and is likely to bring him into favourable notice), Dr. Rimbault (whose two pieces are both attractive, and prove that he might well spend more of his time on composition, even though this compelled him to devote less to his countless easy arrangements), Mr. C. Goodban, Dr. E. G. Monk (whose contrapuntal Variations on his own capital tune, "With me is Luke," from the Anglican Hymn Book, are of a graver character than other pieces in the volume, and are interesting from their merit as much as from their exceptionality), Mr. E. H. Turpin (of whose pieces the third and shortest is far to be preferred, the other two evidencing the unlucky influence of organ-playing on a writer who is not armed with knowledge or practical experience to resist it, tempting him, as it does, with its sweetly-sustained sound, to trust to the effect of strongly-coloured chords and remote changes of key, instead of true musical ideas), Dr. Arnold, Mr. Henry Farmer, Mr. S. Reay of Newark, Mr. H. S. Irons, Dr. Stainer (whose Song of Praise is more ambitious than its neighbours, but makes too "much ado about" its small extent and slender matter), Mr. Joseph Barnby (of whose pieces we prefer the Allegretto in A, graceful as they both are), and Dr. Wesley (whose Andante is somewhat the longest and much the most important piece in the collection, having small pretension but large fulfilment, being admirably fitted to the instrument, but having a higher worth in its musical ideas). The twenty-seven brief, original compositions here enumerated, and five extracts from Mozart, Beethoven, and Onslow, to fill up odd half pages, make up a series that pleasantly exemplifies the present state of musicianship in England, and will be found valuable for practical use where short voluntaries are needed, in towns as much as in villages.

Barcarolle, for the Pianoforte. By Martin Müller.

Mr. Müller's Barcarolle begins so well that we thought it was going to be a better piece than we afterwards found it to be. We like the flowing subject, in $\frac{2}{4}$ rhythm, with which the composition opens, but do not see that it fits in with the phrase in $\frac{6}{8}$ which follows it, nor indeed is the theme itself particularly winning. The return to the original melody is a relief, and the passages which ornament it are carefully and effectively written and lie well under the hand; the arpeggios which conclude the piece, especially, being extremely graceful. It will be seen that our objections are rather more to the composer's matter than his manner in this Barcarolle; and there are certainly indications of good musicianlike feeling in various parts of it which lead us to believe that something better and more spontaneous may come from the same pen.

The Grange March, for the Pianoforte. By Frederick H. Burstall.

This March, it appears by the title-page, was composed in honour of Prince Arthur's visit to Liverpool, on the opening of Sefton Park, and as it also states that it was performed "by the composer" on that occasion, we presume that it was originally written for the Pianoforte, especially as we are not informed that it is an arrangement. It is a good solid March, with a bold theme for the commencement, and an effective second subject, in the dominant. The minor phrase comes in rather strangely: contrast certainly was wanted, but change of key is not always the contrast we desire.

"O come hither and behold." Anthem by the Rev. William Statham, B.A.

This comprises a recitative for bass, a quartet, which is extremely elaborated, a recitative for tenor, and a fugal chorus. It presents many points for objection, and little of interest to counterbalance them until we reach the last movement, which is at least clear and vocal. The whole piece has much internal evidence of having been felt out on the key-board, and that, without sufficient grammatical knowledge to guide the fingers of the playing writer always to the best places.

Twenty-four Tunes, set to popular Hymns, Twelve Chants, and Six Kyrie Eleisons. By J. J. Henry Taylor, Honorary Organist of the Parish Church, Almondbury, Huddersfield, Yorkshire.

The author of this little volume must entertain novel views about harmony, for as such only can be regarded the principles exemplified in his progressions, which, being again and again repeated, cannot be slips of the pen. For instance: passing downwards by similar motion from 7th to 8th, as $\frac{\text{BA}}{\text{CA}}$, which first appears in tune 4, fourth full bar. Again, making the leading note, in the chord of the dominant 7th, descend a whole tone in proceeding to the following chord, as B A, which occurs in tune 10, bar three, and in other pieces. Once more: passing upwards by similar motion from 7th to 8th, as $\frac{\sharp C\ E}{\sharp D\ E}$ in tune 12, eleventh bar, which is rendered still more peculiar by the bass B of the first chord, going to $\sharp C$ in the second. Further: proceeding from a chord of G minor, with $\flat B$ at the top, to the first inversion of a chord of the minor 9th of G, with $\natural B$ in the bass, which we have in tune 6, bars two and ten, and in chant 9. Lastly: having the root of the chord of the dominant major 9th in one of the inner parts, so as to bring the four notes in alphabetical succession, C, D, E, $\sharp F$, into combination, which is to be found in tune 10, bar five, and in many other places. Let this be the last reference of the kind, not because there are no more like specialities to refer to, but because here have been enough to surpass any reader's patience, and more than enough to prove our statement. Were there anything in the melodies of sufficient interest to atone for these, at least questionable harmonies, some persons might still welcome the collection; but the tunes to "Holy! Holy!" "Jerusalem the Golden," and "Abide with me," are neither so good in themselves nor so popular in character as the accepted tunes to these poems, and are therefore not at all likely to supersede them. As for the setting of "Sun of my soul," the chief melody is so uncouth, and the rhythm so vague (the tune being divided into four bars of six semibreves in each) that we fear it can never catch the general ear; otherwise we should rejoice at the appearance of any music to Keble's poem that might draw attention from that most in use—a corrupt version of Mozart's "Se vuol ballare," than which it would be impossible to make or to find anything more profanely inappropriate to the verses, or to the whole character of hymnody.

The Reaper and the Flowers. Words by Longfellow. Composed by J. B. Boucher.

Longfellow's words have been so often composed that a new setting was certainly not required unless something better than Mr. Boucher has given us were procurable; and, even then, as "possession is nine points of the law," it would be exceedingly difficult to displace those which have already become the favourites of the public. We have nothing, however, to say in disparagement of the workmanship in the song before us. The chords are thrown together with grammatical accuracy, and the modulations are free and carefully written; but there is no character in the piece, and the theme is destitute of life. We cannot too often repeat that writing notes to words is not composition; and a review upon a song does not necessarily praise it because it can find nothing to censure. We are often, as in the present instance, inclined to view with favour a composer whose music is destitute of fault; but, as a rule, we should earnestly advise every author not to write unless he has something to say.

Ten Trios, for Female Voices. Composed by Carl Reinecke.

1. The Dreaming Lake.
2. Praise of Spring.
3. Of oak thy mournful bier's prepared.
4. Sunbeams in Winter.
5. The awaking of Morn.
6. The Winter hath not a blossom.
7. Thou that Thyself with death hast striven.
8. The Evening Wind.
9. As in the field goodly fruit will grow.
10. The Elves.

The words of these Trios, excellently translated from the original by Dr. Dulcken, are well fitted for music, and those who know Herr Carl Reinecke's compositions need scarcely be told that they have all received a refined and artistic setting. No. 1 has an exceedingly simple subject, the accompaniment being but little more than a support to the voices throughout. No. 2 begins with a characteristic little symphony, which is repeated with much effect between the verses. The voices answering each other at the commencement, well express the cheerful character of the poetry; and a good point is gained by the holding notes in the voice-parts at the conclusion, during the progress of the symphony. No. 3 has a sombre theme, in F minor; and No. 4, commencing in E minor, has a highly effective change into the tonic major, the brightness of the last phrase being in excellent contrast with the pathos of the opening theme. In No. 5, the voices enter in imitation on the word "Aloft"; and, apart from the attractive nature of the melody, there is much character in the treatment of the vocal parts throughout. The concluding words, "It comes again," are most appropriately set. No. 6, the voices in canon, is in our opinion destined to be the most popular of the set. The theme is melodious, and the truly musicianlike manner in which it is accompanied will materially aid its effect upon artistic listeners. The coda, too, is extremely beautiful, and if well sung, the success of the song may be safely predicted. No. 7 may probably frighten amateurs with its array of flats; but the subject is in good sympathy with the words, and thoroughly vocal. No. 8 begins with a solo, "Quasi parlando," to a semiquaver accompaniment, the other voices stealing in with good effect to the words, "How whispers kind the evening wind." There is much simple beauty in this Trio, and the easy flow of the vocal parts will no doubt make it a favourite with amateur singers. No. 9 also begins with a solo for the first voice, to a triplet arpeggio accompaniment. The melody is highly attractive, and well expresses the words, the passages of imitation giving an artistic character to the composition which lifts it above the ordinary vocal pieces without creating any unnecessary difficulties. No. 10, opening with a brief symphony, has a light and tripping subject, starting with the three voices in harmony, this effect being preserved throughout the Trio. A strange confusion occurs where the E sharp, which belongs to the harmony, is written F natural for the voices; but we presume that this is only done that the singers may read the interval with greater ease, and the accompanist therefore had better keep his eye fixed upon his own part. These ten Trios will be a great boon to those in search of good vocal part-music for ladies' voices; and we may mention, in conclusion, that they are all published singly.

O'er all the Mountain. Song. Written by H. W. Dulcken, Ph. D.

The King and the Minstrel. Song. The words translated from the German, by H. W. Dulcken, Ph. D.

March onward. Song. Translated from the French of J. Chantepie, by H. W. Dulcken, Ph. D.

Composed by J. Faure.

These three songs complete the group of vocal compositions by M. Faure, recently published. "O'er all the mountain" has a simple theme, preceded by a short symphony, which admirably expresses Dr. Dulcken's thoughtful verses. The change in the character of the music on t words "Thou tiller of the soil" is highly effective, and t return to the placid symphony well introduces the origin melody at the commencement of the second verse. "T King and the Minstrel" is full of dramatic feeling. Th commencing phrase, in C minor, on the fifth of the key, h a dreamy character in excellent sympathy with the poetr and the alteration of the rhythm from C to $\frac{6}{8}$ gives a for to the line "But near the king see the minstrel is sleeping which a good singer will not fail to take advantage Throughout the second verse the melody glides on with th same quiet accompaniment, although the words "Brig harp songs echo all the truths" would have tempted eig composers out of ten to break out into a series of arpeggio A quaint effect is gained at the conclusion of the song b the voice sustaining the key-note whilst a portion of th opening symphony (slightly altered) is played. "Marc onward" commences with a calm and melodious subject, F major, the first phrase being effectively harmonised in minor on its repetition. The changes to "Animato," an afterwards to "Largo non troppo," with the triplet accon paniment, give much variety to the piece, which is essentiall vocal throughout. There can be little doubt that the songs will find much favour with singers who are not wedde to the ballads of the day, for they abound in original thought and although, of course, unequal in merit, have all a di tinctive character which stamps them as the work of on who desires rather to lead than to follow public taste. It to be hoped that the composer may give us an opportunit of hearing his own interpretation of some of these compos tions in public; we warrant their success.

Thomas Murby.

The Elements of Music. An Introductory Manual. Boo I. By Thomas Murby.

Some time ago we received a book by Mr. Murby calle "The Musical Student's Manual," in the course of whic we mentioned several points of disagreement between our selves and the author, more especially as to the vagu manner in which he explained and named the intervals In the present work he has not altered his method; and a in the meantime we have not changed our opinions, w cannot award unqualified praise to his labours. It is im possible to over-estimate the importance of clearly an logically arranging the materials of a manual for the use o young students; for it by no means follows that because a author thoroughly understands a subject he should mak his readers do so. In the early part of the book we find, a it appears to us, the word "Staff" strangely confounde with the word "Clef," in proof of which we may cite th sentence, "The Tenor Staff is that which stands on the fourth line," an explanation which we think must puzzl the most intelligent pupil. Then at page 26 we are informed that "Major intervals become minor when their upper sounds are lowered by a ♭, or their lower sounds raised by a ♯." How then is a major third from G♯ to be made minor? Surely these perplexing words "sharp" and "flat" have had their day, and a pupil should now be told that a minor third becomes major by raising the upper note a semitone, and that a major third becomes minor by lowering it a semitone. Then what are we to think of the following observation, which occurs after the classification of intervals into consonant and dissonant? "This mode of classification is rapidly becoming obsolete, some of the so-called dissonant intervals being at the present time considered quite as pleasing, and even more so, than some of the so-called consonant intervals." Granted that these discords are freely admitted into modern music, is this any reason that they should cease to be discords? The beauty of a dissonant note is the longing which it creates in the listener for its resolution, and to say that this distinguishing name by which such intervals have always been known is becoming "obsolete," is to initiate a theory which would lead us backwards instead of forwards. Passing over our author's nomenclature of the intervals—major and minor fifths, &c. (to which, as we have said, he still adheres), we come to the duration of notes, and afterwards to a chapter explaining how sounds are to be grouped. Here some novel theories are expounded, for we are told that the times marked $\frac{4}{4}$ and $\frac{4}{8}$ are "Compound Measures," the first because it is composed of "two two-two measures," and the second because it is made up of "two two-four measures." As we anticipated, this leads our author into a labyrinth, for he is afterwards compelled to call $\frac{12}{8}$ "Compound-compound" measure, being made up (as he says) of "two six-eight" measures.

We have heard of the theory that compound measure is formed by two bars of simple measure "rolled into one" although we utterly disagree with it), but that four crotchets in a bar can be called "compound measure" strikes us with wonder. Although, in the interest of musical education, we have thought it our duty to allude to passages in this book which we think open to grave objection, there are many others with which we cordially agree; and several of the explanations, particularly those on Transposition and Beating Time, are clear and concise. In the course of the book we are occasionally referred to the "Appendix," but as no Appendix appears, we presume that it is to follow, especially as this being marked "Book I.," is evidently the first of a series of works on the Elements of the art.

Augener and Co.

Memories. Words by Mrs. J. A. Rowell. The music written (by commission) by Charles Henry Shepherd, A.R.A.

It is not stated who has commissioned Mr. Shepherd to compose this song, but we think that a fitter person could scarcely have been selected to give effect to the words, which are well suited for a musical setting. The expressive and pathetic melody in F minor, although somewhat monotonous, is in character with the poetry, which lingers over the recollection of a broken vow with much tender feeling. The simplicity of the accompaniment is perhaps in parts even exaggerated; but we like the symphony, with its imitative phrases, which occurs between the verses, in spite of the thinness of the harmony. An expressive singer may create much effect with this song.

Mariana. Song. Words by A. Tennyson, Esq. Composed by Hortense Berton.

Tennyson's words are often selected by vocal composers without thought that the ideas of a true poet require a kindred mind to colour them with due effect. The composer of the song before us has hardly risen to the dignity of the occasion, although his flowing and carefully written melody might pass with more conventional verses. The sameness and smoothness of the theme becomes tiresome from its length; but musically speaking the composition is written with commendable purity and good taste.

Henry Stead and Co.

Chant du Soir. Reverie; par Edmond Wiehler.

It is good that publishers who revel in fantastic title-pages, like the one which adorns this Reverie, should print one for show and one for service, or the poor matter-of-fact reviewer, who has to place the name both of the piece and the composer at the head of his notice, would find it difficult, with the distorted letters, floral accompaniments, and mixture of languages, to unravel the mystery. The "Chant du Soir" is a good little sketch of its kind, presenting no especial novelty, but graceful enough, both in melody and treatment, to satisfy a languid audience on a sultry evening, where a "little music" is supposed to go well with the ices and cooling drinks which are the chief characteristics of a Summer Soirée. The principal theme is melodious; but we like the second subject, in the relative minor, somewhat better, the figure in the bass giving much vitality to the melody. The rapid scale passages appear to have been put in for the mere sake of the executant, as they seem to grow out of nothing; and the return to the original subject, with the semiquaver arpeggio accompaniment, becomes a decided relief. There seems an indication in this piece that its composer can do something better; and, if so, we shall be glad to meet with him on a future occasion.

The Street Arab. Scena. Words by the Rev. Philip Morris. Composed by James J. Monk.

A Scena descriptive of the life and death of a "Street Arab" is a curiosity which deserves some attention. The first thing that strikes us in the composition is its highly dramatic character, every phase in the career of the gutter-child being most minutely and faithfully coloured. Commencing with a mysterious tremolo on the chord of C, the little outcast is described as shivering, barefooted, on the cold flags, to some mysterious chords; the bass walking up and down the scale, to express, we presume, the measured tread of the policeman. Then an "Alle°. deciso," denoting the order of the official to "move on," is succeeded by soft music, the bass continuing its promenade upon the key-board with an evident unconsciousness of the little being "huddl'd on the frozen stone." The death is written to an "Andante," with an arpeggio accompaniment, the harps of course appearing at the right moment, and dying off with the hero, after the manner of the approved miserable ballads so popular with a drawing-room audience. Seriously speaking, that such a work as this should be written, composed, published, and, above all, sent for review, cannot but shake our faith in the spread of that artistic taste of which we hear so much; for that poet and composer are here on an equality may be inferred when we say that are some of the lines supplied by the Rev. Phillip Morris to be set to music.

> "With limbs all quiv'ring,
> Scarce able to support
> The emaciated frame they ought."

The Message of the Breeze. Duet. (Companion Duet to "La Siesta.") The words by Francis Turner Palgrave.

Maid of Athens. Song. Dedicated to Byron's original Maid of Athens, Mrs. Black.

Composed by Charles Gounod.

We confess never to have been able to understand what is meant by one vocal composition being "companion" to another. If it is intended that they shall so resemble each other that we can scarcely tell them apart, M. Gounod may be said to have achieved a decided success in the "Message of the Breeze," for it is so like "La Siesta," which we reviewed some time since, that instead of being its "companion," we think that they should be kept as widely apart as possible. The symphony begins, as in "La Siesta," with a $\frac{2}{4}$, the rhythm is precisely the same (although, strangely enough, $\frac{6}{8}$, instead of $\frac{3}{4}$, is marked) the vocal parts are merely a paraphrase of the former duet, and the characteristic accompaniment is preserved throughout, except that where the right hand falls against the accent, we have a quaver in the "Message of the Breeze," and two semiquavers in "La Siesta." This alteration takes away much of the Spanish character to be found in the original, and we think materially weakens the effect of the duet. In the "Maid of Athens" we find the composer in his happiest vein; indeed we are inclined to believe this to be one of the most graceful and melodious songs he has yet written. The theme is thoroughly vocal and full of passionate tenderness, the flowing arpeggio accompaniment, divided between the two hands, aiding materially the beauty of the melody. It is a true love-song, in which both poet and composer have united their best efforts; and tenor vocalists who can give expression to their words, will we are certain be glad to sing Byron's well-known verses to the sympathetic and eloquent music of M. Gounod.

The Conscript. Song. Written by Walter Boult. Composed by Walter Maynard.

Instead of taking a broad view of the feeling of the little poem which he has undertaken to set to music, Mr. Maynard has, like many other vocal composers, been tempted into putting on patches of colour to express the mere words, and the consequence is that "The Conscript" is a series of fragments which no amount of art can piece together. This practice, lying at the root of inferior song writing, is so much in vogue at the present time that it is good to draw attention to it. Anything relating to the sea has a rippling accompaniment in fine weather, and an agitated bass when the wind begins to blow; the name of a bird immediately suggests a twittering in the treble, usually terminating with a shake; lullabies are provided with a rocking arpeggio, and the slightest mention of pastoral life produces a double pedal, the voice-part—which in these cases usually accompanies the accompaniment—being a matter of apparently but little importance. In the song before us whenever the word "march" occurs the music assumes a martial character. Then the conscript sighs for home, and we have a quiescent four bars, followed by arpeggios of tonic and dominant harmony, accompanying a conventional melody to conventional words, about the "brief happy day" of childhood. It may be said that a song of such small pretension needs no more than a line either of praise or censure, but as it illustrates a principle in the manufacture of vocal music, we accept it as a representative work; and knowing that Mr. Maynard has already written some good songs, we do not desire that he should join the ranks of the many musical pretenders without an earnest word of protest.

The Last Word at the Gate. Song. Words by Miss Clara Loud. Music by C. H. R. Marriot.

A light and tripping melody well expresses the unpretentious words of this song; and both poetry and music being at least harmless, we see no reason why this ballad should not become as popular as the hundreds of similar compositions which have preceded it. The illustrative title, representing the "Good bye at the Gate," will no doubt make the song additionally attractive, although, artistically speaking, we think the amount of colour thrown into the cheeks of the lovers (even allowing for their very excusable blushes) is somewhat in excess of what we should expect, seeing that a full moon is throwing its flood of light upon their faces.

Joy. Rondo Finale, introduced in the opera of "The Bohemian Girl," by Madlle. Clara Doria. Composed by John Barnett.

A very excellent Waltz tune, thoroughly vocal, and full of animation. We can scarcely doubt that this song will become a favourite with young ladies who wish to display the best notes of their voice in a composition which is certain to attract from its own intrinsic merits. We are of course betraying no secrets when we say that Mr. John Barnett has written this piece for his own daughter (whom we should be more pleased to welcome under a name which has already become so eminent in this country); and we may presume that when sung by her, many ornaments are introduced which do not appear in the published version. We are, as our readers know, thoroughly averse to the introduction of songs into an Opera which are not written for it, especially when such songs are not by the composer of the work; but, admitting the necessity for the custom, we cannot imagine one better suited for its intended place than the one before us.

Original Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—In Gunn's Harmony applied to the violoncello, written some 70 years ago, are mentioned at pp. 5, 32, and 49, musical games, invented by Miss Young, of Edinburgh; and the account is so highly commendatory and seemingly disinterested, that one cannot conceive the games to have become obsolete from lack of merit, but rather because of the cost, the demand for such articles being in those days small, or because they were not made known. If so, the games would now, when music is everywhere cultivated, and the means of advertising are general, without doubt succeed; and I commend them to the enterprising amongst your readers. Gunn's description is too long to quote, but he says that the first set of games is on the keys; the second has a second circle of keys; and the third is on the construction of cadences; the last on modulation. Some of them, on the accompaniment of the scale, are played with dice, inscribed with the thorough bass figures; the games are captivating, "even to interesting the passions." In his note at p. 49 Gunn quotes from a review, in which it is asserted that the idea of the apparatus cost little short of £1100; and that by its means more musical knowledge may be acquired in one week than could be learnt in six months before Miss Young's invention. See the Monthly Magazine for December, 1801, page 428.

Where are the apparatus for these games to be seen?

Your obedient Servant,

G. O. Wray.

Hestholm-Bedale, 22nd July, 1872.

[Perhaps some of our readers could supply Mr. Wray with the information he desires. The idea of learning thorough bass with dice is at least a novelty; and a game at modulation, even if it were to amuse the players without interesting the audience, would only have the same effect as much of the "drawing-room music" of the day, and would be infinitely less laborious to both.—Ed. Musical Times.]

ORGANISTS' SALARIES AND ORGANISTS' APPOINTMENTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—Perhaps you will allow me to express my approval of the suggestion of your correspondent, "A. S. C.," as to the latter of the two matters referred to. But first as to salaries—I suppose all agree they are absurdly insufficient; but some other workers are also underpaid. Do organists require no time for self-improvement? if they do, how is it to be found? I happen to know of a teaching practice requiring just 63 hours weekly. Can much time or energy be found in such a case for self-improvement? yet in this case the organist's duty, I know, is regarded as the most important. Then as to the appointment of organists—I have always wondered that any gentleman should consent to play at a "competition," and still more do I wonder that any one should undertake (except for the matter of the guineas) to pronounce in 20 minutes, satisfactorily, upon the ability or fitness of an organist.

But of this matter organists are their own judges. If they do not object, why should lookers-on? At least, if they do so consent, let them not raise any "status" cry, as was the fashion some time back.

Yours faithfully,

S. F.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—Although Mr. Jerningham's powers of perception are worthy of all praise, his letter, was scarcely necessary. I am perfectly aware that the term θῆσις is not to be found in any Greek Vocabulary, but in order to illustrate a principle I "coined" the word for that special purpose.

At the same time, kindly permit me to state a fact with which a "tolerably advanced schoolboy" may be unacquainted, viz., that when the terms arsis and thesis are used in a musical sense, Greek characters are employed by recognised authorities. To quote one instance (which is quite sufficient for present purposes) I need only refer to Dr. Burney's "History of Music."

Yours faithfully,

Frederic Archer.

Our correspondents must specifically denote the date of each concert, for without such date no notice can be taken of the performance.*

Our correspondents will greatly oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors, therefore, will do well to retain copies.

Notice is sent to all Subscribers whose payment (in advance) is exhausted. The paper will be discontinued where the Subscription is not renewed. We again remind those who are disappointed in obtaining back numbers that, although the music pages are always stereotyped, only a sufficient quantity of the rest of the paper is printed to supply the current sale.

Brief Summary of Country News.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

Adelaide, Australia.—There was a large attendance at the Third Quarterly Concert of the Philharmonic Society, on Thursday, the 25th April, in the Town Hall. The programme consisted of Handel's Acis and Galatea, and Mendelssohn's Walpurgis Night, both of which were given with much effect, the soprano solos in Handel's Serenata (especially the song "Hush, ye pretty warbling choir") being sustained by Mrs. Harris with marked success, and the choruses being interpreted with much precision and energy. Mr. E. Spiller was the conductor, Mr. J. Hall led the orchestra, and Mr. J. Shakespeare presided at the pianoforte.

Bedford.—Mr. Diemer, the talented conductor of the Bedford Amateur Musical Society, gave a successful morning concert in the Assembly Rooms on Thursday, the 4th ult. The vocalist was Miss Emily Spiller, who had previously visited Bedford under the auspices of the Amateur Society; and Mr. Lazarus (of the Royal Italian Opera) played several pieces on the clarionet. The remaining portion of the programme was given by Mr. Diemer and a number of young ladies in his pianoforte class, who exhibited great skill. Miss Spiller sang a recit. and aria, "I love the rose" (H. Smart), Verdi's aria, "Ah! fors è lui," Macfarren's "Pack Clouds Away" (with clarionet obbligato by Mr. Lazarus), and "Esmeralda" (W. C. Levey), and was much applauded. Mr. Lazarus took part with Mr. Diemer in the Andante and Rondo from Sonata in E flat, Op. 48 (Weber), and performed a solo from Der Freyschütz in excellent style. The selections given by Mr. Diemer and eight young ladies (on five pianofortes and harmonium), included Beethoven's Symphony in C minor, No. 5. On the whole the concert was very successful.

Bodmin.—Two very successful concerts were given by the Philharmonic Society, in the Market House (especially fitted and decorated for the occasion), during the visit of the Royal Cornwall Agricultural Association, on the 12th and 13th ult., when Haydn's Creation, and a Miscellaneous Selection were performed. The solo parts were allotted to Miss Ellen Horne, Mr. J. Rogers, and Mr. J. Lander. The band and chorus (numbering over 120 performers) acquitted themselves in such a manner as to obtain marked signs of approval from the audience, and in many cases an encore. The leader of the band was Mr. M. Rice, of Torquay, and the conductor Mr. John Hele, Mus. Bac., Oxon., to whom the Society is mainly indebted for the success of the concerts. Over a thousand persons attended each concert.

Folkestone.—On Wednesday, the 17th ult., Musical Recitals were given in the Parish Church, on the occasion of the opening of the organ, after its completion by the addition of several new stops. The Rev. E. Husband presided at the instrument, both in the morning and evening, and rendered in excellent style a most attractive selection of classical compositions, developing the powers of the organ with much skill and judgment. In the evening an eloquent sermon was preached by the Rev. Mr. Husband, in which he warmly advocated the use of music in public worship. The collections from the two services, which amounted to upwards of £10, will be devoted towards the restoration of St. Mary Magdalene, Paddington, which was recently partially destroyed by fire.

Goldington, near Bedford.—On Thursday evening, the 4th ult., a very successful concert of sacred music was given, on the occasion of the opening of a new club and reading-room, just erected near the vicarage garden, for the use of the inhabitants of the village. The first part commenced with Handel's Occasional Overture, followed by Ode to Spring, an effective composition, by Mr. E. Bandey, a native of the village, who also acted as conductor with much ability. The solos, duets and choruses were well rendered by the vicar's friends, who kindly volunteered their valuable help.

Saddleworth, near Oldham.—On Sunday, the 30th June, the annual sermons for the benefit of the choir were preached at Saddleworth Church, by the Rev. Ralph T. Bradbury, B.A., curate of Heaton Chapel. The day was exceedingly fine, and consequently an overflowing congregation was present at each service. The psalms and anthems were sung in a very creditable manner, and great praise was bestowed on Mr. J. C. Beaumont, organist of Honley Parish Church. The choir having been doubled during the year, every effort was made on its behalf, and the very handsome sum of £58 17s. 4d. was collected.

Worcester.—A testimonial has been recently given by some of the leading families and the choir of St. Clement's, to Miss Ida Doward, a member of the choir, daughter of the organist of that church, who has so efficiently presided for several seasons at the concerts given by the members of the choir and their friends. The testimonial consisted of a very elegant tea and coffee service, &c., upon which was engraved the following inscription:—"Tea and coffee service, presented to Miss Doward by a few friends, on the occasion of her marriage, July 2, 1872." The handsome present was accompanied by a written expression of good wishes from, and bearing the names of, the donors.

CHAPPELL & CO.

Have now on View the largest Stock in London of PIANOFORTES by all the great Makers, of ALEXANDRE HARMONIUMS, greatly improved, and of ORGAN HARMONIUMS. Any of these Instruments can be Hired for Three Years, and, provided each Quarterly Instalment shall have been regularly paid in advance, the Instrument becomes the property of the hirer at the expiration of the third year.

THE ALEXANDRE NEW SIX-GUINEA ORGAN HARMONIUM.

SOLID OAK CASE, FIVE OCTAVES, AND TWO FOOT-BOARDS.

The ever-increasing musical culture of all classes of society has established so large a demand for free reed instruments that many makers have sprung up who offer articles of such inferior and nasal quality of tone that the title of Harmonium suggests to many lovers of music the nearest approach to an instrument of torture that can be met with in the present age.

In the Instruments now offered to the public the tone will be found divested of all that has hitherto been considered objectionable. This end has been obtained by using a larger and thicker tongue, and a new system of voicing, which renders the tone rich and organ-like.

Another advantage in the new system is the increased strength of the reeds, and diminished liability to go out of tune by forcing the bellows.

CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND STREET.

The present collection of Part-Songs is entirely new, being selected and adapted from the most striking and popular Choruses in the Favourite Foreign Operas. The Arrangement is purely Vocal, such Choruses only being chosen as can be sung without the aid of an Instrumental Accompaniment. The Words have been expressly written for the work, and the harmonies arranged in four parts, as likely to be most useful in small classes.

A NEW WORK FOR THE ORGAN.

HANDEL'S CHORUSES

Arranged for the Organ, with Pedal Obbligato, EXPRESSLY for the use of AMATEURS, by Dr. Rimbault. Price 3s. each. Nos. 1 to 12 are now ready:—

No. 1. Zadock the Priest.	No. 5. Sing unto God.	No. 9. For unto us a child is born.
2. From the Censer.	6. Hallelujah.	10. He trusted in God.
3. We never will bow down.	7. Lift up your heads.	11. But the waters overwhelmed them.
4. He gave them hailstones.	8. Let us break their bonds asunder.	12. The Horse and his rider.

The present publication has been undertaken with a view to supply a musical want long felt by amateurs and lovers of the organ, i.e., an edition of Handel's Celebrated Choruses arranged for the organ with pedal obbligato, that shall be effective, combining all the salient parts of the score, and yet at the same time be within the reach of those performers who have not made the instrument their entire study. We have, it is true, many arrangements; some for "Organ or Pianoforte," others by our most eminent organists. The first belong to a past age; the second, in all cases, are only fit for professional performers, and require an amount of skill for their proper execution rarely attained by amateurs. In the present edition, the notation has been carefully studied so as to simplify the reading, whilst the pedals, in all cases of difficulty, have the assistance of the left hand of the performer. Many other points have been considered so as to render the arrangement fitted to the object it has in view—to supply an edition of Handel's Choruses for the Organ expressly for the amateur.
